

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

WHEN I first undertook to publish Justinian's Institutes (that I might not entirely renounce my accustomed studies) I contemplated nothing more than a re-publication of Harris's Edition, which has now become scarce ; together with some additional notes, and a brief history of Roman Jurisprudence, by way of preface. On reading with attention Harris's Translation, I found the language so verbose, that I sat down to translate the first Book of the Institutes in my own way. It is true, my ear was better satisfied with my own performance ; but I found so many co-incidences of expression, and so little room to improve the fidelity of Harris's Version, that I determined to adopt it as the ground-work of the present publication ; and alter it no further, than to condense the expressions, where they seemed to me needlessly diffuse. By so doing, I have abridged it to the amount of about one-fifth of the whole, without sacrificing anything necessary to the sense. Some few periphrases I have retained, and some I have added, when the original seemed to require elucidation ; but, upon the whole, my aim has been to render this a faithful translation, in as few words as possible. Perhaps I may be blamed for taking this liberty with Dr. Harris's work. Had it been a piece of poetry, I should have left it untouched ; but meaning to give to the public as good a translation as I could furnish, I saw no reason why I should needlessly occupy the time of the reader, or increase the bulk of the book, by religiously retaining all its redundancies and imperfections.

I have inserted most of Harris's notes, citing him where I have done so ; but they are few and meagre. I have generally consulted the paraphrase of Theophilus, the short comments to the Corpus Juris Civilis of Gothofred, the translations and notes of Ferriere, Wood's Institutes, and Taylor's Elements of the Civil Law. I would gladly have procured, if I could, more sources of information, and I have taken much pains for that purpose, but in vain. The want of books has not been the only difficulty I have met with. All the notes and references I had collected were consumed by fire on my road from Northumberland hither, last November. An accident afterwards deprived me of my eye-sight for about a week, and rendered exertion painful to me for a considerable time. I could ill spare these defalcations from the occasional leisure which my Chemical Lectures allowed me, but I have endeavored to make the best use of the opportunities that remained.

tion be as complete as the sources of information will furnish, I have no means of investigating.

The laws of the Twelve Tables are collected from scattered passages in Cicero—Dionysius Halicarnassensis—Livy—Sextus Pompeius—Festus—Pliny—Macrobius—Agellius—Pomponius—and from the Justinian Digests. The Latin is obsolete and obscure, and stands in need of a good comment.

I have before me in Rosinus, the collection and arrangement of Franciscus Hotomannus, and Joannes Crispinus; another of Justus Lipsius; another of Ludovicus Charondas; and another of Theodorus Marcilius; as well as the edition and arrangement of the same laws by D. Gothofred at the end of his Corpus Juris Civilis.

That the reader, (in the words of Gothofred) may not be entirely ignorant, rather than that he may be accurately informed what the Laws of the Twelve Tables were, non tam ut ea Lector cognosceret, quam ne ignoraret, I shall insert Hooke's translation from Catrou and Rouille. It is, as the subject requires, paraphrastic; but after perusing the Latin text, and attending to the comments collected by Rosinus, and those of D. Gothofred, I am satisfied that the text is as accurately paraphrased as can reasonably be expected; and therefore I have inserted the Translation in the Appendix.

Lastly, I have given a catalogue of the best writers on the Roman Law, collected from the Bibliothèque of Camus, the notes and observations of Gibbon in his Roman History, of Butler in his Horæ Judicæ Subsecivæ, and my own reading.

I have said nothing about the utility of a knowledge of the Civil Law. Professional men who carefully peruse the reported cases, whether of the British or the American courts, will find from the frequency of reference to the Justinian Collections, that a competent knowledge of the general principles of the Civil Law, is expected as a matter of course among the Bar, as well as upon the Bench. Indeed the earliest authors on the Laws of England, Bracton, Fleta &c. borrow greatly from the Civil Law. I refer for instance to the first twenty or thirty pages of Bracton, who borrows not only his arrangement, but the substance and frequently the expressions from the Civil law. Nor can I see how any man can be considered as a well read lawyer, who is ignorant of a system, matured by the experience of the most polished and powerful nation of antiquity, and which still forms the body of modern Law, in almost every nation on the continent of Europe.

A BRIEF ACCOUNT

OF THE ## RISE AND PROGRESS OF THE ROMAN LAW.

THE Roman state was at first governed solely by the authority of Romulus ; but, when the people were increased, he divided them into thirty Curie, which he constantly assembled for the confirmation of his laws : and this practice of consulting the people was afterwards followed by the Roman kings, all whose laws were collected by Sextus Papirius, and called jus Papirianum, from the name of their compiler. But, after the expulsion of Tarquin and the establishment of the republic, the greatest part of those regal laws soon became obsolete ; and those, which still remained in force, related chiefly to the priesthood. It thus happened, that the Romans for many years laboured under great incertainty in respect to law in general ; for, from the commencement of the consular state to the time of establishing the xii tables, they were not governed by any regular system. But at length, the people growing uneasy at the arbitrary power of their magistrates, it was resolved, after much opposition from the patricians, that some certain rule of government should short extract of 8 or 10 lines, which may be read in the 3d book of Macrobius's Saturnalia, cap. 11.

From the commencement of the consular state.] The consular state was established in the year U. C. 245, and the laws of the xii tables were not perfected, till the year 304.

be fixed upon : and, to effect this purpose, a decemvirate was first appointed, composed solely of senators, who, partly from the laws of Greece and partly from their own laws still subsisting, framed ten tables, which, in the year of Rome 303, were submitted to the inspection of the people, and highly approved of. These however were still thought to be deficient ; and therefore in the year following, when a new decemvirate was appointed, which consisted of seven patricians and three plebeians, they added two tables to the former ten : and now the whole was regarded but as one body of law, and intitled, by way of eminence, the twelve tables. But, although these new collected laws were most deservedly in the highest esteem, yet their number was soon found insufficient to extend to all matters of controversy, their conciseness was often the occasion of obscurity, and their extraordinary severity called aloud for miti-

Were submitted to the inspection of the people.] "Tum legibus condendis opera

AST, SI PLURES ERUNT REI, TERTIIS NUNDINIS PARTIS SECALTO ; SI PLUS MINUSVE SECUERINT, SE FRAUDE ESTO : SI VOLENT ULT TIBERIM PEREGRE VENUNDANTO. Grav. op. p. 284. i. e. "If a debtor is insolvent to several creditors, let his body be cut in pieces on the third market-day. It may be cut into more or fewer pieces with impunity ; or, if his creditors consent to it, let him be sold to foreigners beyond the Tyber." Hook's Roman Hist. vol. 1. p. 316.

Such is the sense in which this law has been generally understood by both ancients and moderns. But it has lately received quite a new construction, very much to the honor of ancient Rome, from two authors, not less distinguished for their abilities in literature than their knowledge in the civil law, who from many authorities interpret the word secanto, as implying simply a division, and the word partis, as denoting the parts of the debtor's estate, and not the parts of his body ; so that they understand the expression partis secanto, not as a direction, that the body of an insolvent debtor shall be cut into pieces, but as if it meant, that his estate and services should be divided among his creditors in proportion to their respective claims. Vid. Bynkershoek's work's, vol. 1. obs. 1. and Dr. Taylor's commentary, De inope debitore dissecando.

But the reader is left to frame his own judgment of this interpretation, when he has read the apology for this law, which Aulus Gellius has given us in the person of Cæcilius ; and also the opinion of Tertullian, who was a lawyer by profession. "Nihil profecto [says Cæcilius] immitius, nihil immanius, nisi ut re ipsa apparet, eo consilio tanta immanitas pœna denunciata est, ne ad eam unquam perveniretur : ad dici namque nunc et vinciri multos videmus ; dissectum esse antiquitus neminem, equidem neque legi neque audiui." Au- gation. It therefore became a consequence, that the twelve tables continually received some explanation, addition, or alteration, by virtue of a new law, a senatorial decree or a plebiscite. And here it will be proper to observe, how they differ: a plebiscite was an ordinance of the plebeians or commonalty, which had the force of a law, without the authority of the senate; and a senatus-consultum, or senatorial decree, was an order made by the senators assembled for that purpose; but to constitute a law, properly so called, it was necessary, that it should first be proposed by some magistrate of the senate, and afterwards be confirmed by the people in general. Recourse was also had to the interpretation and decisions of the learned, which were so universally approved of, that, although they were unwritten, they became a new species of law, and were called auctoritas prudentum and jus civile. It must here be observed, that, soon after the establishment of the twelve tables, the learned of that time composed certain solemn forms, called actions of law, by which the process of all courts and several other acts, as adoption, emancipation, &c. were regulated. These forms were for above a century kept secret from the public, being in the hands only of the priests and magistrates; but about the year U. C. 448 they were collected and published by one Flavius, a scribe; and, from him, called the Flavian law; for which acceptable present the people in general showed many instances of their gratitude. But, as this collection was soon found to be defective, another was afterwards published by Sextus Ælius, who made a large addition of many new forms, which passed under the title of jus Ælianum, from the name of the compiler.

In process of time there also arose another species of law, called the Solemn forms.] "Civile jus, repositum in penetralibus pontificum, Cn. Flavius evulgavit, fastosque circa forum in albo proposuit, ut, quando lege agi posset, sciretur." Liv. lib. ix. cap. 46. pius Claudius proposuisset, et ad formam rede gisset has actiones, Cnæus Flavius scriba ejus, libertini filius, subreptum librum populo tradidit; et adeo gratum fuit id munus populo, ut Tribunus plebis fieret, Senator, et Ædilis curulis, &c." ff. 1. t. 2. De orig. juris. Liv. lib. ix. sub. fin. Val. Max. lib. ii. cap. 5. Aul. Gell. lib. vi. c. 9.

Tully, in his oration for Murena, is remarkably severe upon these forms, and treats both them and their abettors with that just contempt, which they most certainly deserve. "Primum dignitas in tam tenui scientia quæ potest esse? res enim sunt parvæ; prope in singulis literis atque interpunctionibus occupatæ, &c., &c. &c." Pro Murena, cap. 6. Epist. ad Att. lib. vi. ep. 1. De oratore, lib. cap. 41.

prætorian edicts; which, although they ordinarily expired with the annual office of the prætor, who enacted them, and extended no further than his jurisdiction, were yet of great force and authority: and many of them were so truly valuable for their justice and equity, that they have been perpetuated as laws.

These were the several principal parts of the Roman law, during the free state of the commonwealth; But, after the re-establishment of monarchy in the person of Augustus, the law received two additional parts; the imperial constitutions and the answers of the lawyers.

The constitutions soon became numerous, but were not framed into a body, till the reign of Constantine the great; when Gregorius and Hermodenes, both lawyers of eminence, collected in two codes the constitutions of the pagan emperors, from the reign of Adrian to that of Dioclesian inclusive: but these collections were not made by virtue of any public authority, and are not now extant.

Another code was afterwards published by order of the emperor Theodosius the younger, which contained the constitutions of all the christian emperors, down to his own time; and this was generally received both in the eastern and western empires.

But these three codes were still far from being perfect; for the constitutions, contained in them, were often found to be contradictory; and they wanted, but too plainly, that regulation, which they afterwards underwent through the care of Justinian; who in the year of Christ 528 ordered the compilation of a new code, which was performed and published the year following by Tribonian and others; the three former codes being suppressed by the express ordinance of the emperor. When this work was thus expeditiously finished, the emperor next extended his care to the Roman law in general, in order to render it both concise

But, notwithstanding this, the use of particular forms was very strictly adhered to, till the reign of Constantine the emperor, who, to his great honour, put an end to these subtilities. His rescript to Marcellinus is in these words. "Juris formulæ, aucupatione syllabarum insidiantes, cunctorum actibus radicitus amputentur." Cod. 2. t. 58.

Gregorius and Homogenes.] Vid Gothofredi prolegom. ad cod. Theodosian, cap. 1. et Heineccii hist. jur. civ. lib. 1. cap. 5. sec. 368, &c.

By the express ordinance.] "Hunc igitur codicem in æternum valiturum judicio tui culminis intimare perspeximus, ut scient omnes tam litigatores quam disertissimi advocati, nullatenus eis licere de cætero constitutiones ex veteribus tribus codicibus, vel ex iis, quæ novellæ constitutiones ad præsens tempus vocabantur, in cognitionalibus recitare certaminibus, sed solum, eidem nostro codici insertis, constitutionibus necesse est uti; falsi crimini subdendis his, qui contra hoc facere ausi fuerint," &c. De Justiniano codice confirmando.

and perfect. The answers and other writings of the ancient lawyers had long since acquired the full force of a law, and were now so numerous as to consist of near two thousand volumes; from which, by command of Justinian, the best and most equitable opinions were chosen; and being first corrected, where correction was necessary, were afterwards divided into fifty books, called digests or pandects: and, that they might be the more firmly established, the emperor not only prohibited the use of all other law-books, but also forbad, that any comment should be written upon these his new digested laws, or that any transcript should be made of them with abbreviations. But, during the time of compiling the digests, it was thought expedient by Justinian, for the benefit of students, that an abridgment should be made of the whole Roman law; which work was soon performed in obedience to his order, and confirmed with the digests, under the title of institutions.

The emperor afterwards, upon mature deliberation, suppressed the first edition of his code, and published a second, which he intitled Codex repetitæ prælectionis, having omitted several useless laws, and inserted others, which were judged serviceable to the state.

The Justinian-law now consisted of three parts, the institutions, the digests, and the second code. But the emperor, after the publication of the second code, continued from time to time to enact diverse new constitutions or novels, and also several edicts; all which were collected after his decease, and became a fourth part of the law.

The 13 edicts of Justinian and most of the novels were originally conceived in the Greek tongue; and so great was the decline of the Roman language at Constantinople within forty years after the death of this emperor, that his laws in general were not otherways intelligible to the major part of the people, than by the assistance of a Greek version: but, notwithstanding this disadvantage, they still subsisted intire, till the publication of the Basilica, by which the east was governed, till the dissolution of the empire.

Suppressed the first edition of his code.] "Nemini in posterum concedimus, vel ex decisionibus nostris, vel ex aliis constitutionibus, quas antea fecimus, vel ex prima Justiniani codicis editione, aliquid recitare; sed, quod in præsentis purgatio et renovato codice nostro scriptum invenitur, hoc tantummodo in omnibus rebus et iudiciis et obtineat et recitetur: cujus scripturam, ad similitudinem nostrarum institutionum et digestorum, sine ulla signorum dubietate conscribi jussimus." De emendatione cod. § 5.

Basilica.] "Versionibus juris Justiniani Græcis, et novellis eadem lingua scriptis, in foris scholisque utebantur, donec, de eo in compendium mittendo, sæculo nono cogitare inciperent imperatores Byzantini. Ex his primum Basilii Macedo anno 838 ediderat προχειρον των ρωμων, quod constabat titulis quadraginta. Deinde Leo σοφος, patri Basilio succedens, collectionem illam paternam perfecit, eamque sub titulo διαταξεων βασιλικων promulgavit, anno Christi 886. Denique subsecutus Leonem Constantinus, cognov-mento Porphyrogeneta, paternum opus sub eadem revocavit, et libros illos Βασιλικων publicavit sub initium sæculi decimi. Opus istud in sexaginta libros divisum, præter pauca, quæ nondum integra reperiri poterunt, cum glossis græce et latine editum est a Car. Annib. Fabrotto, Paris. 1647. fol. vol. vii." vid. Heineccii hist. jur. civ. l. 1. § 405.

The dissolution of the empire.] Constantinople was taken by the Turks, and a period was put to the eastern empire in the year of Christ, 1453.

The laws published by Justinian were still successful in the west; where, even in the life-time of the emperor, they were not received universally; and, after the Lombard invasion, they became so totally neglected, that both the code and the pandects were lost, till the 12th century; when it is said that the pandects were accidentally recovered at Amalphi, and the code at Ravenna. But as if fortune would make an atonement for her former severity, they have since been the study of the wisest men, and revered, as law, by the politest nations.

After the Lombard invasion.] The Lombards entered Italy under Alboinus about the year of Christ 568, in the reign of Justin the second, successor to Justinian.

At Amalphi.] “Eo tempore (Anno Dom. 1130) injustis perturbatisque comitiis, la- cerat ecclesiam falsus pontifex Petrus Leonis, Anacletus secundus nuncupatus ab sua factione; cujus dux erat Rogerus Apuliæ ac Siciliæ comes, Regis nomine a falso pontifice donatus. Iisdem temporibus repertam Ravennæ fuit constitutionum imperialium volumen, quod codex appellatus; indeque cæteros libros juris, imo et digestorum aliud exemplar in lucem aliqui rediisse putant: nec mirum, cum ea urbs longo tempore Romanis legibus vixerit, et orientali Romanorum imperio diu obtemperavit. Novellæ vero constitutiones etiam antea per Italiam vagabantur; utque mea fert opinio, multi juris civilis libri, postquam incessit homines cupido recipiendi Romani juris, agniti potius fuere, quam reperti: nam, et alii quot ante Lotharium annis, jus civile Justiniani commemoravit Ivo Carnotensis, et libros pandectarum; cum antea, si occurrerent, forsan socordia et oblivione prætermitterentur.” vid. Gravina orig. jur. civ. lib. 1. cap. 140. et Hein. hist. jur. civ. lib. 1. § 412.

CONFIRMATIONE INSTITUTIONUM.

IN NOMINE DOMINI NOSTRI JESU CHRISTI.

IMPERATOR, CÆSAR FLAVIUS JUSTINIÄNUS, ALEMÄNICUS, GOTHICUS, FRANCICUS, GERMANICUS, ANTICUS, ALANICUS, VANDALICUS, AFRICANUS, PIUS, FELIX, INCLYTUS, VICTOR AC TRIUMPHATOR, SEMPER AUGUSTUS—CUPIDÆ LEGUM JUVENTUTI S.

De usu armorum et legum.

IMPERATORIÄM majestatem non solum armis decoratam, sed etiam legibus oportet esse armatam; ut utrumque tempus et bellorum et pacis recte possit gubernari: et princeps Romanus non solum in hostilibus præliis victor existat, sed etiam per legitimos tramites calumniantium iniquitates expellat: et fiat tam juris religiosissimus, quam, victis hostibus, triumphator magnificus.

The imperial dignity should not only be supported by arms, but guarded by laws, that the people may be properly governed in time of peace as well as war; for a Roman emperor ought not only to be victorious in the hostile field, but should take every legal course to expel the iniquities of men regardless of law; and become equally renowned for a religious observance of justice, as for warlike triumphs.

De bellis et legibus Justiniani.

§ I. Quorum utramque viam cum summis vigiliis, summæque providentiæ annuente Deo, perfecimus: et bellicos quidem sudores nostros barbaricæ gentes, sub juga nostra redactæ, cognoscunt: et tam Africa, quam aliæ innumeræ provinciæ, post tanta temporum spatia, nostris victoriis a cœlesti nemine præstitis,

§ 1. By our incessant labors, and the assistance of divine providence, we have pursued this double path: the barbarian nations have acknowledged our prowess and submitted to our yoke; even Africa and many other provinces, after so long an interval are again added to the Roman empire: and yet this vast people are governed by laws, either originally enacted, or promulgated anew, under our authority.

De compositione Codicis et Pandectarum.

§ II. Et cum sacratissimas constitutiones, antea confusas, in luculentam ereximus consonantiam, tunc nostram extendimus curam ad imensa veteris prudentiæ volumina; et opus desperatum, quasi per medium profundum euntes, cœlesti favore jam adimplevimus.

§ 2. When we had arranged and brought into lucid harmony the hitherto confused mass of imperial constitutions, we then extended our care to the numerous volumes of ancient law; and have now completed through the favour of heaven (wading as it were through a vast ocean) a work that might have been despaired of.

De tempore, auctoritatibus, fine et utilitate compositionis Institutionum.

§ III. Cumque hoc, Deo propitio, peractum est, Triboniano, viro magnifico, magistro, et exquæstore sacri palatii nostri, et exconsule, nec non Theophilo et Dorotheo, viris illustribus, antecessoribus, (quorum omnium solertiam, et legum scientiam, et circa nostras jussiones fidem, jam ex multis rerum argumentis accepimus,) convocatis, mandavimus specialiter, ut ipsi nostrâ auctoritate, nostrisque suasionibus, Institutiones componerent; ut liceat vobis prima legum cunabula non ab antiquis fabulis discere, sed ab imperiali splendore appetere: et tam aures, quam animi vestri, nihil inutile, nihilque perperam positum, sed quod in ipsis rerum obtinet argumentis, accipiant: et quod priore tempore vix post quadriennium prioribus contingebat, ut tunc consti-

§ 3. So soon as by the blessing of God this was accomplished, we summoned Tribonian, our former chancellor, with Theophilus and Dorotheus, men of known learning and tried fidelity, whom we enjoined by our authority to compose the following Institutes, that the rudiments of law might be more effectually learned by the sole means of our imperial authority; and that your minds for the future should not be burdened with obsolete and unprofitable doctrines, but instructed in those laws only which are allowed of and practised; and, whereas Students formerly could scarcely sit down to the imperial constitutions under four years previous study, they may now (having been thought worthy of our princely care, to which they are indebted for the beginning and end of their legal erudition) apply themselves immediately to that course of reading.

Diviso Institutionum.

§ IV. Igitur post libros quinquaginta Digestorum, seu Pandectarum, (in quibus omne jus antiquum collectum est, quod per eundem virum excelsum Tribonianum, nec non cæteros viros illustres et facundissimos, confecimus,) in quatuor libros easdem Institutiones partiiri juessimus, ut sint tortius legitimæ scientiæ prima elementa.

§ 4. When therefore, by the assistance of Tribonian and other illustrious persons, we had compiled the fifty books, called Digests or Pandects, we directed that the Institutes should be divided into four books, which serve as elements of the science of law.

Quid in Institutionibus contineatur.

§ V. In quibus breviter expositum est, et quod antea obtinebat, et quod postea, desuetudine inumbratum, imperiali remedio illuminatum est.

§ 5. Wherein are briefly set forth the laws formerly in use, and those also, which having been overshadowed by disuse, are now brought to light by our princely care.

Ex quibus libris compositi sunt Institutiones, atque earum recognitio, et confirmatio.

§ 6. The four books of Institutes thus compiled by Tribonian, Theophilus, and Dorotheus, from all the institutions of the ancient law, but chiefly from the commentaries, institutions, and other writings of Caius, being presented to us, we read and diligently examined their contents; and, in testimony of our approbation, we have now given them our fullest constitutional authority.

§ 7. Receive therefore and study these our laws with diligence and alacrity; and show yourselves so competent therein, that when your studies shall be finished, you may entertain a cheering hope of having a part of the government committed to your charge. -

TITULUS PRIMUS.
DE JUSTITIA ET JURE.

Definitio Justitiæ.

JUSTITIA est constans et perpetua voluntas jus suum cuique tribuendi.

Justice is the constant and perpetual disposition to render every man his due.

Definitio jurisprudentiæ.

§ 1. Jurisprudence is the knowledge of things divine and human; the science of what is just and unjust.

§ 2. these definitions being premised, we shall commence our exposition of the Roman Law most conveniently, if we take first the plainest and easiest path, and then proceed to treat each particular with the utmost exactness: for, if at the beginning we overload the mind of the student with a multitude and variety of topics, we may cause him either wholly to abandon his studies, or bring him late to that knowledge through great labour and diffidence, which he might otherwise have acquired earlier with ease and confidence.

Juris præcepta.

§ III. Juris præcepta sunt: honestè vivere, alterum non lædere, suum cuique tribuere.

§ 3. The precepts of the law are, to live honestly, to hurt no one, to give to every one his due.

De jure publico et privato.

§ 4. The law is divided into public and private. Public law, regards the state of the commonwealth: but private law, of which we shall here treat, concerns the interest of individuals; and is tripartite, being collected from natural precepts, from the law of nations, and from municipal Regulations.

TITULUS SECUNDUS.

DE JURE NATURALI, GENTIUM, ET CIVILI.

De jure naturali.

Jus naturale est, quod natura omnia animalia docuit: nam jus istud non humani generis proprium est, sed omnium animalium, quæ in cælo, quæ in mari, nascuntur. Hinc descendit maris atque fœminæ conjunctio, quam nos matrimonium appellamus. Hinc liberorum procreatio, hinc educatio.

The law of nature is a law not only to man, but likewise to all other animals, whether produced on the earth, in the air, or in the waters. From hence proceeds that conjunction of male and female, which we denominate matrimony; hence the procreation and education of children. We perceive also, that other animals are considered as having some knowledge of this law.

Distinctio juris gentium et civilis, a definitione et etymologia.

§ 1. Civil law is distinguished from the law of nations, because every community governed by laws, uses partly its own and partly the laws which are common to all mankind. That law, which a people enacts for its own government is called the civil law of that people. But that law, which natural reason appoints for all mankind, is called the law of nations, because all nations make use of it. The people of Rome are governed partly by their own laws, and partly by the laws, which are common to all men. Of these we shall treat separately in their proper places.

Ab appellatione et effectibus.

§ 2. Civil laws take their denomination from that city, in which they are established: it would not therefore be erroneous to call the laws of Solon or Draco the civil laws of Athens: and thus the law, which the Roman people make use of, is styled the civil law of the Romans, or of the Quirites; for the Romans are also called Quirites from Quirinus. Whenever we mention the words civil law, without addition, we emphatically denote our own law; thus the Greeks, when they say the poet, mean Homer, and the Romans Virgil. The law of nations is common to all mankind and all nations have enacted some laws, as occasion humanis necessitatibus, gentes humanæ jura quædam sibi constituerunt: bella etenim orta sunt, et captivitates secutæ, et servitutes, quæ sunt naturali juri contrariæ: jure enim naturali omnes homines ab initio liberi nascebantur: et ex hoc jure gentium, omnes penè contractus introducti sunt, ut emptio et venditio, locatio et conductio, societas, depositum, mutuum, et alii innumerales.

and necessity required: for wars arose and the consequences were captivity and servitude; both which are contrary to the law of nature; for by that law, all men are born free. But almost all contracts were at first introduced by the law of nations; as for instance, buying, selling, letting, hireing, partnership, a deposit, a loan and others without number.

Divisio juris in scriptum et non scriptum; et subdivisio juris scripti.

§ III. Constat autem jus nostrum, quo utimur, aut scripto, aut sine scripto: ut apud Græcos. τὸν νόμον οἱ μὲν ἐγγράφοι, οἱ δὲ ἀγράφοι. Scriptum autem jus, est, lex, plebiscitum, senatus-consultum, principum placita, magistratuum edicta, responsa prudentum.

§ 3. The Roman law is divided, like the Grecian, into written and unwritten. The written, consists of the plebiscites, the decrees of the senate, ordinances of princes, the edicts of magistrates, and the answers of the sages of the law.

De lege et plebiscito.

§ IV. Lex est, quod populus Romanus, senatorio magistratu interrogante, (veluti consule,) constituebat. Plebiscitum est, quod plebs, plebeio magistratu interrogante (veluti tribuno,) constituebat. Plebs autem a populo eo differt, quo species a genere; nam appellatione populi universi cives significantur, connumeratis etiam patriciis et senatoribus. Plebis autem, appellatione, sine patriciis et senatoribus, cæteri cives significantur. Sed et plebiscita, lege Hortensia lata, non minus valere, quam leges, cœperunt

§ 4. A law is what the Roman people enact at the request of a senatorial magistrate; as a consul. A plebiscite is what the commonalty enact, when requested by a plebeian magistrate, as a tribune. The word commonalty differs from people as a species from its genus; for all the citizens, including patricians and senators, are comprehended under the term people. The term commonalty, includes all the citizens, except patricians and senators. The plebiscites, by the Hortensian law, began to have the same force as the laws themselves.

De senatus-consulto.

§ V. Senatus-consultum est, quod senatus jubet atque constituit: nam, cum auctus esset populus Romanus in eum modum, ut difficile esset, in unum eum convocari legis sanciendæ causâ, æquum visum est, senatum vices populi consuli.

§ 5. A senatorial decree is what the senate commands and appoints: for, when the people of Rome became so increased that it was difficult to assemble them for the enacting of laws, it seemed right, that the senate should be consulted instead of the people.

De constitutione.

§ VI. Sed et, quod principi placuit, legis habet vigorem: cum lege regia, quæ de ejus imperio lata est, populus ei, et in eum, omne imperium suum et potestatem concedat. Quodcumque ergo imperator per epistolam constituit, vel cognoscens decrevit, vel edicto præcepit, legem esse constat. Hæc sunt, quæ constitutiones appellantur. Planè ex his quædam sunt personales, quæ nec ad exemplum trahuntur, quoniam non hoc princeps vult: nam quod alicui ob meritum indulsit, vel si quam pœnam irrogavit, vel si cui sine exemplo subvenit, personam non transgreditur. Aliæ autem, cum generales sint, omnes proculdubio tenent.

§ 6. The ordinances of the prince hath also the force of a law; for the people by the lex regia, make a concession to him of their whole power. Therefore whatever the emperor ordains by rescript, decree, or edict, is law. Such acts are called constitutions. Of these, some are personal, and are not to be drawn into precedent; for, if the prince hath indulged any man on account of his merit, or inflicted any extraordinary punishment on a criminal, or granted some unprecedented assistance, these acts extend not beyond the individual. But other constitutions being general, undoubtedly bind all.

De jure honorario.

§ VII. Prætorum quoque edicta non modicam obtinent juris auctoritatem. Hoc etiam jus honorarium solemus appellare: quod, qui honores gerunt, (id est magistratus,) auctoritatem huic juri dererunt. Proponebant et ædiles curules edictum de quibusdam causis; quod et ipsum juris honorarii portio est.

§ 7. The edicts of the prætors are also of great authority. These edicts are called the honorary law, because the magistrates who bear honors in the state, have given them their sanction. The curule ædiles also, upon certain occasions, published their edicts, which became a part of the jus honorarium.

De responsis prudentum.

§ VIII. Responsa prudentum sunt sententiæ et opiniones eorum, quibus permissum erat de jure respondere: nam antiquitus constitutum erat, ut essent, qui jura publicè interpretarentur, quibus a Cæsare jus respondendi datum est, qui juris-consulti appellabantur: quorum omnium sententiæ et opiniones eam auctoritatem tenebant, ut judici recedere a responsis eorum non liceret, ut est constitutum.

§ 8. The answers of the lawyers are the opinions of persons authorised to give answers on matters of law. For antiently, public Interpreters of the law were licenced by the emperors and were called juris-consulti; and their opinions obtained so great an authority, that it was not in the power of a judge to recede from them.

De jure non scripto.

§ 9. The unwritten law is that, which usage has approved: for daily customs, established by the consent of those who use them, put on the character of law.

Ratio superioris divisionis.

§ 10. Nor is it an inelegant division of the law, into written and unwritten: which seems to have taken rise from the peculiar customs of the Athenians and Lacedemonians. For the Lacedemonians trusted chiefly to memory, for the preservation of their laws; but the laws of the Athenians were committed to writing.

Divisio juris in immutabile et mutabile.

§ XI. Sed naturalia quidem jura, quæ apud omnes gentes peræque observantur, divinâ quadam providentiâ constituta, semper firma atque immutabilia permanent. Ea

§ 11. The laws of nature, observed by all nations, inasmuch as they are the appointment of divine providence, remain fixed and immutable. But the laws, which every city has vero, quæ ipsa sibi quæque civitas constituit, sæpe mutari solent, vel tacito consensu populi, vel aliâ postea lege latâ.

enacted for itself, suffer frequent changes, either by tacit consent of the people, or by some subsequent law.

De objectis juris.

§ 12. All laws, relate to persons, things, or actions. First then of persons; for it would be of little purpose to study the law, while ignorant of persons, for whose sake the law was constituted.

TITULUS TERTIUS.

DE JURE PERSONARUM.

D. 1. T. 5.

Prima divisio personarum.

SUMMA itaque divisio de jure personarum hæc est: quod omnes homines aut liberi sunt, aut servi.

The first general division of persons, in respect to their rights, is into freemen and slaves.

Definitio libertatis.

§ I. Et libertas quidem (ex quâ etiam liberi vocantur) est naturalis facultas ejus, quod cuique facere libet, nisi quid vi aut jure prohibetur.

§ 1. Freedom, from which we are denominated free, is the natural power of acting as we please, unless prevented by force, or by the law.

Definitio servitutis

§ 2. Slavery, is when one man is subjected to the dominion of another, according to the law of nations, though contrary to natural right.

Servi et mancipii etymologia.

§ III. Servi autem ex eo appellati sunt, quod imperatores captivos vendere, ac per hoc servare, nec occidere solent; qui etiam mancipia dicti sunt; eo, quod ab hostibus manu capiuntur.

§ 3. Slaves are denominated servi, from the practice of our generals to sell their captives, and thus preserve, (servare) and not slay them. Slaves are also called mancipia in that they are taken from the enemy by hand (manu capti.)

Quibus modis servi constituuntur.

§ IV. Servi autem aut nascuntur, aut fiunt. Nascuntur ex ancillis nostris: fiunt aut jure gentium, id est, ex captivitate; aut jure civili, cum liber homo, major viginti annis, ad pretium participandum sese venundari passus est.

§ 4. Slaves are born such, or become so. They are born such of bond-women: they become so either by the law of nations, that is, by captivity; or by the civil law; as when a free person, above the age of twenty, suffers himself to be sold, for the sake of sharing the price given for him.

De liberorum et servorum divisione.

§ 5. In the condition of slaves there is no diversity; but among free persons, there are many; thus, some are ingenui, or Freemen; others libertini or Freed Men.

TITULUS QUARTUS.

DE INGENUIS.

C. vii. T. 14.

De ingenui definitione.

INGENUUS est is, qui statim, ut natus est, liber est; sive ex duobus ingenuis matrimonio editus est, sive ex libertinis duobus, sive ex altero libertino, et altero ingenuo.

A Freeman is one who is born free, by being born in matrimony, of parents, who are both free, or both freed; or of parents, one free, the other freed. But one born of a free mother, altho' the father be a slave, or unknown, is free: notwithstanding he was conceived discredibly. And if the mother is free at the time of the birth, although a bond-woman when she conceived, the infant will be free. Also if a woman, free at conception, becomes a slave and is delivered, her child, is nevertheless free born; for the misfortune of the mother ought not to prejudice her unborn infant. It has been a question, whether the child of a woman, who is made free during pregnancy, but becomes bond before delivery, would be free born? Martianus proves the affirmative; for he deems it sufficient to the unborn child if the mother hath been free at any time between conception and delivery; and this is true.

Sed et, si quis ex matre nascitur liberâ patre verò servo, ingenuus nihilominus nascitus: quemadmodum, qui ex matre libera et incerto patre natus est: quoniam vulgò conceptus est. Sufficit autem, liberam fuisse matrem eo tempore, quo nascitur, licet ancilla conseperit: et, è contrario, si libera conceperit, deinde ancilla facta pariat, placuit eum, qui nascitur, liberum nasci: quia non debet calamitas matris ei nocere, qui in ventre est. Ex his illud quæsitum est, si ancilla prægnans manumissa sit, deinde ancilla postea facta pepererit, liberum an servum pariat? Et Martianus probat, liberum nasci: sufficit enim ei, qui in utero est, liberam matrem vel medio tempore habuisse, ut liber nascatur; quod et verum est.

De erronea ingenui manumissione.

§ I. Cum autem ingenuus aliquis natus sit, non officit ei, in servitute fuisse, et postea manumissum esse: sæpissimè enim constitutum est, natalibus non officere manumissionem.

§ I. It will not injure a man born free to have been in servitude, and afterwards manumitted: for it hath been often settled that manumission shall not prejudice free birth.

TITULUS QUINTUS.

DE LIBERTINIS.

Definitio et origo libertinorum et manumissionis.

LIBERTINI sunt, qui ex justâ servitute manumissi sunt. Manumissio autem est de manu datio:

Freed men are those, who have been manumitted from just servitude. Manumission, manu-datio, quamdiu aliquis in servitute est, manui et potestati suppositus est: et manumissus liberatur à domini potestate: quæ res a jure gentium originem sumpsit; utpote cum jure naturali omnes liberi nascerentur; nec esset nota manumissio, cum servitus esset incognita. Sed, postquam jure gentium servitus ingenuitatem invasit, secutum est beneficium manumissionis: et, cum uno communi nomine omnes homines appellarentur, jure gentium tria hominum genera esse cœperunt: liberi; et his contrarium, servi; et tertium genus, libertini; qui desierant esse servi.

implies the giving of liberty; for whoever is in servitude, is subject to the hand and power of another; but whoever is manumitted, is free from both.

Manumission took its rise from the law of nations; for all men by the law of nature are born free; nor was manumission heard of while servitude was unknown. But when servitude, under sanction of the law of nations, invaded liberty, the benefit of manumission became then a consequence. For all men at first were denominated by one common appellation, 'till, by the law of nations, they began to be divided into three classes, viz. into liberi, or freemen, servi, or slaves, and libertini, freed-men who have ceased to be slaves.

Quibus modis manumittatur.

§ I. Multis autem modis manumissio procedit: aut enim ex sacris constitutionibus in sacrosanctis ecclesiis, aut vindictâ, aut inter amicos, aut per epistolam, aut per testamentum, aut per aliam quamlibet ultiman voluntatem. Sed et aliis multis modis libertas servo competere potest, qui tam ex verteribus, quam ex nostris constitutionibus, introducti sunt.

§ 1. Manumission is effected by various ways; either in the face of the church, according to the imperial constitutions, or by the vindicta, or in the presence of friends, or by letter, or by testament, or by any other last will. Liberty may also be conferred upon a slave by diverse other methods, some of which were introduced by former laws, and others by our own.

Ubi et quando manumitti potest.

§ II. Servi vero à dominis sempermanumitti solent, adeo ut vel in transitu manumittantur; veluti cum prætor, aut præses, aut proconsul, in balneum, vel in theatrum cunt.

§ 2. Slaves may be manumitted by their masters at any time; even on the way, as while the prætor, the governor of a province, or the proconsul is going to the bath, or to the theatre.

De libertinorum divisione sublata.

§ III. Libertinorum autem status tripartitus antea fuerat : nam, qui manumittebantur, modo majorem et justam libertatem consequerentur, et fiebant cives Romani ; modo minorem, et Latini ex lege Junia Norbana fiebant ; modo inferiorem, et fiebant ex lege Ælia Sentia Dedititii : sed quoniam Dedititiorum quidem pessima conditio, jam ex multis temporibus in desuetudinem abierat ; Latinorum vero nomen non frequentabatur ; ideoque nostra pietas, omnia augere et in meliorem statum reducere desiderans, duabus constitutionibus hoc emendavit, et in pristinum statum reduxit : quia et à primis urbis Romæ cunabulis una atque simplex libertas competebat, id est, eadem, quam, habebat manumissor ; nisi quod, scilicet, libertinus sit, qui manumittitur, licet manumissor ingenuus sit ; et Dedititios quidem per constitutionem nostram expulimus, quam promulgavimus inter nostras decisiones ; per quas, suggerente nobis Triboniano viro excelso quæstore nostro, antiqui juris altercationes placavimus. Latinos autem Junianos, et omnem, quæ circa eos fuerat, observantiam, alia constitutione, per ejusdem quæstores suggestionem, correximus, quæ inter imperiales radiat sanctiones ; et omnes liberos, (nullo, nec ætatis manumissi, nec domini manumittentis, nec in manumissionis modo, discrimine habito, sicuti antea observabatur,) civitate Romanâ de-

§ 3. Freedmen were formerly distinguished by a threefold division. Those, who were manumitted, sometimes obtained the greater liberty, and became Roman citizens ; sometimes only the lesser, and became Latins, under the law Junia Norbana ; and sometimes only the inferior liberty, and became Dedititii, by the law Ælia Sentia. But, the condition of the Dedititii differing but little from slavery, has been long disused ; neither has the name of Latins been frequent. Our piety therefore, leading us to reduce all things into a better state, we have amended our laws by two constitutions, and re-established the antient usage ; for antiently liberty was simple and undivided ; that is, it was conferred upon the slave, as his manumittor possessed it ; admitting this single difference, that the person manumitted became only a Freedman, although his manumittor was a Freeman.

We have abolished the Dedititii by a constitution published among our decisions, by which, at the instance of Tribonian, our Quæstor, we have suppressed all disputes concerning the antient law. We have also, at his suggestion, altered the condition of the Latins and corrected the laws, which related to them, by another constitution, conspicuous among the imperial sanctions ; and we have made all the freed-men in general citizens of Rome, regarding neither the age of the manumitted, nor of the manumittor, nor the antient forms of manumission. We have also introduced many new methods, by which slaves may become Roman citizens; the only liberty that can now be conferred.

TITULUS SEXTUS.

QUI ET EX QUIBUS CAUSIS, MANUMITTERE

NON POSSUNT.

D. xl. T. 9. C. vii. T. 11.

Prius caput legis Æliæ, de manumittente in fraudem creditorum.

NON tamen cuicunque volenti manumittere licet: nam is, qui in fraudem creditorum manumittit, nihil agit: quia lex Ælia Sentia impedit libertatem.

Every master may not manumit of will: for if done with intent to defraud his creditors, it is void. The law Ælia Sentia restraining this liberty.

De servo instituto cum libertate.

§ I. Licet autem domino, qui solvendo non est, in testamento servum suum cum libertate hæredem instituere, ut liber fiat, hæresque ei solus et necessarius, si modo ei nemo alius, ex eo testamento, hæres extiterit: aut quia nemo hæres scriptus sit, aut quia is, qui scriptus est, quilibet ex causâ hæres ei non extiterit. Idque eâdem lege Ælia Sentia provisum est, et rectè. Valdè enim prospiciendum erat, ut egentes homines, quibus alius hæres extiturus non esset, vel servum suum necessarium hæredem haberent, qui satisfactorius esset creditoribus: aut,

§ 1. A master, who is insolvent, may appoint a slave to be his heir with liberty, that thus the slave may obtain his freedom, and become the only and necessary heir of the testator, provided no other person is also heir by the same testament; and this may happen, either because no other person was instituted heir or because the person, so instituted, is unwilling to act. This privilege of masters was for wise reasons established by the law Ælia Sentia: for it became necessary to provide, that indigent men, to whom no man would be a voluntary heir, might have a slave for a necessary heir to satisfy creditors ; or that the creditors should sell the hereditary effects in the name of the slave, lest the deceased should suffer ignominy.

De servo instituto sine libertate.

§ II. Idemque juris est, etsi sine libertate servus hæres institutus est ; quod nostra constitutio non solum in domino, qui solvendo non est, sed generaliter constituit, nova humanitatis ratione ; ut ex ipsâ scripturâ institutionis etiam libertas ei competere videatur : cum non sit verisimile, eum, quem hæredem sibi elegit, si prætermiserit libertatis dationem, servum remanere voluisse, et neminem sibi hæredem fore.

§ 2. A slave also becomes free by being instituted an heir, although his freedom be not mentioned : for our constitution respects not only the insolvent master, but, by a new act of humanity, it extends generally ; so that the institution of an heir, implies the grant of liberty. For it is highly improbable, that a testator, although he has omitted to mention liberty in his will, could mean that the person instituted, should remain a slave, and himself be destitute of an heir.

Quid sit in fraudem creditorum manumittere.

§ III. In fraudem autem creditorum manumittere videtur, qui vel jam eo tempore, quo manumittit, solvendo non est ; vel qui, datis libertatibus, desiturus est solvendo esse. Prevaluisse tamen videtur, nisi animum quoque fraudandi manumissor habuerit, non impediri libertatem, quamvis bona ejus creditoribus non sufficiant : sæpe enim de facultatibus suis ampliùs, quam in his est, sperant homines. Itaque tunc intelligimus impediri libertatem, cum utroque modo fraudantur creditores ; id est, et consilio manumittentis, et ipsa re ; eo quod bona ejus non sunt suffectura creditoribus.

§ 3. Manumission is in fraud of creditors, if the master is insolvent, when he manumits, or become so by manumitting. It is however the prevailing opinion, that liberty, when granted, is not impeached, unless the manumittor meant to defraud, although his goods are insufficient for the payment of his creditors ; for men frequently hope better, than their circumstances really are. We therefore understand liberty to be then only impeded, when creditors are doubly defrauded : by the intention of the manumittor, and in reality.

Alterum caput legis Æliæ Sentia de minore viginti annis.

§ IV. Eadem lege Ælia Sentia, domino minori viginti annis non alitur manumittere premititur, quam si vindictâ apud consilium, justâ causâ manumissionis approbata, fuerint manumissi.

§ 4. By the same law Ælia Sentia, a master, under the age of twenty years, cannot manumit, unless for some good reason, to be approved by a council; and then by the vindicta.

Quæ sunt justæ causæ manumissionis.

§ V. Justæ autem causæ manumissionis sunt; veluti si quis patrem aut matrem, filium filiamve, aut fratres, sororesve naturales, aut pædagogum, aut nutricem, aut educatorem, aut alumnum alumnamve, aut collectaneum manumittat; aut servum, procuratoris habendi gratiâ; aut ancillam, matrimonii habendi causâ; dum tamem infra sex menses in uxorem ducatur, nisi justa causa impediât: et servus, qui manumittitur, procuratoris habendi gratiâ, non minor decem et septem annis manumittatur.

§ 5. Just reasons for manumission, are that the person to be manumitted is father or mother to the manumittor, his son or daughter, his brother or sister, his preceptor, his nurse, his foster child, or his foster brother; or to constitute him his proctor; or his bond-woman, with an intent to marry her, provided the marriage is performed within six months. But a slave who is to be constituted proctor, cannot be manumitted for that purpose, if under seventeen.

De causa semel probata.

§ VI. Semel autem causa approbata, sive vera sit, sive falsa, non retractatur.

§ 6. A reason once admitted in favor of liberty, be it true or false, cannot be recalled.

Abrogatio posterioris capitis legis Æliæ Sentia.

§ 7. When certain bounds were prescribed by the law Ælia Sentia to all minors under twenty, with regard to manumission, it was observed that any person who had completed fourteen years, might make a testament, institute an heir, and bequeath legacies, and yet that no person, under twenty, could confer liberty; which was not longer to be tolerated: for can any just cause be assigned, why rum suorum bonorum in testamento dispositio data erat, quare non similiter ei, quemadmodum alias res, ita et de servis suis in ultimâ voluntate disponere, quemadmodum voluerit, permittimus, ut et libertatem eis possit præstare? Sed cum libertas inæstimabilis res sit, et propter hoc ante vigesimum ætatis annum antiquitas libertatem servo dare prohibebat; ideo nos, mediam quodammodo viam eligentes, non aliter minori viginti annis libertatem in testamento dare servo suo concedimus, nisi septemdecimum annum impleverit, et octodecimum attigerit. Cum enim antiquitas hujusmodi ætati et pro aliis postulare concesserit, cur non etiam sui iudicii stabilitas ita eos adjuvare credatur, ut ad libertatem dandam servis suis possint pervenire?

a man, permitted to dispose of all his effects, by testament, should be debarred from enfranchising his slaves. But liberty being of inestimable value and our ancient laws prohibiting any person to make a grant of it, who is under twenty years of age, we therefore make choice of a middle way, and permit all, who have attained their eighteenth year, to confer liberty by testament. For since, by former practice, persons at eighteen years of age were permitted to plead for their clients, there is no reason, why the same stability of judgment, which qualifies them to assist others, should not enable them to be of service to themselves also, by having the liberty of enfranchising their own slaves.

TITULUS SEPTIMUS.

DE LEGE FUSIA CANINIA TOLLENDÆ.

C. vii. T. 3.

LEGE Fusia Caninia, certus modus constitutus erat in servis testamento manumittendis; quam, quasi libertates impediendam et quodammodo invidiam, tollendam esse censuimus: cum satis fuerat inhumanum, vivos quidem licentiam habere totam suam familiam libertatem donare, nisi alia causa impediatur libertatem; morientibus autem hujusmodi licentiam adimere.

By the law Fusia Caninia, masters were limited in manumitting by testament; we have thought proper to abrogate this law as odious and destructive of liberty; judging it inhuman, that persons in health should have power to manumit a whole family, if no just cause forbid, and that the dying should be prohibited from doing the same.

TITULUS OCTAVUS.

DE HIS, QUI SUI VEL ALIENI JURIS SUNT.

D. 1. T. 6.

Altera divisio personarum.

SEQUITUR de jure personarum alia divisio; nam quædam personæ sui juris sunt, quædam alieno juri subjectæ. Rursus earum, quæ alieno juri subjectæ sunt, aliæ sunt in potestate parentum, aliæ in potestate dominorum. Videamus itaque de his, quæ alieno juri subjectæ sunt; nam, si cognoverimus, quænam istæ personæ sunt, simul intelligemus, quæ sui juris sunt; ac prius inspiciamus de his, quæ in potestate dominorum sunt.

We now proceed to another division of persons; for some are independent, and some are subject to the power of others. Of those, who are subject to others, some are in the power of parents, others of their masters. Let us then inquire, who are in subjection to others; for, when we shall ascertain these, we shall at the same time discover, who are independent. And first of those, who are in the power of masters.

De jure gentium in servos.

§ I. In potestate itaque dominorum sunt servi, quæ quidem potestas juris gentium est; nam apud omnes peræque gentes animadvertere possumus, dominis in servos vitæ necisque potestatem fuisse: et, quodcunque per servum acquiritur, id domino acquiri.

§ 1. All slaves are in the power of their masters, a power derived from the law of nations: for it is observable among all nations, that masters have always had the power of life and death over their slaves, and that whatever the slave acquires, is acquired for the master.

De jure civium Romanorum in servos.

§ II. Sec hoc tempore nullis hominibus, qui sub imperio nostro sunt, licet, sine causa legibus cognitâ, in servos suos supra modum sævire. Nam, ex constitutione divi Antonini, qui sine causâ servum suum occiderit, non minus puniri jubetur, quam si alienum servum occiderit. Sed et major asperitas

§ 2. All our subjects are now forbidden to inflict any extraordinary punishment upon their slaves, without legal cause. For, by a constitution of Antoninus, whoever causelessly kills his own slave, is to be punished equally as if he had killed the slave of another. The too great severity of masters is also restrained

by another constitution of Antoninus who being consulted by certain governors of provinces concerning slaves, who take sanctuary either in temples, or at the statues of the emperors, Ordained, that if the severity of masters should appear excessive they might be compelled to make sale of their slaves upon equitable terms, so that the masters might receive the value; and properly; inasmuch as it is for the public good that no one should be permitted to misuse even his own property. The words of this rescript, sent to Ælius Martiansus, are these.—The power of masters over their slaves ought to be protected: nor ought any man to be deprived of his just right. But it is for the interest of all masters, that relief against cruelties, the denial of sustenance, or any other insufferable injury, should be granted to those who justly implore it. Therefore look into the complaints made by the family of Julius Sabinus, whose slaves took sanctuary at the sacred statue; and, if proof be made that they have been too hardly treated, or greatly injured, order them to be forthwith sold, so that they be no longer subject to their former master: and, if Julius Sabinus attempt to evade our constitution, let him know, that I shall put it in force against him with more severity.

DE NUPTIIS.

D. xxiii. T. 2. C. v. T. 4. Nov. 74.

Qui possunt nuptias contrahere.

JUSTAS autem nuptias inter se cives Romani contrahunt, qui secundum præcepta legum coeunt, masculi quidem puberes, fœminæ autem viri potentes; sive patres familiarum sint; sive filii familiarum; dum tamen, si filii familiarum sint, consensum habeant parentum, quorum in potestate sunt: nam, hoc fieri debere, et civilis et naturalis ratio suadet, in tantum, ut jussus parentis præcedere debeat. Unde quæsitum est, an furiosi filia nubere, aut furiosi filius uxorem ducere, possit? Cumque super filio variabatur, nostra processit decisio, quâ permissum est ad exemplum filæ furiosi, filium quoque furiosi posse, et sine patris interventu, matrimonium sibi copulare, escundum datum ex nostra constitutione modum.

The citizens of Rome contract valid matrimony, when they follow the precepts of the law; males, when they arrive at puberty, and females, when they attain to a marriageable age. The males, whether patres familiarum, fathers of a family, or fili familiarum; sons of a family; but, if they are sons of a family, they must first obtain the consent of the parents, under whose power they are. For reason, both natural and civil, convinces us, that the consent of parents should precede marriage; hence arose the question, whether the son of a madman could contract matrimony? But opinions being various, we decided that the son as well as the daughter of a madman, may marry without intervention of the father, provided the rules of our constitution are observed.

§ 1. Ergo non omnes nobis uxores ducere licet: nam à quarundam nuptiis abstinendum est inter eas enim personas, quæ parentum liberiorumve locum inter se obtinent, contrahi nuptiæ non possunt; veluti interpatrem et filiam, vel avum et neptem, vel matrem et filium, vel a-

viam et nepotem, et usque in infinitum: et, si tales personæ inter se coierent, nefarias atque incestas nuptias contraxisse dicuntur: et hæc adeo vera sunt, ut, quamvis per adoptionem parentum liberorumve loco sibi esse cœperint, non possunt inter se matrimonio jungi; in tantum, ut etiam, dissolutâ adoptione, idem juris maneat. Itaque eam, quæ tibi per adoptionem filia vel neptis esse cœperit, non poteris uxorem ducere, quamvis eam emancipaveris.

son; and so on (in a right line) in infinitum. And, if such persons cohabit, they are truly said to have contracted a criminal and incestuous marriage; inasmuch as those, who only hold the place of parents and children by adoption, cannot intermarry; and the same law remains even after the adoption is dissolved. You cannot therefore take to wife one who hath been either your adopted daughter or grand-daughter, although you may have emancipated her.

De fratribus et sororibus.

§ II. Inter eas quoque personas, quæ ex transverso gradu cognationis junguntur, est quædam similis observatio, sed non tanta. Sanè enim inter fratrem sororemque nuptiæ prohibitæ sunt, sive ab eodem patre eademque matre nati fuerint, sive ab altero eorum. Sed, si qua per adoptionem soror tibi esse cœperit, quamdiu quidem constat adoptio, sanè inter te et eam nuptiæ consistere non possunt; cum vero per emancipationem adoptio sit dissoluta, poteris eam uxorem ducere: sed et si tu emancipatus fueris, nihil est impedimento nuptiis. Et ideo constat, si quis generum adoptare velit, debere eum antea filiam suam emancipare: et si quis, velit nurum adoptare, debere eum antea filium suum emancipare.

§ 2. Matrimony is also prohibited between collaterals, but not so extensively. A brother and sister are forbidden to marry, whether they are the children of the same father and mother, or of either. And if a woman becomes your sister by adoption, so long as that subsists, no marriage may be contracted between you. But, when the adoption is destroyed by emancipation, you may take her to wife. Also, if you should be emancipated, there will then remain no impediment, although your sister by adoption is not so. Hence if a man would adopt his son-in-law, he should first emancipate his daughter, and whoever would adopt his daughter-in-law, should previously emancipate his son.

De fratris et sororis filia vel nepte.

§ 3. It is unlawful to marry the daughter or grand-daughter of a

brother, or a sister; although the last are in the fourth degree. For when we are prohibited to take the daughter of any person in marriage, we are also prohibited to take his grand-daughter. But it does not appear that there is any impediment against the marriage of a son with the daughter of her, whom his father hath adopted; for they bear no relation to each other, natural or civil.

De consobrinis.

§ IV. Duorum autem fratrum vel sororum liberi, vel fratris et sororis, conjungi possunt.

§ 4. The children of two brothers (Patrueles) or two sisters, (sobrini) or of a brother and sister, (Consobrini) may be joined in matrimony. (Such are cousins.)

De amita, matertera, amita magna, matertera magna.

§ V. Item amitam, licet adoptivam, ducere uxorem non licet; item nec materteram: quia parentum loco habentur. Quâ ratione verum est, magnam quoque amitam, et materteram magnam, prohiberi uxorem ducere.

§ 5. A man may not marry his aunt either on the father's or the mother's side, although she is only so by adoption; because they are regarded as representatives of parents. For the same reason no person may marry his great-aunt either on his father's or mother's side.

De affinibus, et primum de privigna et nuru.

§ VI. Affinitatis quoque veneratione, à quarundam nuptis abstinere necesse est: ut ecce privignam aut nurum ducere non licet: quia utræque filiae loco sunt: quod ita scilicet accipi debet, si fuit nurus aut privigna tua. Nam, si adhuc nurus tua est, id est, si adhuc nupta est filio tuo, aliâ ratione uxorem eam ducere non poteris: quia eadem duobus nupta esse non potest.

§ 6. We must abstain from certain marriages, through regard to affinity; as with a wife's daughter, or a son's wife, for they are both in the place of daughters: and this rule must be so understood as to include those who have been, our daughters-in-law. For marriage with a son's wife, while she continues so, is prohibited on another account, viz. because she can not be the wife of two at the same time. And the marriage of man with his wife's daughter, while her mother continues to be his wife, is also prohibited, because it is unlawful to have two wives at once.

De socru et noverca.

§ VII. Socrum quoque et novercam prohibitum est uxorem ducere: quia matris loco sunt: quod et ipsum, dissolutâ demum affinitate, procedit: alioquin, si adhuc noverca est, id est, si adhuc patri tuo nupta est, communi jure impeditur tibi nubere, quia eadem duobus nupta esse non potest. Item si adhuc socus est, id est, si adhuc filia ejus tibi nupta est, ideo impediuntur tibi nuptiæ, quia duas uxores habere non potes.

§ 7. A man is forbidden to marry his wife's mother, and his father's wife, because they both hold the place of mothers; and this, although the affinity is dissolved: besides a father's wife, while she continues to be so, may not marry, because no woman can have two husbands at the same time. Nor can a man marry his wife's mother, her daughter continuing his wife, because it is against the law to have two wives.

De comprivignis.

§ VIII. Mariti tamen filius ex aliâ uxore, et uxoris filia ex alio marito, vel contra, matrimonium rectè contrahunt: licet habeant fratrem sororemve ex matrimonio postea contracto natos.

§ 8. The son of a husband by a former wife, and the daughter of a wife by a former husband, and e contra, (the daughter of an husband by a former wife and the son of a wife by a former husband) may lawfully contract matrimony, even though a brother or sister is born of such second marriage between their respective parents.

De quasi privigna, quasi nuru, et quasi noverca.

§ IX. Si uxor tua post divortium ex alio filiam procreavit, hæc non est quidem privigna tua: sed Julianus ab hujusmodi nuptiis abstinere debere ait: nam constat, nec sponsam filii nurum esse, nec patris sponsam novercam esse: rectius ta-

§ 9. The daughter of a divorced wife by a second husband, is not daughter-in-law to the first husband. But Julian says we ought to abstain from such nuptials. It is also evident, that the espoused wife of a son, is not a daughter-in-law to men et jure facturos eos, qui ad hujusmodi nuptiis abstinuerint.

his father; and that the espoused wife of a father, is not a step-mother to his son: but it is right to abstain from such nuptials.

De servili cognatione.

§ X. Illud certum est, serviles quoque cognationes impedimento nuptiis esse, si forte pater et filia, aut frater et soror, manumissi fuerint.

§ 10. It is clear that servile cognition is an impediment to matrimony; as when a father and daughter, or a brother and sister, are manumitted.

De relinquis prohibitionibus.

§ XI. Sunt et aliæ personæ, quæ prompter diversas rationes nuptias contrahere prohibentur, quas in libris digestorum seu pandectarum, ex jure veteri collectarum, enumerari permisimus.

§ 11. There are other persons also, who, for diverse reasons, may not intermarry: we have caused these to be enumerated in the digests collected from the old law.

De pœnis injustarum nuptiarum.

§ XII. Si adversus ea, quæ diximus, aliqui coierint, nec vir, nec uxor, nec nuptiæ, nec matrimonium, nec dos intelligitur. Itaque ii, qui ex eo coitu nascuntur in potestate patris non sunt: sed tales sunt (quantum ad patriam potestatem pertinent) quales sunt ii, quos mater vulgò concepit. Nam nec hi patrem habere intelliguntur, cum et iis pater incertus sit; unde solent spurii appellari, παρὰ τὴν μητέρα et ἄπαιστοι; quasi sine patre filii. Sequitur ergo, ut, dissoluto tali coitu, nec dotis, nec donationis exactioni locus sit. Qui autem prohibitas nuptias contrahunt, et alias pœnas patiuntur quæ sacris constitutionibus continentur.

§ 12. If persons cohabit in contempt of the rules thus laid down, they shall not be deemed husband and wife, nor shall their marriage, or any portion given on account thereof, be valid; and the children, born in such cohabitation, shall not be under the power of the father. For, in respect to paternal power, they resemble the children of a common woman, who are looked upon as having no father, because it is uncertain who he is. They are therefore called in Latin spurii, and in Greek apatores; i. e. without a father: hence, after the dissolution of such a marriage, no portion, or gift, propter nuptias, can legally be claimed. They who contract such prohibited matrimony, must undergo the farther punishments set forth in our constitutions.

De legitimatione.

§ XIII. Aliquando autem evenit, ut liberi, qui statim, ut nati sunt, in potestate parentum non sunt, postea redigantur in potestatem patris: qualis est is, qui dum naturalis fuerat, postea curiæ datus, potestati patris subjicitur: nec non is, qui à muliere liberâ procreatus, cujus matrimonium minimè legibus interdictum fuerat, sed ad quam pater consuetudinem habuerat postea, ex nostrâ constitutione detalibus instrumentis compositis, in potestate patris efficitur. Quod et aliis liberis, qui ex eodem matrimonio fuerint procreati, similiter nostra constitutio præbuit.

§ 13. It sometimes, happens, that children who at their birth were not under the power of their parents, are reduced under it afterwards. Thus a natural son, who is made a Decurion, becomes subject to his father's power: and he who is born of a free-woman, with whom marriage is not prohibited, will likewise become subject to the power of his father, as soon as the marriage instruments are drawn, as our constitution directs; which allows the same benefit to those, who are born before marriage, as to those, who are born subsequent to it.

Divisio adoptionis.

§ 1. Adoption is made two ways, either by imperial rescript or authority of the magistrate. The imperial rescript impowers us to adopt persons of either sex, who are sui juris; (i. e. independent) and this species

gatio. Imperio magistratûs adoptamus eos easve, qui quæve in potestate parentum sunt; sive primum gradum liberorum obtineant, qualis est filius, filia; sive inferiorem, qualis est nepos, neptis, pronepos, proneptis.

of adoption is called arrogation. But it is by the authority of the magistrate, that we adopt persons actually under the power of their parents, whether they are in the first degree, as sons and daughters; or in an inferior degree, as grand-children or great grand-children.

Qui possunt adoptare filium-familias, vel non.

§ 2. But now, by our constitution, when the son of a family is given in adoption by his natural father to a stranger, the power of the natural father is not dissolved, neither does any thing pass to the adoptive father, nor is the adopted son in his power, although we allow such son, the right of succession to his adoptive father dying intestate. But if a natural father should give his son in adoption, not to a stranger, but to the maternal grandfather of such son; or if a natural father, who has been emancipated, should give his son, begotten after emancipation to his paternal or maternal grandfather or great-grandfather, in this case, the rights of nature and adoption concurring, the power of the adoptive father is established both by natural ties and legal adoption, so that the adopted son would be not only in the family, but under the power of his adoptive father.

De arrogatione impuberis.

§ III. Cum autem impubes per principale rescriptum arrogatur, causâ cognitâ, arrogatio fieri permittitur: et exquiritur causa arrogationis, an honesta sit, expediatque pupillo? et cum quibusdam conditionibus arrogatio fit; id est, ut caveat arrogator personæ publicæ, si intra pubertatem pupillus decesserit, restitutum se bona illis, qui, si adoptio facta non esset, ad successionem ejus venturi essent. Item non aliter emancipare eum potest arrogator, nisi, causâ cognitâ, dignus emancipatione fuerit; et tunc sua bona ei reddat. Sed et, si decedens pater eum exheredaverit, vel vivus sine justâ causâ emancipaverit, jubetur quartam partem ei bonorum suorum relinquere; videlicet, præter bona, quæ ad patrem adoptivum transtulit, et quorum commodum ei postea acquisivit.

for such arrogation is always made on certain conditions; the arrogator is obliged to give caution before a public notary, thereby binding himself, if the pupil should die within the age of puberty, to restore all the property of such pupil to those who would have succeeded him, if no adoption had been made. The arrogator also may not emancipate, unless on legal proof, that his arrogated son deserves emancipation; and even then he must restore the property belonging to such son. Also if a father, upon his death-bed, hath disinherited his arrogated son, or when in health hath emancipated him, without just cause, he is commanded to leave the fourth part of all his goods to the son, besides what the son brought to him at the time of arrogation, and acquired for him afterwards.

De ætate adoptantis et adoptati.

§ IV. Minorem natu majorem non posse adoptare placet: adoptio enim naturam imitatur; et pro monstro est, ut major sit filius, quam pater. Debet itaque is, qui sibi filium per adoptionem aut arrogationem facit, plenâ pubertate [id est, decem et octo annis] præcedere.

§ 4. A junior cannot adopt a senior; for adoption imitates nature; and it seems unnatural, that a son should be older than his father. He therefore, who would either adopt or arrogate, should be senior by full puberty, that is, by eighteen years.

De adoptione in locum nepotis vel neptis, vel deinceps.

§ V. Licet autem et in locum nepotis vel neptis, pronepotis vel proneptis, vel deinceps, adoptare, quamvis filium quis non habeat.

§ 5. It is lawful to adopt a person either as a grand-son or granddaughter, great grand-son or great grand-daughter, or in a more distant edgree, although the adoptor hath no son.

De adoptione filii alieni in locum nepotis, et contra.

§ 6. A man may adopt the son of another as his grand-son, and the grand-son of another as his son.

De adoptione in locum nepotis.

§ VII. Sed si quis nepotis loco adoptet, vel quasi ex filio, quem habet jam adoptatum, vel quasi ex illo, quem naturalem in suâ potestate habet, eo casu et filius consentire debet, ne ei invito suus hæres agnascatur. Sed, ex contrario, si avus ex filio nepotem det in adoptionem, non est necesse, filium consentire.

§ 7. If a man, having already either a natural or an adopted son, is desirous to adopt another, as his grand-son, the consent of his son, whether natural or adopted, ought in this case to be first obtained, lest a suus hæres, or proper heir, should be intruded upon him. But, on the contrary, if a grandfather is willing to give his grand-son in adoption, the consent of the son is not necessary.

Qui dari possunt in adoptionem.

§ VIII. In plurimis autem causis assimilatur is, qui adoptatus vel arrogatus est, ei, qui ex legitimo matrimonio natus est; et ided, si quis per imperatorem, vel apud prætorem, vel præsidem provinciæ, non extraneum adoptaverit, potest eundem in adoptionem alii dari.

§ 8. He who is either adopted or arrogated, bears similitude in many things to a son born in lawful matrimony; and therefore, if a person not a stranger is adopted either by rescript, or before a prætor, or the governor of a province, he may be given in adoption to another.

Si is, qui generare non potest, adoptet.

§ IX. Sed et illud utriusque adoptionis commune est, quod et ii, qui generare non possunt, quales sunt spadones, adoptare possunt: castrati autem non possunt.

§ 9. It is common to both kinds of adoption, that such as are impotent [Spadones] may, but those who are castrated, cannot adopt.

Si fœmina adoptet.

§ X. Fœminæ quoque arrogare non possunt, quia nec naturales liberos in suâ potestate habent: sed, ex indulgentiâ principis, ad solatium

§ 10. Nor can women adopt; for the law does not place even their own children, under their power; but, when death hath deprived them of their children, they may, by the indulgence of the prince, adopt others, as a comfort for their loss.

De liberis arrogatis.

§ XI. Illud proprium est adoptionis illius, quæ per sacrum oraculum fit, quod is, qui liberos in potestate habet, si se arrogandum dederit, non solum ipse potestati arrogatoris subjicitur, sed etiam liberi ejus fiunt in ejusdem potestate, tanquam nepotes. Sic etenim divus Augustus non ante Tiberium adoptavit, quam is Germanicum adoptasset; ut protinus arrogatione facta inciperet Germanicus Augusti nepos esse.

§ 11. It is peculiar to adoption by rescript, that, if a person, having children under his power, should give himself in arrogation, both he, as a son, and his children, as grandchildren, would become subject to the power of the arrogator. It was for this reason, that Augustus did not adopt Tiberius, 'till Tiberius had adopted Germanicus; so that Tiberius became the son, and Germanicus the grandson of Augustus, at the same instant, by arrogation.

De servo adoptato, vel filio nominato, a domino.

§ XII. Apud Catonem benè scriptum refert antiquitas, servos, si à domino adoptati sint, ex hoc ipso posse liberari. Unde et nos eruditi, in nostrâ constitutione, etiam eum servum, quem dominus, actis intervenientibus, filium suum nominaverit, liberum esse constituimus: licet hoc ad jus filii accipiendum non sufficiat.

§ 12. The following answer of Cato was approved of by the ancient lawyers, viz. that slaves, adopted by their masters, obtain freedom by the adoption. Thus instructed, we have ordained, that a slave whom any master nominates to be his son, in the presence of a magistrate, becomes free by such nomination, although it does not convey to him any filial right.

TITULUS DUODECIMUS.

QUIBUS MODIS JUS PATRIÆ POTESTATIS SOLVITUR.

D. 1. T. 7. Nov. 81.

Scopus et nexus. De morte.

VIDEAMUS nunc, quibus modis ii, qui alieno juri sunt subjecti, eo jure liberentur. Et quidem, quemadmodum liberentur servi à potestate dominorum, ex iis intelligere possumus, quæ de servis manumittendis superius exposuimus: hi vero, qui in potestate parentis sunt, mortuo eo, sui juris fiunt. Sed hoc distinctionem recipit: nam, mortuo patre, sanè omnimodo filii, filisve, sui juris efficiuntur: mortuo verò avo, non omnimodo nepotes, neptesve, sui juris fiunt: sed ita, si post mortem avi in potestatem patris sui recasuri non sunt. Itaque, si, moriente avo, pater eorum vivit, et in potestate patris sui est, tunc post obitum avi in potestate patris sui fiunt. Si verò is quo tempore avus moritur, aut jam mortuus est, aut per emancipationem exiit de potestate patris, tunc ii, qui in potestatem ejus cadere non possunt, sui juris fiunt.

Let us now inquire how persons in subjection to others, can be freed. How slaves obtain their liberty, may be understood from what we have already said in treating of manumission: those who are under the power of a parent, become independent at his death; yet this rule admits of a distinction. When a father dies, his sons and daughters are, without doubt, independent; but, by the death of a grand-father, his grandchildren do not become independent, unless there is an impossibility of their ever falling under the power of their father. Therefore, if their father is alive at the death of their grand-father, in whose power the father was, they then become subject to the power of their father. But, if their father is either dead or emancipated before the death of their grand-father, they then cannot fall under the power of their father, but become independent.

De deportatione.

§ I. Cum autem is, qui ob aliquod maleficium in insulam deportatur, civitatem amittit, sequitur, ut, qui eo modo ex numero civium Romanorum tollitur, perindè quasi eo mortuo, desinant liberi in potestate

§ 1. If a man, upon conviction of some crime, is deported into an island, he loses the rights of a Roman citizen; and it follows, that the children of a person thus banished cease to be under his power, as if he ejus esse. Pari ratione, et si is, qui in potestate parentis sit, in insulam deportatus fuerit, desinit esse in potestate parentis. Sed, si ex indulgentiâ principis restituti fuerint per omnia, pristinum statum recipiunt.

was naturally dead. And, by parity of reasoning, if a son is deported, he ceases to be under the power of his father. But, if by the indulgence of the prince a criminal is wholly restored, he regains his former condition.

De relegatione.

§ II.. Relegati autem patres in insulam in potestate liberos retinent, et liberi relegati in potestate parentum remanent.

§ 2. A Father, who is merely banished by relegation, retains his paternal power: and a son, who is relegated, still remains under the power of his father.

De servitute pœnæ.

§ III. Pœnæ servus effectus filios in potestate habere desinit. Servi autem pœnæ efficiuntur, qui in metallum damnantur, et qui bestiis subjiuntur.

§ 3. When a man becomes the slave of punishment, he loses his paternal jurisdiction. Slaves of punishment are those, who are condemned to the mines, or sentenced to be destroyed by wild beasts.

De dignitate.

§ IV. Filius-familias, si militaverit, vel si senator, vel consul factus fuerit, remanet in potestate patris: militia enim, vel consularis dignitas, de patris potestate filium non liberat. Sed, ex constitutione nostrâ, summa patriciatus dignitas illicò, imperialibus codicillis præstitis, filium a patriâ potestate liberat. Quis enim patiatur, patrem quidem posse, per emancipationis modum, potestatis suæ nexibus filium liberare; imperatoriam autem celsitudinem non valere eum, quem patrem sibi elegit, ab alienâ exim ere potestate?

§ 4. Although the son of a family becomes a soldier, a senator or a consul, he remains under the power of his father, from which neither the army, the senate, or consular dignity can emancipate him. But by our constitution the patrician dignity, conferred by our special diploma, shall free every son from paternal subjection. For it is absurd, that a parent may emancipate his son, and that the power of an emperor should not suffice to make any person independent, whom he hath chosen to be a father of the commonwealth.

De captivitate et postliminio.

§ V. Si ab hostibus captus fuerit parens, quamvis servus hostium fiat, tamen pendet jus liberorum, propter jus postliminii: quia hi, qui ab hostibus capti sunt, si reversi fuerint, omnia pristina jura recipiunt: idcirco reversus etiam liberos habebit in potestate: quia postliminium fingit eum, qui captus est, in civitate semper fuisse. Si verò ibi decesserit, exinde, ex quo captus est pater, filius sui juris fuisse videtur. Ipse quoque filius, neposve, si ab hostibus captus fuerit, similiter dicimus, propter jus postliminii, jus quoque potestatis parentis in suspenso esse. Dictum autem est postliminium à limine et post. Unde eum, qui ab hostibus captus est, et in fines nostros postea pervenit, postliminio reversum rectè dicimus. Nam limina sicut in domo finem quendam faciunt, sic et imperii finem esse limen veteres voluerunt. Hinc et limen dictum est, quasi finis quidam et terminus. Ab eo postliminium dictum est, quia ad idem limen revertebatur, quod amiserat. Sed et, qui captus victis hostibus recuperatur, postliminio rediisse existimatur.

§ 5. If a parent is taken prisoner, although he become a slave, he loses not his paternal power, which remains in suspense by reason of a privilege granted to all prisoners, namely, the right of return: for captives, when they obtain their liberty, are repossessed of all their former rights, in which paternal power is of course included; and, at their return, they are supposed, by a fiction of law, never to have been absent. If a prisoner dies captive, the son's independence is reckoned from the commencement of his father's captivity. Also, if a son, or grand-son, becomes a prisoner, the power of the parent is said, for the reason before assigned, to be only in suspense. The term postliminium is derived from post and limen. We therefore aptly use the expression reversus postliminio, when a person, who was a captive, returns within our own confines.

De emancipatione item de modis et effectibus ejusdem.

§ VI. Præterea, emancipatione quoque desinunt liberi in potestate parentum esse. Sed emancipatio antea quidem vel per antiquam legis observationem procedebat, quæ per imaginarias venditiones et intercedentes manumissiones celebraba-

§ 6. Children also cease to be under the power of their parents by emancipation. Emancipation was effected according to our ancient law, either by imaginary sales and intervening manumissions, or by imperial rescript; but it has been our care tur, vel ex imperiali rescripto. Nostrâ autem providentiâ etiam hoc in meliùs per constitutionem reformavit; ut, fictione pristinâ explosâ, rectâ viâ ad competentes iudices, vel magistratus, parentes intrent, et filios suos vel filias, vel nepotes vel neptes, ac deinceps, a suâ manu dimittant. Et tunc, ex edicto prætoris, in bonis ejusmodi filii vel filiæ, vel nepotis vel neptis qui quæve a parente manumissus vel manumissa fuerit, eadem jura præstantur parenti, quæ tribuuntur patrono in bonis liberti. Et præterea, si impubes sit filius, vel filia, vel cæteri, ipse parens ex manumissione tutelam ejus nansciscitur.

to reform these ceremonies by an express constitution, so that parents may now have immediate recourse to the proper judge or magistrate, and emancipate their children, grand-children, &c. of both sexes. And also, by a prætorian edict, the parent is allowed to have the same right in the goods of those, whom he emancipates, as a patron has in the goods of his freed-man. And farther, if the children emancipated are within the age of puberty, the parent, by whom they were emancipated, obtains the right of wardship or tutelage, by the emancipation.

Si alii emacipente alii retineantur in potestatu.

§ VII. Admonendi autem sumus, liberum arbitrium esse ei, qui filium, et ex eo nepotem, vel nepotem, in potestate habet, filium quidem de potestate dimittere, nepotem verò vel nepotem retinere: et, è converso, filium quidem in potestate retinere, nepotem verò vel nepotem manumittere: vel omnes sui juris efficere. Eadem et de pronepote et pronepte dicta esse intelliguntur.

§ 7. A parent having a son under his power, and by that son a grand-son or grand-daughter, may emancipate his son, and retain his grand-son or grand-daughter in subjection. He may also emancipate his grand-son or grand-daughter, and retain his son; or, he may make them all independent. And the same may be said of a great-grand-son, or a great-grand-daughter.

De adoptione.

§ VIII. Sed et, si pater filium, quem in potestate habet, avo, vel proavo naturali, secundum nostras constitutiones super his habitas, in adoptionem dederit, id est, si hoc ipsum actis intervenientibus apud competentem judicem manifestaverit, præsentem eo, qui adoptatur, et

§ 8. If a father gives his son in adoption to the natural grand-father or great-grand-father of such son, adhering to our constitutions for that purpose enacted, which enjoin the parent to declare intention before a competent judge, in the presence of the person to be adopted, and also in the presence of the adoptor, then does the right of paternal power pass wholly from the natural father to the adoptive, in whose person, as we have before observed, adoption has its fullest extent.

De nepote nato post filium emancipatum.

§ IX. Illud scire oportet, quod si nurus tua ex filio tuo conceperit, et filium tuum emancipaveris, vel in adoptionem dederis, prægnante nuru tuâ, nihilominus, quod et eâ nascitur, in potestate tuâ nascitur. Quod si post emancipationem vel adoptionem conceptus fuerit, patris sui emancipati, vel avi adoptivi, potestati subjicitur.

§ 9. It is necessary to be known, that, if a son's wife hath conceived, and you afterwards emancipate that son or give him in adoption, his wife being pregnant, the child will be born under your paternal authority. But if the conception be subsequent to the emancipation or adoption, the child becomes subject at his birth, either to his emancipated father, or his adoptive grand-father.

An parentes cogi possunt liberos suos de potestate dimittere ?

§ 10. Children, either natural or adopted, can rarely compel their parents by any method to dismiss them from subjection.

TITULUS DECIMUS-TERTIUS.

DE TUTELIS.

D. xxvi. T. 1. Nov. 72.

De personis sui juris.

TRANSEAMUS nunc ad aliam divisionem personarum. Nam ex his personis, quæ in potestate non sunt, quædam vel in tutelâ sunt, vel in curatione, quædam neutro jure

Let us now proceed to another division of persons. Of those, who are not under parental power, some are under tutelage, some under curation, and some under neither. Let tenentur. Videamus ergo de his, quæ in tutelâ vel curatione sunt: ita enim intelligemus cæteras personas, quæ neutro jure tenentur. Ac prius dispiciamus de his, qui in tutelâ sunt.

us enquire then, what persons are under tutelage and curation; for thus we shall ascertain, who are not subject to either. And first of persons under tutelage.

Tutelæ definitio.

§ I. Est autem tutela (ut Servius definivit) vis ac potestas in capite libero, ad tuendum eum, qui per ætatem se defendere nequit, jure civili datâ ac permissâ.

§ 1. Tutelage, as Servius has defined it, is an authority and power, given and permitted by the civil law, over such independent persons, as are unable, by reason of their youth, to protect themselves.

Definitio et etymologia tutoris.

§ II. Tutores autem sunt, qui eam vim ac potestatem habent; exque ipsâ re nomen acceperunt. Itaque appellantur tutores, quasi tutores atque defensores; sicut æditui dicuntur, qui ædes tuentur.

§ 2. Tutors are those, who have this authority and power; and they take their name from the nature of their office. For they are called tutors, quasi tutores defenders; as those, who have the care of the sacred buildings, are called æditui, quod ædes tueantur.

Quibus testamento tutor datur: et primum, de liberis in potestate.

§ III. Permissum est itaque parentibus liberis impuberibus, quos in potestate habent, testamento tutores dare: et hoc in filios filiasque procedit omnimodo: nepotibus vero neptibusque ita demum parentes possunt testamento tutores dare, si post mortem eorum in potestatem patris sui non sunt recasuri. Itaque, si filius tuus, mortis tuæ tempore in potestate tuâ sit, nepotes ex eo non poterunt ex testamento tuo tutores habere, quamvis in potestate tuâ fuerint: scilicet, quia, mortuo te, in potestatem patris sui recasuri sunt.

§ 3. Parents may assign tutors by testament to such of their children as are not arrived at puberty, and are under their power. And this privilege extends without exception over sons and daughters. But grand-fathers can only give tutors to their grand-children, when these cannot fall under the power of their father, after the death of their grand-father. Hence, if your son is in your power at the time of your death, your grand-children by that son cannot receive tutors by your testament, although they were actually in your power; because at your decease they will become subject to their father.

§ IV. Cum autem in compluribus aliis causis posthumi pro jam natis habeantur, et in hac causâ placuit non minus posthumis, quam jam natis tutores dari posse; si modo in eâ causâ sint, ut, si vivis parentibus nascerentur, sui hæredes et in potestate eorum fierent.

§ 4. As posthumous children are in many cases considered as already born before the death of their fathers: therefore tutors may be given (by testament) as well to a posthumous child, as to a child already born, if such posthumous child, had he been born in the life-time of his father would have been his proper heir and under his power.

§ V. Sed et, si emancipato filio tutor à patre datus fuerit testamento, confirmandus est ex sententiâ præsidis omnimodo, id est, sine inquisitione.

§ 5. But, if a father gives a tutor by testament to his emancipated son, such tutor must be confirmed by the sentence of the governor of the province without inquisition.

QUI TESTAMENTO TUTORES DARI POSSUNT.

D. xxvi. T. 2. C. v. T. 28.

Qui tutores dari possunt.

DARI autem tutor potest testamento non solum pater-familias, sed etiam filius-familias.

Not only the father of a family may be appointed tutor by testament but also the son of a family.

De servo.

§ I. Sed et servus proprius, testamento cum libertate rectè tutor dari potest; sed sciendum est, et sine libertate tutorum datum tacitè libertatem directam accepisse videri; et per hoc rectè tutorem esse: planè, si per errorem, quasi liber, tutor datus sit, aliud dicendum est.

§ 1. A man may by testament assign his own slave to be a tutor with liberty. But note, that if a slave be appointed tutor by testament without mentioning liberty, he seems tacitly to be enfranchised, and is thus legally constituted a tutor; yet, if a testator through error, imagining his slave to be free, by testament appoints him, as such, to be a tutor, the appointment will not avail. Also the absolute appointment of another man's slave to be a tutor is altogether ineffectual; but, if the appointment is upon condition that the person appointed obtains his freedom, then it is well made : but if a man by testament appoints his own slave to be a tutor, when he shall obtain his liberty, the appointment will be void.

De furioso et minore viginti-quinque annis.

§ II. Furiosus, vel minor viginti-quinque annis, tutor testamento datus, tutor tunc erit, cum compos mentis, aut major viginti-quinque annis, fuerit factus.

§ 2. If a madman or minor (under twenty-five) is by testament appointed tutor, the one shall begin to act, when he becomes of sound mind, and the other, when he has completed his twenty-fifth year.

Quibus modis tutores dantur.

§ III. Ad certum tempus, vel ex certo tempore, vel sub conditione, vel ante hæredis institutionem posse pari tutorem non dubitatur.

§ 3. It is not doubted, but that a testamentary tutor may be appointed either until a certain time, or from a certain time, or conditionally, or before the institution of an heir.

Cui dantur.

§ IV. Certæ autem rei, vel causæ, tutor dari non potest: quia personæ non causæ, vel rei, tutor datur.

§ 4. A tutor cannot be assigned to any particular thing, or upon any certain account, but can only be given to persons.

De tutore dato filiabus, vel filiis, vel liberis, vel nepotibus.

§ V. Si quis filiabus suis, vel filiis, tutores dederit, etiam posthumæ vel posthumo dedisse videtur : quia, filii vel filiæ appellatione, et posthumus et posthuma continentur. Quod si nepotes sint, an appellatione filiorum et ipsis tutores dati

§ 5. If a man nominates a tutor for his sons or daughters, the nomination extends to his posthumous issue; because, under the appellation of son or daughter, a posthumous child is comprehended. But, are grand-children denoted by the word sint? Dicendum est, ut et ipsis quoque dati videantur, si modò liberos dixerit; cæterùm, si filios, non continebuntur. Alitèr enim filii, alitèr nepotes appellantur. Planè, si posteris dederit, tam filii posthumi, quam cæteri liberi, continebuntur.

sons? we answer, that under children, grand-children are included, but not under sons: for son and grand-son, differ in signification. But, if a testator assigns a tutor to his descendants, it is evident, that not only his posthumous sons are comprehended, but all his other children.

TITULUS DECIMUS-QUINTUS.

DE LEGITIMA AGNATORUM TUTELA.

D. xxxvi. T. 4. C. v. T. 30.

Summa.

QUIBUS autem testamento tutor datus non est, his, ex lege duodecim tabularum, agnati sunt tutores, qui vocantur legitimi.

The Agnati by a law of the twelve tables, are appointed tutors to those, to whom no testamentary tutor was given; and these tutors are called legitimi, tutors by law.

Qui sunt agnati.

§ I. Sunt autem agnati cognati, per virils sexûs cognationem conjuncti, quasi à patre cognati: veluti frater ex eodem patre natus, fratris filius, neposve ex eo: item patruus et pratrii filius, neposve ex eo. At, qui per fœminini sexus personas cognatione junguntur, agnati non sunt, sed alias naturali jure cognati, Itaque amitæ tuæ filius non est tibi agnatus, sed cognatus: et invicem tu illi eodem jure conjungeris: quia. qui ex eâ nascuntur, patris, non matris, familiam sequuntur.

§ 1. Agnati are those, who are collaterally related to us by males, as a brother by the same father, or the son of a brother, or by him a grand-son; also a father's brother, or the son of such brother, or by him a grand-son. But those, who are related to us by a female are not agnate, but cognate, bearing only a natural relation to us. Thus the son of a father's sister is related to you not by agnation, but cognition; and you are also related to him by cognition; for the children of a father's sister, follow the family of their father, and not that of their mother.

Quis dicatur intestatus.

§ II. Quod autem lex duodecim tabularum ab intestato vocat ad tutelam agnatos, non hanc habet significatiōnem, si omninò non fecerit testamentum is, qui poterat tutores dare; sed si, quantum ad tutelam pertinet, intestatus decesserit: quod tunc quoque accidere intelligitur, cum is qui datus est tutor, vivo testatore decesserit.

§ 2. The law of the twelve tables, in calling the agnati to tutelage in case of intestacy, relates not solely to persons altogether intestate, who might have appointed a tutor, but also to those, who are intestate only in respect of tutelage; and this may happen, if a tutor, nominated by testament, should die in the lifetime of the testator.

Quibus modis agnatio, vel cognatio, finitur.

§ III. Sed agnationis quidem jus omnibus modis capitis diminutione perùmque perimitur: nam agnatio juris civilis nomen est; cognitionis verò jus non omnibus modis commutatur: quia civilis ratio, civilia quidem jura corrumpere potest, naturalia verò, non utique.

§ 3. The right of agnation is taken away by almost every diminution, or change of state: for agnation is but a name given by the civil law; but the right of cognition is not thus altered; for although civil policy may extinguish civil rights yet over natural rights it has no such power.

TITULUS DECIMUS-SEXTUS.

DE CAPITIS DIMINUTIONE.

D. iv. T. 5.

Definitio et divisio.

EST autem capitis diminutio prioris status mutatio; eaque tribus modis accidit: nam aut maxima est capitis diminutio, aut minor, (quam quidam mediam vocant,) aut minima.

Diminution is the change of a man's former condition; and this is threefold, the greater, the less, and the least.

De maxima capitis diminutione.

§ 1. The greater diminution is, when a man loses both the right of a citizen and his liberty; as they do, his, qui servi pœnæ efficiuntur atrocitate sententiæ; vel libertis, ut ingratissimis erga patronos condemnatis; vel his, qui se ad pretium participandum venundari passi sunt.

who by the rigour of their sentence become the slaves of punishment; and freed-men, who are condemned to slavery for ingratitude to their patrons; and all such, who suffer themselves to be sold, to share the price.

De media.

§ II. Minor, sive media capitis diminutio est, cum civitas quidem amittitur, libertas verò retinetur; quod accidit ei, cui aquâ et igni interdictum fuerit, vel ei, qui in insulam deportatus est.

§ 2. The less or mesne diminution is, when a man loses the rights of a citizen, but retains his liberty; which happens to him, who is forbidden the use of fire and water, or to him who is transported into an island.

De minima

§ III. Minima capitis diminutio est, cum civitas retinetur et libertas, sed status hominis commutatur: quod accidit his, qui, cum sui juris fuerint, cæperunt alieno juri subjecti esse; vel contra, veluti si filius-familias à patre emancipatus fuerit, est capite diminutus.

§ 3. The least diminution is, when the condition of a man is changed without forfeiture either of civil rights or liberty; as when he, who is independent, becomes subject by adoption; or when the son of a family hath been emancipated by his father.

De sero manumisso.

§ IV. Servus autem manumissus capite non minuitur; quia nulum caput habuit.

§ 4. The manumission of a slave produces no change of state in him, because he had no state, or civil capacity.

De mutatione dignitatis.

§ V. Quibus autem dignitas magis quam status permutatur, capite non minuuntur; et ideo à senatu motos capite non minui, constat.

§ 5. Those, whose dignity is rather changed than their state, do not suffer diminution; hence it is not diminution to be removed from the senatorial dignity.

Interpretatio § ult. sup, tit. prox.

§ VI. Quod autem dictum est, manere cognationis jus etiam post capitis diminutionem, hoc ita est, si minima capitis diminutio interveniat: manet enim cognatio. Nam, si maxima capitis diminutio interveniat, jus quoque cognationis perit, ut puta servitute alicujus cognati; et ne quidem, si manumissus fuerit, recipit cognationem. Sed et si in insulam quis deportatus sit, cognatio solvitur.

§ 6. We have said, that the right of cognation remains after diminution, but this relates only to the least diminution. For, by the greater diminution, as by servitude, the right of cognation is wholly destroyed, even so as not to be recovered by manumission. The right of cognation is also lost by the less or mesne diminution, as by deportation into an island.

Ad quos agnatos tutela pertinet.

§ 7. Although the right of tutelage belongs to agnati, yet it belongs not to all, but to the nearest in degree only. But, if there be many in the same degree, the tutelage belongs to all of them, however numerous. For example, several brothers are all called equally to tutelage.

TITULUS DECIMUS-SEPTIMUS.

DE LEGITIMA PATRONORUM TUTELA.

D. xxvi. T. 4. C. v. T. 30.

Ratio ob quam patronorum tutela dicitur legitima.

EX eadem lege duodecim tabularum, libertorum et libertarum tutela ad patronos liberosque eorum pertinet, quæ et ipsa legitima tutela vocatur; non quia nominatim in eâ lege de hac tutelâ caveatur; sed quia perinde accepta est per interpretationem, ac si verbis legis in-

By the same law of the twelve tables, the tutelage of freed-men and freed-women, belongs to their patrons, and to the children of such patrons; and this is tutelage by operation of law, although it exists not nominally in the law; but it is as firmly established by interpretation, as if it troducta esset. Eo enim ipso, quod hæreditates libertorum libertarumque, si intestati decessissent, jusserrat lex ad patronos liberosve eorum pertinere, crediderunt veteres, voluisse legem, etiam tutelas ad eos pertinere; cum et agnatos, quos ad hæreditatem lex vocat, eosdem et tutores esse jusserit; quia plerumque, ubi successionis est emolumentum, ibi et tutelæ onus esse debet. Ideo autem diximus plerumque, quia, si foeminâ impubes manumittatur, ipsa ad hæreditatem vocatur, cum alius sit tutor.

had been introduced by express words. For, inasmuch as the law commands, that patrons and their children shall succeed to the inheritance of their freed-men or freed-women who die intestate, the ancient lawyers were of opinion that tutelage also by implication should belong to patrons and their children. And the law, which calls agnati to the inheritance, commands them to be tutors, because the advantage of succession ought to be attended in most cases with the burden of tutelage. We have said in most cases, because, if a person, not arrived at puberty, is manumitted by a female, she is called to the inheritance, but not to the tutelage.

TITULUS DECIMUS-OCTAVUS.

DE LEGITIMA PARENTUM TUTELA.

EXEMPLO patronorum recepta est et alia tutela, quæ et ipsa legitima vocatur; nam, si quis filium aut filiam, nepotem aut neptem ex filio, et deinceps, impuberes emancipaverit, legitimus eorum tutor erit.

Another kind of tutelage termed legal, is received in imitation of parental: for, if a parent emancipate a son, a daughter, a grand-son, or a grand-daughter, who is the issue of that son, or any others descended from him, by males in a right line and not arrived at puberty, then shall such parent be their legal tutor.

TITULUS DECIMUS-NONUS.

DE FIDUCIARIA TUTELA.

Filii-familias a patre manumissi pater tutor est legitimus :
eo vero defuncto, frater tutor fiduciarius existit.

EST et alia tutela, quæ fiduciaria appellatur: nam, si parens filium vel filiam, nepotem vel neptem, vel deinceps, impuberes manu-miserit, legitimam nanciscitur eorum tutelam: quo defuncto, si liberi ejus virilis sexus existant, fiduciarii tutores filiorum suorum, vel fratris, vel sororis, vel cæterorum, efficiuntur. Atqui, patrono legiti-mo tutore mortuo, liberi quoque ejus legitimi sunt tutores: quoniam filius quidem defuncti, si non esset à vivo patre emancipatus, post obitum ejus sui juris efficeretur, nec in fratrum potestatem recideret, ideòque nec in tutelam. Libertus autem, si servus mansisset, utique eodem jure apud liberos domini post mortem ejus futurus esset.
Ita tamen hi ad tutelam vocantur, si perfectæ sint ætatis; quod nostra constitutio in omnibus tutelis et cu-rationibus observari generalitèr ræcepit.

There is another kind of tutelage called fiduciary; for, if a parent emancipate a son or a daughter, a grand-son or a grand-daughter, or any other child, not arrived at puberty, he is then their legal tutor; but, at his death, his male children of age become the fiduciary tutors of their own sons, or of a brother, a sister, or of a brother's children emancipated by the deceased.
But when a patron, who is a legal tutor, dies, his children also become legal tutors. The reason of which difference is this: a son, although never emancipated, becomes independent at the death of his father; and therefore as he falls not under power of his brothers, he cannot be under their legal tutelage. But the condition of a slave is not altered at the death of his master; for he then becomes a slave to the children of the deceased. None can be called to tutelage, unless of full age; and our constitution hath commanded this rule to be generally observed in all tutelages and curations.

TITULUS VIGESIMUS.

DE ATILIANO TUTORE, ET EO, QUI EX LEGE JULIA ET TITIA DABATUR.

D. xxvi. T. 5. C. v. T. 34 et 36.

Jus antiquum, si nullus sit tutor.

SI cui nullus omninò tutor fuerat, et dabatur, in urbe quidem à præ-tore urbano et majore parte tribu-norum plebis, tutor ex lege Atilia: in provinciis verò à præsidibus pro-vinciarum ex lege Julia et Titia.

Under the law Atilia, the prætor of the city, with a majority of the tribunes, might assign tutors to all who were not otherwise intitled. In the provinces, tutors were appointed by the respective governors under the law Julia and Titia.

§ 1. If a testamentary tutor had been appointed conditionally, or from a certain day, another tutor might have been assigned by virtue of the above named laws, while the condition depended or until the day came. Also if a tutor had been given unconditionally, yet, as long as the testamentary heir deferred taking upon him the inheritance, another tutor might have been appointed during the interval. But his office ceased, when the condition happen-ed, the day came, or the inheritance was entered upon.

§ II. Ab hostibus quoque tutore capto, ex his legibus tutor peteba-tur; qui desinebat esse tutor, si is, qui captus erat, in civitatem rever-sus fuerat: nam reversus recipiebat tutelam jure postliminii.

§ 2. By the Atilian and Julio-ti-lian laws, if a tutor was taken by the enemy, another tutor was applied for whose office ceased, of course, when the first tutor returned from captivi-ty; for he then resumed the tutel-age by his right of return.

Quando et cur desierint ex dictis legibus tutores dari.

§ 3. But these laws fell into disuse, first when the consuls began to assign tutors to pupils of either sex, on inquisition; and next, when the prætors were invested with the same authority by imperial constitutions. For, by the above mentioned laws, no security was required from the tutors for the forthcoming of the property, neither were they compelled to act.

Jus novum.

§ IV. Sed hoc jure utimur, ut Romæ quidem præfectus urbi, vel prætor secundum suam jurisdictionem, in provinciis autem præsides ex inquisitione, tutores crearent; vel magistratus jussu præsidum, si non sint magnæ pupillis facultates.

§ 4. But latterly, at Rome, the præfect of the city, or the prætor according to his jurisdiction, and, in the provinces, the respective governors may assign tutors upon inquiry; so may an inferior magistrate at the command of a governor, if the possessions of the pupil are not large.

Jus novissimum.

§ 5. But for the ease of our subjects we have ordained, that the judge of Alexandria and the magistrates of every city, together with the chief ecclesiastic, may assign tutors or curators to pupils or adults, whose fortunes do not exceed five hundred aurei, without waiting for the command of the governor, to whose province they belong. But all such magistrates must, at their peril, take from every tutor, so appointed, the security required by our constitution.

§ VI. Impuberes autem in tutelâ esse, naturali juri conveniens est; ut is, qui perfectæ ætatis non sit, alterius tutelâ regatur.

§ 6. It is agreeable to the law of nature, that persons under puberty, should be under tutelage; that all who are not of ripe age may be under the government of proper persons.

§ 7. Hence as tutors administer the affairs of their pupils, they may be compelled to account, by an action of tutelage, when their pupils arrive at puberty.

TITULUS VIGESIMUS-PRIMUS.*DE AUCTORITATE TUTORUM.

D. XLVI. T. 8. C. v. T. 59.

In quibus causis auctoritas sit necessaria.

AUCTORITAS autem tutoris in quibusdam causis necessaria pupillis est, in quibusdam non est necessaria: ut, ecce, si quid dari sibi stipulentur, non est necessaria tutoris auctoritas; quod si aliis promittant pupilli, necessaria est tutoris auctoritas: namque placuit, meliorem quidem conditionem licere iis facere etiam sinè tutoris auctoritate; deteriore verò non aliter, quam cum tutoris auctoritate. Unde in his causis, ex quibus obligationes mutue nascuntur, ut in emp-

The authority or confirmation of a tutor is in some cases necessary, and in others not. When a man stipulates to make a gift to a pupil, the authority of the tutor is not requisite; but, if a pupil enters into a contract, it is so; for the rule is, that pupils may better their condition, but not impair it, without the authority of their tutors. And therefore in all cases of mutual obligation, as in buying, selling, letting, hiring, mandates, deposits, &c. he, who contracts with a pupil, is bound by the contract; but not the pupil, unless the tutor hath authorised it.

Exceptio.

§ I. Neque tamen hæreditatem adire, neque bonorum possessionem petere, neque hæreditatem ex fideicommisso suscipere, aliter possunt, nisi tutoris auctoritate, (quamvis illis lucrosa sit,) ne ullum damnum habeant.

§ 1. But no pupil, without the authority of his tutor, can enter upon an inheritance, or take upon him the possession of goods, or an inheritance in trust; for, there is a possibility of damage, as well as gain.

Quomodo auctoritas interponi debet.

§ II. Tutor autem statim in ipso negotio præsens debet auctor fieri, si hoc pupillo prodesse existimaverit. Post tempus verò, vel per epistolam, aut per nuntium, interposita auctoritas nihil agit.

§ 2. If a tutor would authorise any act, which he esteems advantageous to his pupil, he should be personally present; for his authority hath no effect, when given by letter, by messenger, or after contract.

Quo casu interponi non potest.

§ III. Si inter tutorem pupillumque judicio agendum sit, quia ipse tutor in rem suam auctor esse non potest, non prætorius tutor (ut olim) constitui, sed curator in locum ejus datur; quo curatore interveniente, judicium peragitur; et, eo peracto, curator esse desinit.

§ 3. When a suit is to be commenced between a tutor and his pupil, inasmuch as the tutor cannot exercise his authority, as such, against himself, a curator, and not a prætorian tutor, (as was formerly the custom,) is appointed, by whose invention the suit is carried on; and, when it is determined, the curatorship ceases.

TITULUS VIGESIMUS-SECUNDUS.

QUIBUS MODIS TUTELA FINITUR.

C. v. T. 60.

De pubertate.

PUPILLI, pupillæque, cum puberes esse cœperint, à tutelâ liberantur. Pubertatem autem veteres quidem non solum ex annis, sed etiam ex habitu corporis, in masculis æstimari volebant. Nostra autem majestas, dignum esse castitate nostrorum temporum existimans, benè putavit, quod in fœminis etiam antiquis impudicum esse visum est, id est, inspectionem habitudinis corporis, hoc etiam in masculos extendere: et idco, nostrâ sanctâ constitutione promulgatâ pubertatem in masculis post decimum quartum annum completum illicò initium accipere disposuimus: antiquitatis normam in fœminis benè positam in suo ordine relinquentes, ut post duodecim annos completos, viri potentes esse credantur.

Pupils, both male and female, are freed from tutelage, when they arrive at puberty. The ancients judged of puberty in males, not by years only, but also by the habit of their bodies. But our imperial majesty, regarding the purity of the present times, hath thought it proper, that the same decency, which was ever observed towards females, should be extended also to males: and therefore, by our sacred constitution, we have enacted, that puberty in males should be reputed to commence immediately after the completion of their fourteenth year. But, in relation to females, we leave that wholesome and ancient rule of law unaltered by which they are esteemed marriageable after the twelfth year is completed.

De capitis diminutione pupilli.

§ I. Item finitur tutela, si argati sint adhuc impuberes, vel deportati: item si in servitium pupillus redigatur, vel si ab hostibus captus fuerit.

§ 1. Tutelage is determined before puberty, if the pupil is either arrogated, or suffers deportation, or is reduced to slavery, or becomes a captive.

De conditionis eventu.

§ II. Sed et, si usque ad certam conditionem datus sit tutor testamento, æque evenit, ut desinat esse tutor existente conditione.

§ 2. But, if a testamentary tutor is given upon a certain condition, when that condition is filled, the tutelage ceases.

De morte.

§ III. Simili modo finitur tutela morte pupillorum vel tutorum.

§ 3. Tutelage ends also by death of the tutor, or the pupil.

De capitis diminutione.

§ IV. Sec et capitas diminutione tutoris, per quam libertas vel civitas amittitur, omnis tutela perit. Minimâ autem capitis diminutione tutoris, veluti si se arrogandum dederit, legitima tantum perit; cæteræ non pereunt. Sed pupilli et pupillæ capitis diminutio, licet minima sit, omnes tutelas tollit.

§ 4. When a tutor under the greater diminution of state, loses his liberty and his citizenship, his tutelage is extinguished. But, if the least diminution only is suffered, as when a tutor gives himself in arrogation, then no species of tutelage is extinguished, but the legal. But every diminution of state in pupils, takes away all tutelage.

De tempore.

§ 5. These, who are testamentary tutors for a term only, are discharged at the expiration of such term.

De remotione et excusatione.

§ VI. Desinunt etiam tutores esse, qui vel removentur à tutela ob id, quod suspecti visit sunt; vel qui ex justâ causâ se excusant, et onus administrandæ tutelæ deponunt, secundum ea, quæ inferius proponemus.

§ 6. They also cease to be tutors, who are removed on suspicion; or excuse and exempt themselves from the burden of tutelage for just reasons; of which hereafter.

TITULUS VIGESIMUS-TERTIUS.

DE CURATORIBUS.

D. xxvii. T. 10. C. v. T. 70.

De adultis.

MASCULI quidem puberes, et foeminae vira potentes, usque ad vigesimum quintum annum completum curatores accipiunt; quia licet puberes sint, adhuc tamen ejus ætatis sunt, ut sua negotia tueri non possint.

Males arrived at puberty, and females marriageable, do nevertheless receive curators, until they have completed their twenty-fifth year: for, they are not yet of an age to take proper care of their own affairs.

A quibus dentur curatores.

§ I. Dantur autem curatores ab eisdem magistratibus, à quibus et tutores. Sed curator testamento non datur; datus tamen confirmatur decreto prætoris vel præsidis.

§ 1. Curators are appointed by the same magistrates, who appoint tutors. A curator cannot be absolutely given by testament, but such nomination must be confirmed, by a prætor or governor of a province.

Quibus dentur.

§ II. Item inviti adolescentes curatores non accipiunt, præterquam in litem; curator enim et ad certam causam dari potest.

§ 2. No adults can be obliged to receive curators, unless ad litem; for a curator may be appointed to any special purpose.

De furiosis et prodigis.

§ III. Furiosi quoque, et prodigi, licet majores viginti quinque annis sint, tamen in curatione sunt agnatorum, ex lege duodecim tabularum. Sed solent Romæ præfectus urbi vel prætores, et in provinciis præsides, ex inquisitione eis curatores dare.

§ 3. By law of the twelve tables, madmen and prodigals, although of full age, must be under duration of their agnati. But, if there are no agnati, or such only as are unqualified, then curators are appointed; at Rome, by the præfect of the city, or the prætor; in the provinces, by the governors, after requisite inquiry.

De mente captis, surdis, &c.

§ IV. Sed et mente captis, et surdis, et mutis, et illis, que perpetuo morbo laborant, (quia rebus suis superesse non possunt,) curatores dandi sunt.

§ 4. Persons deprived of their intellects, deaf, mute, or subject to any continual disorder, since they are unable to manage their own affairs, must be placed under curators.

De pupillis.

§ V. Interdum autem et pupilli curatores accipiunt; ut puta, si legitimus tutor non sit idoneus: quoniam habenti tutorem tutor dari non potest. Item, si testamento datus tutor, vel à prætore aut præside, idoneus non sit ad administrationem, nec tamen fraudulenter negotia administret, solet ei curator adjungi. Item loco tutorum, qui non in perpetuum, sed ad tempus à tutelâ excusantur, solent curatores dari.

§ 5. Sometimes even pupils receive curators; as when the legal tutor is unqualified: for a tutor must not be given to him, who already has a tutor. Also, if a tutor by testament, or appointed by a prætor, or the governor of a province, appears afterwards incapable of executing his trust, it is usual, although he is guilty of no fraud, to appoint a curator to be joined with him. It is also usual to assign curators in the place of tutors excused for a time only.

De constituendo actore.

§ VI. Quod si tutor vel adversâ valetudine, vel aliâ necessitate, impediatur, quo minus negotia pupilli administrare possit, et pupillus vel absit, vel infans sit, quem velit actorem, periculo ipsius tutoris, prætor, vel qui provinciæ præerit, decreto constituet.

§ 6. If a tutor, by illness or any other necessary impediment, should be disabled from the execution of his office, and his pupil should be absent, or an infant, then the prætor, or governor of the province shall decree any person, whom the tutor approves of to be the pupil's agent, on the responsibility of the tutor.

TITULUS VIGESIMUS-QUARTUS.

DE SATISDATIONE TUTORUM, VEL CURATORUM.

D. xxvii. T. 7. C. v. T. 57.

Qui satisfacere cogantur.

NE tamen pupillorum, pupillarumve, et eorum, qui quæve in curatione sunt, negia à curatoribus tutoribusve consumantur vel diminuantur, curet prætor, ut et tutores et curatores eo nomine satisfiant. Sed hoc non est perpetuum; nam tutores testamento dati, satisfacere non coguntur: quia fides eorum et diligentia ab ipso testatore approbata est. Item ex inquisitione tutores vel curatores dati, satisfactione non onerantur, quia idonei electi sunt.

It is a branch of the prætor's office to see, that tutors and curators give a sufficient security for the safety and indemnification of their pupils. But this is not always necessary; for a testamentary tutor is not compelled to give security, inasmuch as his fidelity and diligence seem sufficiently approved of by the testator. Also tutors, and curators appointed upon inquiry, are supposed to be qualified, and therefore not obliged to give security.

Quatenus satisfactio in iis, qui satisfacere non compelluntur, locum habere possit.

§ I. Sed, si ex testamento vel inquisitione duo pluresve dati fuerint, potest unus offerre satisfactionem inde indemnitate pupilli vel adolescentis, et contutori suo vel concuratori præferri, ut solus administret; vel ut contutor aut concurator satis offerens præponatur ei, ut et ipse solus administret. Itaque per se non potest petere satisfactionem à contutore vel concuratore; sed offerre debet, ut electionem det concuratori vel contutori suo, utrum velit satis accipere, an satisfacere. Quod si nemo eorum satis offerat, siquidem adscriptum fuerit à testatore, quis gerat, ille gerere debet; quod si non fuerit adscriptum, quem major pars

§ 1. If two, or more, are appointed by testament, or by a magistrate, after inquiry, to be tutors or curators, any one of them, by offering security, may be preferred to the sole administration, or cause his co-tutor, or co-curator, to give security, in order to be admitted himself to the administration. Thus a man cannot demand security from his co-tutor or co-curator; but by offering it himself, he may compel his co-tutor, or co-curator, to give or receive security. When no security is offered, the person appointed by the testator must be preferred; but, if no such person be appointed, then he must administer whom a majority of the tutors shall elect, according to the prætorian edict: if they disagree in their choice, the prætor may interpose. The same rule is to be observed, when many, either tutors or curators, are nominated on inquisition by the magistrate, viz. that a majority determine who shall administer.

Qui ex administratione tutelæ vel curationis tenentur.

§ II. Sciendum autem est, non solum tutores vel curatores pupillis vel adultis, cæterisque personis, ex administratione rerum teneri: sed etiam in eos, qui satisfactionem accipiunt, subsidiariam actionem esse, quæ ultimum eis præsidium possit afferre. Subsidiaria autem actio in eos datur, qui aut omnino à tutoribus vel curatoribus satisfdari non curaverunt, aut non idoneè passi sunt caveri: quæ quidem tam ex prudentum responsis, quam ex constitutionibus imperialibus, etiam in hæredes eorum extenditur.

§ 2. It is to be noted that tutors and curators are not alone subject to an action, on account of administering the affairs of pupils, minors, and others under their protection. For a subsidiary action, which is the last remedy to be used, will also lie against a magistrate either for entirely omitting to take, or for taking insufficient sureties: and this action according to the answers of the lawyers, as well as by the imperial constitutions, is extended even against the heir of such magistrate.

Si tutor vel curator cavere nolit.

§ 3. By the same constitutions it is expressly enacted, that tutors and curators, who refuse to give caution, may be compelled to it.

Qui dicta actione non tenentur.

§ IV. Neque autem præfectus urbi, neque prætor, neque præses provinciæ, neque quisquam alius, cui tutores dandi jus est, hac actione tenebitur: sed hi tantummodo, qui satisfactionem exigere solent.

§ 4. Neither the præfect of the city, nor the prætor, nor the governor of a province, nor any other, who has power to assign tutors, shall be subject to a subsidiary action: but those magistrates only are liable to it, who exact the security.

TITULUS VIGESIMUS-QUINTUS.

DE EXCUSATIONIBUS TUTORUM VEL CURATORUM.

D. xxvii. T. 1. C. v. T. 62.

De numero liberorum.

EXCUSANTUR autem tutores et curatores variis ex causis; plerumque tamen propter liberos, sive in potestate sint, sive emancipati. Si enim tres liberos superstites Romæ quis habeat, vel in Italiâ quatuor, vel in provinciis quinque, à tutelâ vel curâ potest excusari, exemplo cæterorum munerum; nam et tutelam et curam placuit publicum munus esse. Sed adoptivi liberi non prosunt; in adoptionem autem dati naturali parti, prosunt. Item nepotes ex filio prosunt, ut in locum patris sui succedant; ex filiâ non prosunt. Filii autem superstites tantum ad tutelæ vel curæ muneris excusationem prosunt: defuncti autem non prosunt. Sed, si in bello amissi sunt, quæsitum est, an prosint? Et constat, eos solos prodesse, qui in acie amituntur. Hi enim, qui pro republicâ ceciderunt, in perpetuum per gloriam vivere intelliguntur.

Persons, nominated as tutors, or curators, may, upon diverse accounts, excuse themselves; generally as having children, whether subject, or emancipated. For at Rome, if a man has three children living, in Italy four, or in the Provinces five, he may therefore be excused from tutelage and curation, as well as from other employments of a public nature; for both tutelage and curation are esteemed public offices. But adopted children will not avail the adoptor; they will nevertheless excuse their natural father, who gave them in adoption. Also grandchildren by a son, when they succeed in place of their father, will excuse their grand-father; but grandchildren by a daughter will not. Those children only, who are living, can excuse from tutelage and curation; the deceased are of no avail: should it be asked if a parent can count upon sons, destroyed in war? We must answer, he can avail himself of those only, who perished in battle: for those who have fallen for the republic, are esteemed to live in the immortality of their fame.

De administratione rei fiscalis.

§ I. Item divus Marcus in semestribus rescripsit, eum, qui res fisci administrat, à tutelâ et curâ quamdiù administrat, excusari posse.

§ 1. The emperor Marcus declared by rescript from his Semestrial council, that a person engaged in the Treasury Department is excused from tutelage and curation, while so employed.

De absentia reipublicæ causa.

§ II. Item, qui reipublicæ causâ absunt, à tutelâ vel curâ excusantur. Sed et, si fuerint tutores vel curatores dati, deinde reipublicæ causâ abesse cœperint, à tutelâ vel curâ excusantur, quatenus reipublicæ causâ absunt: et interea curator loco eorum datur; qui, si reversi fuerint, recipiunt onus tutelæ: nam nec anni habent vacationem, ut Papinianus libro quinto responsorum scripsit: nam hoc spatium habent ad novas tutelas vocati.

§ 2. Persons absent on public business, are exempted from tutelage and curation; and if such, who are already assigned to be either tutors or curators, should afterwards be thus absent, they are excused while they continue in public service; and curators must be appointed in their place; on their return, they must again take upon them the burden of tutelage. But they are not intitled (as Papinian asserts in the fifth book of his answers) to the privilege of a year's vacation: for that term is allowed to those only, who are called to a new tutelage.

De potestate.

§ III. Et, qui potestatem aliquam habent, se excusare possunt, ut divus Marcus rescripsit: sed susceptam tutelam deserere non possunt.

§ 3. By a rescript of the emperor Marcus, all superior magistrates may, as such, excuse themselves; but they cannot desert a tutelage once undertaken.

De lite cum pupillo vel adulto.

§ IV. Item propter litem, quam cum pupillo vel adulto tutor vel curator habet, excusari non potest: nisi fortè de omnibus bonis vel hæreditate controversia sit.

§ 4. No tutor or curator can excuse himself by alleging a law-suit with the pupil or minor; unless the suit is for all the goods, or the whole inheritance of such pupil or minor.

De tribus tutelæ et curæ non oneribus.

§ V. Item tria onera tutelæ non affectatæ, vel curæ, præstant vacationem, quandiù administrantur : ut tamen, plurium pupillorum tutela vel cura eorundem bonorum, veluti fratrum, pro unâ computetur.

§ 5. Three tutelages or curatorships unsolicited, excuse during their continuance, from the burden of a fourth. But the tutelage or curation of many pupils, as of several brothers under one patrimony, is reckoned as one only.

De paupertate.

§ VI. Sed et propter paupertatem excusationem tribui, tam divi fratres, quam per se divus Marcus rescripsit, si quis imparem se oneri injuncto possit docere.

§ 6. The divine brothers have declared by their rescript, and the emperor Marcus also, that poverty is a sufficient excuse, when it can be proved such, as to render a man incapable of the burden imposed upon him.

De adversa valetudine.

§ 7. Illness also, if it prevent a man from transacting his own business, is a sufficient excuse.

De imperitia literarum.

§ 8. By the rescript of the emperor Antoninus Pius, illiterate persons are to be excused; although in some cases they may suffice.

De inimicitia patris.

§ IX. Item si propter inimicitias aliquem testamento tutorem pater dederit, hoc ipsum præstat ei excusationem; sicut per contrarium non excusantur, qui, se tutelam administraturos, patri pupillorum promiserant.

§ 9. If a father through enmity appoints any particular person, by testament, the motive will afford a sufficient excuse. Contrawise, he who by promise hath engaged himself to a testator, can not be excused from the office of tutelage.

De ignorantia testatoris.

§ 10. The divine brothers have enacted by their rescript, that the pretence of being unknown to the father of a pupil is not of itself a sufficient excuse.

De inimicitiiis cum patre pupilli vel adulti.

§ XI. A capital enmity, against the father of a pupil or adult, unreconciled, is usually considered as an excuse from tutelage or curatorship.

De status controversia a patre pupilli illata.

§ 12. Also he, whose condition hath been controverted by the father of the pupil, is excused from the tutelage.

De ætate.

§ XIII. Item major septuaginta annis à tutelâ et curâ se potest excusare. Minores autem viginti quinque annis olim quidem excusabantur: nostrâ autem constitutione prohibentur ad tutelam vel curam adspirare; adeò ut nec excusatio opus sit. Quâ constitutione cavetur, ut nec pupillus ad legitimam tutelam vocetur, nec adultus: cum sit incivile, eos, qui alieno auxilio in rebus suis administrandis egere noscuntur, et ab aliis reguntur, aliorum tutelam vel curam subire.

§ 13. Persons above seventy years of age, may be excused from tutelage and curation. Also minors were formerly excusable; but, by our constitution, they are now prohibited from aspiring to these trusts; so that excuses are become unnecessary. By the same constitution, neither pupils, nor adults shall be called even to a legal tutelage. For it is absurd that persons, who are themselves governed, and need assistance in the administration of their own affairs, should be admitted, either as tutors or curators, to manage the affairs of others.

De militia.

§ 14. Note also, that no military persons, although willing, can be admitted as tutor or curator.

De grammaticis, rhetoribus, et medicis.

§ XV. Item Romæ grammatici, rhetores, et medici, et qui in patriâ suâ has artes exercent, et intra numerum sunt, à tutela et curâ habent vacationem.

§ 15. At Rome, grammarians, rhetoricians, and physicians, and they who exercise such professions in their own country, within the number authorised, are exempted from tutelage and curation.

De tempore et modo proponendi excusationes.

§ XVI. Qui autem et vult excusare, si plures habeat excusationes, et de quibusdam non probaverit, aliis uti, intra tempora constituta, non prohibetur. Qui autem excusare se volunt, non appellant, sed intra quinquaginta dies continuos, ex quo cognoverint se tutores vel curatores datos, se excusare debent, cujuscunque generis sint; id est, qualitercunque dati fuerint tutores, si intra centesimum lapidem sint ab eo loco, ubi tutores dati sunt. Si vero ultra centesimum lapidem habitant, dinumeratione factâ viginti millium diurnorum, et amplius triginta dierum; qui tamen, ut Scævola dicebat, sic debent computari, ne minus sint, quam quinquaginta dies.

§ 16. He who can allege many excuses, and hath failed in his proof of some, is not prohibited from assigning others within the time prescribed. But tutors and curators of whatever kind, whether legal, testamentary, or dative, (if desirous to excuse themselves) ought not to prefer an appeal from their appointment; but they should exhibit their excuses before the proper magistrate, within fifty days after they are certified of their nomination, if they are within an hundred miles from the place of nomination. But, if they are distant more than an hundred miles, they are allowed a day for every twenty miles, and thirty days besides; which, taken together, ought never, according to Scævola, to make a less number of days than fifty.

De excusatione pro parte patrimonii.

§ 17. When a tutor is appointed, he is considered as having the care of the whole patrimony of his pupil.

De tutelæ gestione.

§ 18. A tutor of a minor, cannot be compelled to become his curator: and, by the rescript of the emperors Severus and Antoninus, although the father of a family should, by testacuratorem dare, tamen, invitum eum curam suscipere non cogendum, divi Severus et Antoninus rescripserunt.

ment, appoint any person to be first the tutor of his children, and afterwards their curator, the person so appointed if unwilling, is not compellable to serve.

De marito.

§ XIX. Idem rescripserunt, maritum uxori suæ curatorem datum excusare se posse, licet se immisceat.

§ 19. The same emperors have enacted, that a husband may excuse himself from being curator to his wife, even after he hath begun to act.

De falsis allegationibus.

§ 20. If any man by false allegations, hath merited to be removed from tutelage, he is not therefore freed from the burden of this office.

TITULUS VIGESIMUS-SEXTUS.

DE SUSPECTIS TUTORIBUS VEL CURATORIBUS.

D. xxvi. T. 10. C. v. T. 43.

Unde suspecti crimen descendat.

SCIENDUM est, suspecti crimen ex lege duodecim tabularum descendere.

The accusation of a suspected tutor, or curator, is derived from the law of the twelve tables.

Qui de hoc crimine cognoscunt.

§ I. Datum autem est jus removendi tutores suspectos Romæ prætori, et in provinciis præsidibus eorum, et legato proconsulis.

§ 1. At Rome the power of removing suspected tutors belongs to the prætors; in the provinces to the governors, or to the legate of a proconsul.

Qui suspecti fieri possunt.

§ II. Ostendimus, qui possunt de suspecto cognoscere; nunc videamus, qui suspecti fieri possint: et possunt quidem omnes tutores fieri suspecti, sive sint testamentarii, sive non sint, sed alterius generis tutores. Quare etsi legitimus fuerit tutor, accusari poterit. Quid si patronus? Adhuc idem erit dicendum: dummodo meminerimus, famæ patroni parcendum esse, licet ut suspectus remotus fuerit.

§ 2. We have shewn what magistrates may take cognisance of suspected persons: let us now inquire, what persons may become suspected. And all tutors may become so, whether testamentary, or other. For even a legal tutor may be accused; so may a patron: but we must remember, that, as such, his reputation must be spared, although he be removed from his trust, as a suspected person.

Qui possunt suspectos postulare.

§ III. Consequens est, ut videamus, qui possint suspectos postulare. Et sciendum est, quasi publicam esse hanc accusationem; hoc est, omnibus patere. Quinimo mulieres admittuntur ex rescripto divorum Severi et Antonini; sed hæ solæ, quæ, pietatis necessitudine ductæ, ad hoc procedunt: ut puta mater, nutrix quoque et avia: potest et soror. Sed et, si qua alia mulier fuerit, quam prætor propensâ pietate intellexerit, sexûs verecundiam non egredientem, sed pietate productam, non sustinere injuriam pupillorum, admittet eam ad accusationem.

§ 3. Let us then inquire, by whom suspected persons may be accused. Now an accusation of this sort is of a public nature, and open to all. For, by a rescript of the emperors Severus and Antoninus, even women are admitted to be accusers; yet such only, as are induced by their duty, or by their relation to the minor; thus a mother, a nurse, or a grand-mother, or a sister, may become accusers. But the prætor can at discretion admit any women, who acting with becoming modesty, but impatient of wrongs offered to pupils, appears to have no other motive, than to relieve the injured.

An pubes vel impubes.

§ IV. Impuberes non possunt tutores suos suspectos postulare: puberes autem curatores suos ex consilio necessariorum suspectos possunt arguere: et ita Divi Severus et Antoninus rescripserunt.

§ 4. No pupil can bring an accusation of suspicion against his tutor; but adults, by the rescript of Severus and Antoninus, are permitted, when they act by advice of persons related to them, to accuse their curators. (Prochein Ami.)

Qui dicatur suspectus.

§ V. Suspectus autem est, qui non ex fide tutelam gerit, licet solvendo sit, ut Julianus quoque scripsit. Sed, et antequam incipiat tutelam gerere tutor, posse eum quasi suspectum removeri, idem Julianus scripsit: et secundum eum constitutum est.

§ 5. Any tutor however responsible who does not faithfully execute his trust, may, according to Julian, be pronounced suspected. And it is also his opinion adhered to in our constitutions, that a tutor may be removed from his office, as suspected, even before he has begun to execute it.

De effectu remotionis.

§ VI. Suspectus autem remotus, siquidem ob dolum, famosus est: si ob culpam, non aequè.

§ 6. A suspected person removed, if on account of fraud, is infamous, if for neglect only, not equally so.

De effectu accusationis.

§ 7. If any tutor is accused upon suspicion, his administration, according to Papinian, is suspended, while the accusation is pending.

Quibus modis cognitio finitur.

§ 8. If a suspected tutor or curator should die, pending the accusation, the cognisance of it is extinguished.

Si tutor copiam sui non faciat.

§ 9. If a tutor fails to appear, to avoid a decree of maintenance for his pupil, it is provided by the constitution of Severus and Antoninus, that the pupil shall be put into the possession of his tutor's effects; and that, a curator being appointed, those things, which are perishable, may be sold: and a tutor, not affording maintenance to his pupil, may be removed, as suspected.

§ X. Sed, si quis præsens negat propter inopiam alimenta posse decerni, si hoc per mendacium dicat, remittendum eum esse ad præfectum urbi puniendum placuit, sicut ille remittitur, qui datâ pecuniâ, ministerium tutelæ acquisierit, vel redemerit.

§ 10. But if the tutor appearing, falsely avers, that the effects of his pupil are insufficient for an allowance, he shall be remitted to be the præfect of the city, and punished in the same manner, as one who hath acquired a tutelage by bribery.

§ XI. Libertus quoque, si fraudulenter tutelam filiorum vel nepotum patroni gessisse probetur, ad præfectum urbi remittitur puniendus.

§ 11. Also a freed-man, who is proved to have fraudulently administered the tutelage of the son, or grand-son of his patron, must be remitted to the præfect to be punished.

§ 12. Lastly, they who unfaithfully administer their trust, must be removed from it, although they tender sufficient security. For giving security alters not the malevolent purpose of the tutor, but procures him a longer opportunity of defrauding the estate. We also deem every man suspected, whose immoralities give cause for it : but a tutor or curator who is faithful and diligent, cannot be removed, as a suspected person, merely on account of poverty.

INSTITUTIONUM

LIBER SECUNDUS.

---

TITULUS PRIMUS.

DE RERUM DIVISIONE, ET ACQUIRENDO EARUM DOMINIO.

D. 1. T. 8. C. xli. T. 1.

Continuatio et duplex rerum divisio.

SUPERIORE libro de jure personarum exposuimus; modò videamus de rebus; quæ vel in nostro patrimonio, vel extrà patrimonium nostrum, habentur. Quædam enim naturali jure communia sunt omnium, quædam publica, quædam universitatis, quædam nullius, pleaque singulorum, quæ ex variis causis cuique acquiruntur, sicut ex subjectis apparebit.

WE have treated of persons in the foregoing book; let us now inquire concerning things, which may be divided into such as are, and such as are not within our patrimony, for some things are in common by the law of nature; some are public; some universal; and some there are, to which no man can have a right. But most things are the property of individuals, by whom they are variously acquired, as will appear hereafter.

De aere, aqua profuente, mari, littore, &c.

§ I. Et quidem naturali jure communia sunt omnium hæc, aer, aqua profuens, mare, et per hoc littora maris: nemo igitur ad littus maris accedere prohibetur; dum tamen à villis et monumentis et ædificiis absteineat: quia non sunt juris gentium, sicut est mare.

§ 1. Things common to mankind by the law of nature, are the air, running water, the sea, and consequently the shores of the sea; no man therefore is prohibited from approaching any part of the seashore, whilst he abstains from damaging farms, monuments, edifices, &c. which are not in common as the sea is.

De fluminibus et portubus.

§ II. Flumina autem omnia, et portus, publica sunt: ideòque jus piscandi omnibus commune est in portu fluminibusque.

§ 2. Rivers and ports are public; hence the right of fishing in a port, or in rivers are in common.

Definitio litteris.

§ III. Est autem littus maris, quatenus hybernus fluctus maximus excurrit.

§ 3. All that tract of land, over which the greatest winter flood extends itself, is the sea-shore.

De usu et proprietate riparum.

§ IV. Riparum quoque usus publicus est jure gentium, sicut ipsius fluminis; itaque naves ad eas appellere, funes arboribus ibi natis religare, onus aliquod in his reponere, cuilibet liberum est, sicut per ipsum flumen navigare: sed proprietates earum illorum est, quorum prædiis hærent: quæ de causâ arbores quoque in eisdem natæ eorundem sunt.

§ 4. By the law of nations the use of the banks is as public as the rivers; therefore all persons are at equal liberty to land their vessels, unload them, and to fasten ropes to trees upon the banks, as to navigate upon the river itself; still, the banks of a river are the property of those who possess the land adjoining; and therefore the trees which grow upon them, are also the property of the same persons.

De usu et proprietate littorum.

§ V. Littorum quoque usus publicus est, et juris gentium, sicut et ipsius maris: et ob id cuilibet liberum est casam ibi ponere, in quam se recipiat, sicut retia siccare, et ex mari deducere; proprietates autem eorum potest intelligi nullius esse: sed ejusdem juris esse, cujus et mare, et, quæ subjacet mari, terra vel arena.

§ 5. The use of the sea-shore, as well as of the sea, is also public by the law of nations; and therefore any person may erect a cottage upon it, to which he may resort to dry his nets, and hawl them from the water; for the shores are not understood to be property in any man, but are compared to the sea itself, and to the sand or ground which is under the sea.

De rebus universitatis.

§ VI. Universitatis sunt, non singulorum, quæ in civitatibus sunt, § 6. Theatres, ground appropriated for a race, or public exercise, theatra, stadia, et his similia, et si qua alia sunt communia civitatum.

and things of this nature, which belong to a whole city, are public, and not private property.

De rebus nullius.

§ VII. Nullius autem sunt res sacræ, et religiosæ, et sanctæ: quod enim divini juris est, id nullius in bonis est.

§ 7. Things sacred, religious and holy, belong to no individual: for that which is of divine right, is not private property.

De rebus sacris.

§ VIII. Sacræ res sunt, quæ ritè per pontifices Deo consecratæ sunt; veluti ædes sacræ, et donaria, quæ ritè ad ministerium Dei dedicata sunt; quæ etiam per nostram constitutionem alienari et obligari prohibuimus, exceptâ causâ redemptionis captivorum. Si quis autem auctoritate suâ quasi sacrum sibi constituerit, sacrum non est, sed profanum. Locus autem, in quo ædes sacræ sunt ædificatæ, etiam, diruto edificio, sacer adhuc manet, ut et Papinianus scripsit.

§ 8. Things, which have been duly consecrated by the pontiffs, are sacred; as churches, chapels, and moveables, properly dedicated to the service of God: which we have forbidden by our constitution to be aliened or obligated, unless for the redemption of captives. But, if a man should consecrate a building by his own authority, it would not thus be rendered sacred; but the ground upon which a sacred edifice hath once been erected, will, according to Papinian, continue to be sacred, although the edifice is destroyed.

De religiosis.

§ IX. Religiosum locum unusquisque suâ voluntate facit, dum mortuum infert in locum suum: in communem autem locum purum, invito socio, inferre non licet: in commune verò sepulchrum etiam, invitis cæteris, licet inferre. Item, si alienus ususfructus est, proprietarium placet, nisi consentiente usufructuario, locum religiosum non facere. In alienum locum, consentiente domino, licet inferre; et, licet postea ratum non habuerit, quam

§ 9. Any man may at his will render his own place religious, by making it the repository of a dead body; yet, when two are joint possessors of ground, not before used for such a purpose, the one cannot make it religious without consent of the other. But, when there is a sepulchre in common, any joint possessor may use it, although the rest dissent. And, when there is a proprietor, and an usufructuary, of the same place, the proprietor, without the consent of the usufructuary, cannot render it religious. But a dead body may be laid in a place, with consent of the owner; who if he should afterwards dissent, yet the place becomes religious.

De rebus sanctis.

§ X. Sanctæ quoque res, veluti muri et portæ civitatis, quodammodo divini juris sunt; et ideò nullius in bonis sunt. Ideò autem muros sanctos dicimus, quia pœna capitis constituta est in eos, qui aliquid in muros deliquerint. Ideò et legum eas partes, quibus pœnas constituimus adversus eos, qui contra leges fecerint, sanctiones vocamus.

§ 10. Holy things also, as the walls and gates of a city, are in some sort of divine right, and therefore the property of no man. The walls of a city are esteemed holy, inasmuch as any offence against them is punished capitally: and therefore, all those parts of the laws, by which punishments are inflicted upon transgressors, we term sanctions.

De rebus singulorum.

§ XI. Singulorum autem hominum multis modis res fiunt: quarundum enim, rerum dominium nanciscimur jure naturali, quod, sicut diximus, appellatur jus gentium; quarundum verò jure civili. Commodius est itaque à vetustiore jure incipere. Palàm est autem, vetustius esse jus naturale, quod cum ipso genere humano rerum natura prodidit. Civilia autem jura tunc esse cœperunt, cum et civitates conditi, et magistratus creari et leges scribi, cœperunt.

§ 11. There are various means, by which things become private property. Of some we obtain dominion by the law of nature, which (as we have already observed) is also called the law of nations; of others by the civil law. But it will be most convenient to begin from the more ancient law; that law, which nature established at the birth of mankind; for civil laws could then only begin to exist, when cities began to be built, magistracies to be created, and laws to be written.

De occupatione ferarum.

§ XII. Feræ igitur bestiæ, et volucres, et pisces, et omnia animalia, quæ mari, cœlo, et terrâ nascuntur, simul atque ab aliquo capta fuerint, jure gentium statim illius esse in-

§ 12. Wild beasts, birds, fish, and all animals, bred either in the sea, the air, or upon the earth, so soon as they are taken, become by the law of nations, the property of the cipiunt: quod enim ante nullius est, id naturali ratione occupanti conceditur: nec interest, feras bestias et volucres utrū in suo fundo quis capiat, an in alieno. Planè, qui alienum fundum ingreditur venandi ut aucupandi gratiā, potest à domino, si is præviderit, prohiberi, ne ingrediatur. Quicquid autem eorum ceperis, eousque tuum esse intelligitur, donec tuā custodiā coercetur; cum verò tuam evaserit custodiam, et in libertatem naturalem sese receperit, tuum esse desinit, et rursus occupantis fit. Naturalem autem libertatem recipere intelligitur, cum vel oculos tuos effugerit, vel ita sit in conspectu tuo, ut difficilis sit ejus persecutio.

captor: for natural reason gives to the first occupant, that which had no previous owner: and it is not material, whether a man take wild beasts or birds upon his own, or upon the ground of another: although whoever hath entered into the ground of another for the sake of hunting or fowling, might have been prohibited by the proprietor, if he had foreseen the intent. Whatever of this kind you take, is regarded as your property while it remains under your coercion; but when it hath escaped your custody, and recovered its natural liberty, it ceases to be yours and becomes the property of the first who seizes it. It is understood to have recovered its natural liberty, if it hath escaped your sight; or although not out of sight, yet if it cannot be pursued and retaken without great difficulty.

De vulneratione.

§ XIII. Illud quæsitum est, an si fera bestia ita vulnerata sit, ut capi possit, statim tua esse intelligatur. Et quibusdam placuit, statim esse tuam, et eousque tuam videri, donec eam persequaris: quod si desieris persequi, desimere tuam esse; et rursus fieri occupantis: alii verò putaverunt, non aliter tuam esse, quam si eam ceperis. Sed posteriorem sententiam nos confirmamus. quod multa accidere soleant, ut eam non capias.

§ 13. It hath been questioned, whether a wild beast belongs to him, by whom it hath been so wounded, that it may be taken. And, in the opinion of some, it doth so, as long as he pursues it; but, if he quits the pursuit, it ceases to be his, and again becomes the right of the first occupant. Others have thought, that property in a wild beast must attach to the actual taking it. We confirm this latter opinion; because many accidents happen, which prevent the capture.

De apibus.

§ XIV. Apium quoque fera natura est: itaque apes, quæ in arbore tuâ consederint, antequam à te alveo includantur, non magis tuæ intelliguntur esse, quam volucres, quæ in arbore tuâ nidum fecerint: ideoque, si alius eas incluserit, is earum dominus erit. Favos quoque, si quos effecerint, eximere quilibet potest. Planè integrâ re, si prævideris ingredientem fundum tuum, poteris eum jure prohibere, ne ingrediatur. Examen quoque, quod ex alveo tuo evolaverit, eousque intelligitur esse tuum, donec in conspectu tuo est, nec difficilis persecutio ejus est; alioquin, occupantis fit.

§ 14. Bees also are wild by nature: therefore, although they swarm upon your tree, they are not reputed, until they are hived by you, to be more your property, than the birds, which have nests there: so, if any other person inclose them in a hive, he becomes their proprietor. Their honeycombs also, if any, become the property of him who takes them: but clearly, if you observe any person entering into your ground, the object untouched, you may justly hinder him. A swarm, which hath flown from your hive, is still reputed to continue yours, as long as it is in sight, and may easily be pursued; but, in any other case, it will become the property of the occupant.

De pavonibus et columbis, et cæteris animalibus mansuefactis.

§ XV. Pavonum quoque et columbarum fera natura est; nec ad rem pertinet, quod ex consuetudine evolare et revolare solent; nam et apes idem faciunt, quarum constat feram esse naturam. Cervos quoque quidem ita mansuetos habent, ut in silvam ire et redire soleant, quorum et ipsorum feram esse naturam nemo negat. In iis autem animalibus, quæ ex consuetudine abire et redire solent, talis regula comprobata est; ut eousque tua esse intelligantur, donec animum revertendi habeant: nam, si revertendi animum habere desierint, etiam tua esse desinunt, et fiunt occupan-

§ 15. Peacocks and Pigeons are also naturally wild; nor is it any objection that after every flight, it is their custom to return: for bees that are naturally wild, do so too. Some have had deer so tame, that they would go to the woods, and return at regular periods; yet no one denies, but that deer are wild by nature. But, with respect to animals, which go and return customarily, the rule is, that they are considered yours, as long as they retain an inclination to return; but, if this ceases, they cease to be yours; and will again become the property of those who take them. These animals seem to have lost the inclination to return, when they disuse the custom of returning.

• De gallinis et anseribus.

§ XVI. Gallinarum autem et anserum non est fera natura: idque ex eo, possumus intelligere, quod aliæ sunt gallinæ, quas feras vocamus; item alii sunt anseres, quos feros appellamus: ideòque, si anseres tui, aut gallinæ tuæ, aliquo modo turbati turbatæve evolaverint, licet conspectum tuum effugerint, quocumque tamen loco sint, tui tuæve esse intelliguntur; et, qui lucrandi animo ea animalia detinet, furtum committere intelligitur.

§ 16. But geese, and fowls are not wild by nature; and this we may observe, because there is a kind of fowls and geese, which in contradistinction we term wild; and therefore if your geese or fowls, being disturbed and frightened, should take flight, they are still regarded as yours wherever found, although you may have lost sight of them; and whoever detains such animals, with a lucrative view, is understood to commit a theft.

De occupatione in bello.

§ XVII. Item ea, quæ ex hostibus capimus, jure gentium statim nostra fiunt; adèo quidem, ut et liberi homines in servitutem nostram deducantur; qui tamen, si evaserint nostram potestatem, et ad suos reversi fuerint, pristinum statum recipiunt.

§ 17. What we take from our enemies in war, becomes instantly our own by the law of nations; so that free-men may be brought into a state of servitude by capture; but, if they afterwards escape, and return to their own people, they obtain again their former state.

De occupatione eorum, quæ in littore inveniuntur.

§ XVIII. Item lapilli, et gemmæ, et cætera, quæ in littore maris inveniuntur, jure naturali statim inventoris fiunt.

§ 18. Precious stones, gems and other things, found upon the seashore, become instantly by the law of nations, the property of the finder.

De fœtu animalium.

§ 19. The product of those animals, which are reduced to our subjection, becomes by the same law, our own.

De alluvione.

§ XX. Præterea, quod per alluvionem agro tuo flumen adjecit, jure gentium tibi acquiritur. Est autem alluvio incrementum latens. Per alluvionem autem id videtur adjici, quod ita paulatim adjicitur, ut intelligi non possit, quantum quovis temporis momento adjiciatur.

§ 20. Moreover, that ground which a river hath added to your estate by alluvion, becomes your own by the law of nations. And that is said to be alluvion, which is added so gradually, that no one can judge how much is added at each moment of time.

De vi fluminis.

§ XXI. Quod si vis fluminis de tuo prædio partem aliquam detraxerit, et vicini prædio attulerit, palam est, eam tuam permanere: planè si longiore tempore fundo vicini tui hæserit; arboresque, quas secum traxerit, in eum fundum radices egerint; ex eo tempore videntur vicini fundo acquisitæ esse.

§ 21. But, if the impetuosity of a river should sever a part of your estate, and adjoin it to that of your neighbour, it is certain, such part would still continue yours; but, if it should remain, for a long time, joined to the estate of your neighbour, and the trees, which accompanied it, take root in his ground, such trees seem, from the time of taking root, to be acquired to his estate.

De insula.

§ XXII. Insula, quæ in mari est (quod rarò accidit) occupantis fit: nullius enim esse creditur. At insula in flumine nata (quod frequenter accidit) si quidem mediam partem fluminis tenet, communis est eorum, qui ab utraque parte fluminis prope ripam prædia possident, pro modo scilicet latitudinis cujusque prædii, quæ prope ripam sit: quod si alteri proximior sit parti, eorum est tantum, qui ab eâ parte prope ripam prædia possident. Quod si qua parte divisum sit flumen, deinde infra unitum agrum alicujus in formam insulæ redegerit, ejusdem

§ 22. When an island rises in the sea, (which rarely happens) the property of it is in the occupant; for before occupation, it is in no one. But if an island rises in a river, (which frequently happens) and is placed exactly in the middle of it, such island shall be in common to them, who possess the lands near the banks on each side of the river, in proportion to the extent of each man's estate adjoining the banks. But, if the island is nearer to one side than the other, it belongs to them only, who possess lands next to the banks on that side, to which the island is nearest. But, if a river divides itself and afterwards unites again, having reduced a tract of land into the form of an island, the land still continues to be the property of the former owner.

De alveo.

§ XXIII. Quod si, naturali alveo in. universum derelicto, ad aliam partem fluere cœperit, prior quidem alveus eorum est, qui prope ripam ejus prædia possident; pro modò scilicet latitudinis cujusque agri, quæ prope ripam sit; novus autem alveus ejus juris esse incipit, cujus et ipsum flumen est, id est, publicus: quod si post aliquod tempus ad priorem alveum reversum fuerit flumen, rursus novus alveus eorum esse incipit, qui prope ripam ejus prædia possident.

§ 23. If a river, entirely forsaking its natural channel, hath began to flow elsewhere, the first channel appertains to those, who possess the lands close to the banks of it, in proportion to the extent of each man's estate next to such banks: and the new channel partakes of the nature of the river, and becomes public. And, if after some time the river returns to its former channel, the new channel again becomes the property of those who possess the lands contiguous to its banks.

De inundatione.

§ XXIV. Alia sanè causa est, si cujus torus ager inundatus fuerit; neque enim inundatio fundi speciem commutat: et ob id, si recesserit aqua, palàm est eum fundum ejus manere, cujus et fuit.

§ 24. It is otherwise as to lands, which are overflowed only: for an inundation alters not the face and nature of the earth; and therefore, when the waters have receded, it is clear that the property will still remain in the same owner.

De specificatione.

§ XXV. Cum ex alienâ materiâ species aliqua facta sit ab aliquo, quæri solet, quis eorum naturali ratione dominus sit: utrum is, qui fecerit, an potius ille, qui materiæ dominus fuerat: ut eccè, si quis ex alienis uvis, aut olivis, aut spicis, vinum, aut oleum, aut frumentum, fecerit; aut ex alieno auro, vel

§ 25. When a man hath made any species, or kind of work, with materials belonging to another, it is often asked, which ought, in natural reason, to be deemed the master of it; whether he who gave the form, or he, who owned the materials? as, if any person should make wine, oil or flour, from the grapes, olives, or argento, vel ære, vas aliquod fecerit; vel ex alieno vino et melle mulsum miscuerit; vel ex medicamentis alienis emplastrum aut collyrium composuerit; vel ex alienâ lanâ vestimentum fecerit; vel ex alienis abulis navem, vel armarium, vel subsellia, fabricaverit. Dt, post multam Sabinianorum et Proculianorum ambiguitatem, placuit media sententia existimantium, si ea species ad priorem et rudem materiam reduci possit, eum videri dominum esse, qui materiæ dominus fuerit; si non possit reduci, eum potius intelligi dominum, qui fecerit; ut ecce, vas conflatum potest ad rudem materiam æris, vel argenti, vel auri, reduci: vinum autem, vel oleum, aut frumentum, ad uvas, vel olivas, vel spicas, reverti non potest: ac ne mulsum quidem ad vinum et mel resolvi potest. Quod si partim ex suâ materia, partim ex alienâ, speciem aliquam fecerit quis; veluti ex suo vino et alieno melle mulsum miscuerat; aut ex suis et alienis medicamentis emplastrum aut collyrium; aut ex suâ lanâ vestimentum fecerit; dubitandum non est, hoc casu, eum esse dominum, qui fecerit: cum non solum operam suam dederit, set et partem ejusdem materiæ præstiterit.

corn of another; cast a vessel out of gold, silver, or brass, belonging to another; make mead or mulse with the wine and honey of another; compose a plaster, or eye water with another man's medicines; make a garment with another's wool; or fabricate, with the timber of another, a bench, a ship, or a chest? After much controversy, between the Sabinians and Proculians, we were best pleased with the middle opinion of those who thought that, if the species or manufactured article can be reduced to its former rude materials, then the owner of such materials is also to be reckoned the owner of the species: but, if the species can not be so reduced, then he, who made it, is understood to be the owner of it: for example; a vessel can easily be reduced to the rude mass of brass, silver, or gold, of which it was made; but wine, oil, or flour, cannot be converted into grapes, olives, or corn; neither can mulse be separated into wine and honey. But, if a man makes any species, partly with his own, and partly with the materials of another: as, if he should make mulse with his own wine, and another's honey; or a plaster or eye-water, partly with his own, and partly with another man's medicines; or should make a garment with an intermixture of his own wool with that of another; it is not to be doubted in such cases, but that he, who made the species, is master of it; since he not only gave his labour, but furnished also a part of the materials.

§ XXVI. Si tamen alienam purpuram vestimento suo quis intertexuerit, licet pretiosior sit purpura, tamen accessionis vice cedit vestimento: et, qui dominus fuit purpuræ, adversus eum, qui surripuit, habet furti actionem et condictionem, sive ipse sit, qui vestimentum fecit, sive alius: nam extinctæ res licet vindicari non possint, condici tamen à furibus et quibusque aliis possessoribus possunt.

§ 26. If any man shall have interwoven the purple of another into his own vestment, then the purple, although more valuable, appertains to the vestment by accession: and the owner of the purple, may have an action of theft, and a personal action, called a condiction, against the purloiner; whether the vestment was made by him, or by another: for although things, which become, as it were, extinct by the change of their form, cannot be recovered identically, yet a condiction lies for the value of them, either against the thief, or any other possessor.

§ XXVII. Si duorum materiæ voluntate dominorum confusæ sint, totum id corpus, quod ex confusione fit, utriusque commune est: veluti si qui vina sua confuderint, aut massas argenti vel auri conflaverint. Sed, etsi, diversæ materiæ sint, et ob id propria species facta sit, fortè ex vino et melle mulsum, aut ex auro et argento electrum, idem juris est: nam et hoc casu, communem esse speciem, non dubitatur. Quod si fortuito et non voluntate dominorum confusæ fuerint vel ejusdem generis materiæ, vel diversæ, idem juris esse placuit.

§ 27. If materials belonging to two persons are mingled by mutual consent, the whole mass, is common to both proprietors: as if they shall have intermixed their wines, or melted together their gold or silver. The same rule obtains, if diverse substances are so incorporated, as to become one species: as when mulse is made with wine and honey; or electrum by fusing together gold and silver: here no doubt, the species becomes common: and so it is, when similar or even different substances, are incorporated fortuitously, without the consent of their proprietors.

§ XXVIII. Quod si frumentum Titii frumento tuo mistum fuerit, siquidem voluntate vestrà, commu-

§ 28. If the corn of Titius hath been mixed with yours by consent, the heap is in common; because the ne est; quia singula corpora, id est, singula grana, quæ cujusque propria fuerunt, consensu vestro communicata sunt. Quod si casu id mistum fuerit, vel Titius id miscuerit sine tuâ voluntate, non videtur commune esse: quia singula corpora in suâ substantiâ durant. Sed nec magis istis casibus commune fit frumentum, quam grex intelligitur esse communis, si pecora, Titii, tuis pecoribus mista fuerint. Sed, si ab alterutro vestrum, totum id frumentum retineatur, in rem quidem actio pro modo frumenti cujusque competit: arbitrio autem judicis continetur, ut ipse æstimet, quale cujusque frumentum fuerit.

single bodies or grains, which were the private property of each, are, with your consent, intermixed. But, if the intermixture were accidental, or if Titius made it without consent, it then seems that the corn is not in common; because the grains still remain distinct, and in their proper substance; for corn, in such a case, no more becomes in common, than a flock would be, if the sheep of Titius should intermix with yours. But, if the whole quantity of corn should be retained by either of you, then an action in rem lies for each man's portion; and it is the duty of the judge to make an estimate of the quality, or value, of each portion.

De his quæ solo cedunt. De ædificatione in suo solo ex aliena materia.

§ XXIX. Cum in suo solo aliquis ex alienâ materiâ ædificaverit, ipse intelligitur dominus ædificii: quia omne, quod solo inædificatur, solo cedit. Nec tamen idè is, qui materiæ dominus fuerat, desinit dominus ejus esse: sed tantisper neque vindicare eam potest, neque ad exhibendum de eâ re agere, propter legem duodecim tabularum, quâ cavetur, ne quis tignum alienum ædibus suis junctum eximere cogatur, sed duplum pro eo præstet, per actionem, quæ vocatur, de tigno juncto. Appellatione autem tigni, omnis materia significatur, ex qua ædificia fiunt. Quod idè provisum est, ne ædificia rescindi necesse sit. Quod si aliquâ ex causâ dirutum sit ædificium, poterit materiæ dominus, si non fuerit duplum jam consequutus,

§ 29. If a man hath raised a building upon his own ground with the materials of another, he is considered the proprietor: for every building is an accession to the ground upon which it stands. But, the owner of the materials, does not lose his right of ownership; for though he cannot demand them specifically, or bring an action for the exhibition of them; since it is provided, by a law of the twelve tables, that a person who has used the materials of another, cannot be compelled to separate them from the building; yet by the action, de tigno juncto, he may be obliged to pay double value: (all materials for building are comprehended under the general term tignum.) The above cited provision, in the law of the twelve tables, was made to prevent the demolition of buildings. But, if it happen, that in any case, a building should be dissevered, or pulled down, then the owner of the materials, if he hath not already obtained double the value of them, is not prohibited from claiming his identical materials, and to bring his action ad exhibendum.

De ædificatione ex sua materia in solo alieno.

§ XXX. Ex diverso, si quis in alieno solo ex suâ materiâ domum ædificaverit, illius fit domus, cujus et solum est. Sed hoc casu, materiæ dominus proprietatem ejus amittit, quia voluntate ejus intelligitur esse aliena; utique si non ignorabat, se in alieno solo ædificare: et ideo, licet diruta sit domus, materiam tamen vindicare non potest. Certè illud constat, si, in possessione constituto ædificatore, soli dominus petat domum suam esse, nec solvat pretium materiæ et mercedes fabricorum, posse eum per exceptionem doli mali repelli; utiquè si bonæ fidei possessor fuerit, qui ædificavit. Nam scienti, solum alienum esse, potest objici culpa, quod ædificaverit temerè in eo solo, quod intelligebat alienum esse.

§ 30. On the contrary, if a man shall have built with his own materials upon the ground of another, the edifice becomes the property of him to whom the ground belongs: in this case the owner of the materials loses his property, because he is understood to have made a voluntary alienation of it, if he knew he was building upon another's land; therefore, if the edifice should fall, or be pulled down, such person cannot, even then, claim the materials. But it is clear, that if the builder be in confirmed possession, and the proprietor of the ground should claim the edifice as his, and refuse to pay the price of the materials and the wages of the workmen, he may be repelled by an exception of fraud: provided the builder was in possession bonâ fide. Otherwise it might be fairly objected, "that he had built rashly upon that ground, which he knew to be the property of another."

De plantatione.

§ XXXI. Si Titius alienam plantam in solo suo posuerit, ipsius erit;

§ 31. If Titius sets another man's plant in his own ground, the plant et ex diverso, si Titius suam plantam in Mævii solo posuerit, Mævii planta erit; si modo utroque casu radices egerit: ante enim quam radices egerit, ejus permanet, cujus fuerat. Adeò autem ex eo tempore, quo radices egerit planta, proprietas ejus commutatur, ut, si vicini arbor ita terram Titii presserit, ut in ejus fundum radices egerit, Titii effici arborem dicamus: ratio enim non patitur, ut alterius arbor esse intelligatur, quam cujus in fundum radices egerit: et ideò, circa confinium arbor posita, si etiam in vicini fundum radices egerit, communis fit.

will belong to Titius: on the contrary, if Titius shall have set his own plant in Mævius's ground, the plant will belong to Mævius; provided in either case, it hath taken root; for, until then, the property remains in him who planted it. But from the instant it hath taken root, the property is changed: so that, if the tree of a neighbour borders so closely upon the ground of Titius, as to take root in it, and be wholly nourished there, we may affirm, that such tree is become the property of Titius: for reason doth not permit, that a tree should be deemed the property of any other, than of him, in whose ground it hath rooted: therefore, if a tree, planted near the bounds of one person, shall also extend its roots into the lands of another, it will become common to both.

De satione.

§ 32. As plants appertain to the soil, in which they have rooted, so grain also is understood to follow the property of that ground, in which it is sowed. But as he, who hath built upon the ground of another, may (according to what we have said) be defended by an exception of fraud, if the proprietor of the ground should demand the edifice; so he, who at his own expense and bonâ fide hath sowed in another man's land, may also be benefited by the help of this exception.

De scriptura.

§ 33. As whatever is built upon, or sowed in the ground, belongs to

that ground by accession; so letters also, although written with gold, appertain to the paper or parchment, upon which they are written. And therefore, if Titius shall have written a poem, a history, or an oration, upon your paper or parchment, then you and not Titius will be deemed the owner of the written paper. But if you demand the books or parchments from Titius, and refuse to defray the expense of the writing, then Titius can defend himself by an exception of fraud: allowing that he obtained possession of such papers and parchments bonâ fide.

De pictura.

§ XXXIV. Si quis in alienâ tabulâ pinxerit, quidam putant tabulam picturæ cedere: aliis videtur, picturam (qualiscunque sit) tabulæ cedere: sed nobis videtur melius esse, tabulam picturæ cedere: ridiculum est enim, picturam Apellis vel Parrhasii in accessionem vilissimæ tabulæ cedere. Undè, si à domino tabulæ imaginem possidente is, qui pinxit, eam petat, nec solvat pretium tabulæ, poterit per exceptionem doli mali submoveri. At, si is, qui pinxit, eam possideat, consequens est, ut utilis actio domino tabulæ adversus eum detur: quo casu, si non solvat impensam picturæ, poterit per exceptionem doli mali repelli: utique si bonæ fidei possessor fuerit ille, qui picturam imposuit. Illud enim palam est, quod

mands it, and does not tender the value of the picture, he may also be repelled by an exception of fraud, provided the painter obtained possession fairly. But, if he, or any other, shall have taken away the tablet feloniously, it is evident, that the owner may prosecute by any action of theft.

De fructibus bona fide perceptis.

§ XXXV. Si quis à non domino, quem dominum esse crediderit, bonâ fide fundum emerit, vel ex donatione, aliave qualibet justâ causâ, æque bonâ fide acceperit, naturali ratione placuit, fructus, quos percepit, ejus esse pro cultura et curâ : et ideò, si postea dominus supervenerit, et fundum vindicet, de fructibus ab eo consumptis agere non potest : ei verò, qui alienum fundum sciens possederit, non idem concessum est ; itaque cum fundo etiam fructus, licet consumpti sint, cogitur restituere.

§ 35. If any man shall have purchased or by any other means honestly acquired lands from another, whom he believed to be the true owner, when in fact he was not, it is agreeable to natural reason, that the fruits, which he shall have gathered, shall become his own, on account of his care in the culture : and therefore, if the true owner shall afterwards appear and claim his lands, he can have no action against the bonâ fide possessor, for produce consumed. But this exemption is not granted to him, who knowingly keeps possession of another's estate ; and therefore, he is compellable to account for all the mesne profits together with the lands.

De fructibus a fructuario et colono perceptis.

§ XXXVI. Is verò, ad quem usufructus fundi pertinet, non aliter fructuum dominus efficitur, quam si ipse eos percepit ; et ideò, licet maturis fructibus, nondum tamen perceptis, decesserit, ad hæredes ejus non pertinent, sed domino proprietatis acquiruntur. Eadem ferè et de colono dicuntur.

§ 36. The usufructuary of lands can gain no property in the fruits, until he hath actually gathered them ; and therefore, if he should die, while the fruits, although ripe, are yet ungathered, they could not be claimed by his heirs, but would fall to the proprietor : and so in general, as to farmers.

Quæ sunt in fructu.

§ XXXVII. In pecudum fructu etiam fœtus est, sicuti lac, pilus, et lana: itaque agni, hædi, et vituli, et equuli, et suculi, statim naturali jure domini fructuarii sunt. Partus verò ancillæ in fructu non est; itaque ad dominum proprietatis pertinet. Absurdum enim videbatur, hominem in fructu esse; cum omnes fructus rerum natura gratiâ hominis comparaverit.

§ 37. Among the produce of animals, we not only reckon milk, skins and wool but also their young; and therefore lambs, kids, calves, colts, and pigs, appertain by natural right to the usufructuary; but the offspring of a female slave cannot be thus considered, but belongs to the proprietor of such slave: for it seemed absurd that man, should be enumerated among the articles of produce, seeing that for his use nature hath furnished all kinds of produce.

De officio fructuarii.

§ XXXVIII. Sed, si gregis usufructum quis habeat, in locum demortuorum capitum ex fœtu fructuarius submittere debet, (ut et Juliano visum est;) et in vinearum demortuarum vel arborum locum alias debet substituere. Rectè enim colere, et quasi bonus paterfamilias uti debet.

§ 38. He, who has the usufruct of a flock ought (according to Julian) to preserve the original number entire, by supplying the deficiency out of the young; in like manner he ought to supply the place of dead vines, or trees; and cultivate and use the stock in all respects like a good and fair husbandman.

De inventione thesauri.

§ XXXIX. Thesaurus, quos quis in loco suo invenerit, divus Adrianus, naturalem æquitatem sequutus, ei concessit, qui eos invenerit; idemque statuit, si quis in sacro aut religioso loco fortuito casu invenerit. At, si quis, in alieno loco, non data ad hoc opera, sed fortuito invenerit, dimidium domino soli concessit, et dimidium inventori: et convenienter, si quis in Cæsaris loco invenerit, dimidium inventoris, et dimidium esse Cæsaris, statuit. Cui conveniens est, ut, si

§ 39. The emperor Adrian, in pursuance of natural equity, allowed any treasure, found in a man's own lands, to belong to the finder: he ordained the same as to things casually found, in a sacred or religious place. But, if a person, not making it his business to search, should fortuitously find treasure in the ground of another, he granted half to the proprietor of the soil, and half to the finder. And so, if any thing is found within the imperial demesnes, half shall appertain to the finder and half to the emperor; likewise, if a man find any valuable thing in a place belonging to the treasury, the public, or the city, half shall appertain to the finder, and half to the treasury, the public or the city.

De traditione. I. Regula, ejusque ratio.

§ XL. Per traditionem quoque jure naturali res nobis acquiruntur nihil enim tam conveniens est naturali æquitati, quam voluntatem domini, volentis rem suam in alium transferre, ratam haberi: et ideo, cujuscunque generis sit, corporalis res tradi potest, et à domino tradita, alienatur: itaque stipendiaria quoque et tributaria prædia eodem modo alienantur. Vocantur autem stipendiaria et tributaria prædia, quæ in provinciis sunt: inter quæ nec non et Italica prædia, ex nostrâ constitutione, nulla est differentia: sed, siquidem ex causâ donationis, aut dotis, aut quâlibet aliâ ex causâ, traduntur, sine dubio transferuntur.

§ 40. Things are also acquired (according to the law of nature) by tradition or livery; for nothing is more conformable to natural equity than to confirm the will of him, who is desirous to transfer his property to another; therefore corporeal things of whatever kind, may be delivered; and, when delivered by the owner, are aliened. Stipendiary and tributary possessions, (such as those situated in the provinces,) may be aliened in the same manner; for between these and the Italian estates we have now taken away all distinction, so that, on account of a donation, a marriage-portion, or any other just cause, stipendiary and tributary possessions may undoubtedly be transferred by livery.

2. Limitatio.

§ XLI. Venditæ verò res et traditæ, non aliter emptori acquiruntur, quam si is venditori pretium solverit, vel alio modo ei satisfecerit; veluti ex promissore, aut pignore dato: quod, quamquam cavetur lege duodecim tabularum, tamen rectè dicitur et jure gentium, id est, jure naturali, id effici. Sed, si is, qui vendidit, fidem emptoris sequutus fue-

§ 41. Things, although sold and delivered, are not acquired by the buyer until he hath either paid or otherwise satisfied the seller for them; as by a bondsman or pledge. And, although this is so ordained by a law of the twelve tables, yet the same rule is rightly said to arise from the law of nations; that is from the law of nature. But if the seller have given credit to the buyer, we must affirm, that the things become instantly the property of the latter.

3. Ampliatio.

§ XLII. Nihil autem interest, utrum ipse dominus tradat alicui rem suam, an voluntate ejus alius, cui ejus rei possessio permissa sit. Quâ ratione, si cui libera universorum negotiorum administratio permissa fuerit à domino, isque ex his negotiis rem vendiderit et tradiderit faciet eam accipientis.

§ 42. It is the same whether the owner deliver the article himself, or another to whom the possession of it was entrusted, deliver it with the owner's consent. Hence, if the management of all business be committed by a proprietor to any person, who shall by virtue of his commission, sell and deliver goods, they will become the property of the receiver.

De quasi traditione. Si traditio ex alia causa præcesserit.

§ XLIII. Interdum etiam, sine traditione nuda voluntas dominisufficit ad rem transferendam; veluti si rem, quam tibi aliquis commodaverit, aut locaverit, aut apud te deposuerit, postea aut vendiderit tibi, aut donaverit, aut dotis nomine dederit: quamvis enim ex eâ causa tibi eam non tradiderit, eo tamen ipso, quod patitur tuam esse, statim tibi acquiritur proprietas, perinde ac si eo nomine tibi tradita fuisset.

§ 43. In some cases, the consent of the proprietor without delivery is sufficient to transfer property; as when a person hath lent, hired, or deposited in your possession any thing, and hath afterwards sold it to you, made a donation of it, or given it to you as a marriage portion: for although not originally delivered for any of these purposes, yet, as soon as it becomes notoriously yours you have instantly acquired the property: and that as fully, as if it had actually been delivered as a thing sold, a donation, or a marriage portion.

De traditione clavium.

§ XLIV. Item, si quis merces in horreo depositas vendiderit, simul atque claves horrei tradiderit emptori, transfert proprietatem mercium ad emptorem.

§ 44. Also if a person hath sold merchandise, deposited in a store-house, he is understood to have transferred the property, on delivering the keys of the store-house to the buyer.

De missilibus.

§ XLV. Hoc ampliùs; interdum et in certam personam collata voluntas domini transfert rei proprietatem : ut eccè, prætores et consules, missilia jactant in vulgus, ignorant quid eorum quisque sit excepturus : et tamen, quia volunt, quod quisque acceperit, ejus esse, statim eum dominorum efficiunt.

§ 45. It also sometimes happens that the property of a thing is transferred, by the master of it, to an incertain person : as when the prætors and consuls cast their missilia, or liberalities, among the people, they know not what any particular man will receive : yet, because it is their will, that what every man then receives shall be his own, it instantly becomes his property.

De habitis pro derelicto.

§ 46. By parity of reason it appears that whatever hath been made a derelict by the owner, will become the property of the first occupant. Whatever hath been thrown away or abandoned by the owner, with intent, that it might no longer be reckoned among his possessions, is accounted a derelict : and ceases to be his property.

De jactis in mare levandæ navis causa Item de his, quæ de rheda currente cadunt.

§ XLVII. Alia sanè causâ est carum rerum, quæ in tempestate levandæ navis causâ ejiciuntur : hæ enim dominorum permanent : quia palem est, eas non eo animo ejici, quod quis eas habere nolit, sed quo magis cum ipsa navi maris periculum effugiat. Quâ de causâ, si quis eas fluctibus expulsas, vel etiam in ipso mari nactus, lucrandi animo abstulerit, furtum committit. Nec longè videntur discedere ab his, quæ de rhedâ currente, non intelligentibus dominis, cadunt.

§ 47. But the law is not so in respect of things thrown overboard in a storm, to lighten a vessel; for they remain the property of the owners; seeing it is evident, that they were not thrown away, through dislike, but that persons in the ship might avoid the dangers of the sea. Hence whoever with a selfish intention, hath taken up such goods, although found upon the high sea, he is guilty of theft. And, goods which have dropped from a carriage in motion, without the knowledge of the owner may be considered in the same light.

TITULUS SECUNDUS.

DE REBUS CORPORALIBUS ET INCORPORALIBUS.

Secunda rerum divisio.

QUÆDAM præterea res corporales sunt, quædam incorporales. Corporales hæ sunt, quæ sui naturâ tangi possunt; veluti fundus, homo, vestis, aurum, argentum, et denique aliæ res innumerabiles. Incorporales autem sunt, quæ tangi non possunt: qualia sunt ea, quæ in jure consistunt; sicut hæreditas, ususfructus, usus, et obligationes, quoque modo contractæ. Nec ad rem pertinet, quod in hæreditate res corporales continentur: nam et fructus, qui ex fundo percipiuntur, corporales sunt: et id, quod ex aliquâ obligatione nobis debetur, plerumque corporale est; veluti fundus, homo, pecunia: nam ipsum jus hæreditatis, et ipsum jus utendi, fruendi, et ipsum jus obligationis, incorporale est. Eodem numero sunt et jura prædiorum urbanorum et rusticorum, quæ etiam servitutes vocantur.

Moreover some things are corporeal others incorporeal. Things corporeal are tangible; as, lands, slaves, vestments, gold, silver, and others, innumerable. Things incorporeal are those, which are not tangible, but consist in rights and privileges; as inheritances, usufructs, uses, and all obligations however contracted: nor is it an objection that things corporeal are contained in an inheritance; for fruits, gathered from the earth, are corporeal; and that also is generally corporeal, which is due to us upon an obligation; as a field, a slave, or money: for, the right to an inheritance, the right of using and enjoying any particular thing, and the right of an obligation, are undoubtedly incorporeal. To these may be added the rights, (or qualities,) of rural and city estates, termed services.

TITULUS TERTIUS.

DE SERVITUTIBUS RUSTICORUM ET URBANORUM PRÆDIORUM.

D. viii. T. 1. et 2. C. iii. T. 34.

De servitutibus rusticis.

RUSTICORUM prædiorum jura sunt hæc: iter, actus, via, aquæductus. Iter est jus eundi, ambulandi, hominis; non etiam jumentum agendi vel vehiculum. Actus est, jus agendi jumentum vel vehiculum. Itaque, qui habet iter, actum non habet: sed, qui actum habet, et iter habet, eoque uti potest etiam sinè jumento. Via est jus eundi, et agendi, et ambulandi: nam iter et actum, via in se continet. Aquæductus est jus aquæ ducendæ per fundum alienum.

The rights or services of rural estates are these; a path, Iter; a road, actus; an highway, via; and an aqueduct or free passage for water. A path is the right of passing and repassing on foot over another man's ground, but not of driving cattle or a carriage over it. A road implies the liberty of driving either cattle or carriages: hence he who hath a path, hath not a road: but he, who hath a road, hath inclusively a path; for he may use such road, when he both not drive cattle. A highway imports the right of passing, driving cattle, &c. and includes in it doth a path and a road: and an aqueduct imports the right of leading water, through the grounds of another.

De servitutibus urbanis.

§ I. Prædiorum urbanorum servitutes sunt hæ, quæ ædificiis inhærent; ideo urbanorum prædiorum dictæ, quoniam ædificia omnia urbana prædia appellamus, etsi in villa ædificata sunt. Itèm urbanorum prædiorum servitutes sunt hæ; ut vicinus onera vicini sustineat: ut in parietem ejus liceat vicino tignum immittere: ut stillicidium, vel flumen, recipiat quis in ædes suas, vel

§ 1. The services of city-estates are such as appertain to buildings: they are so called because we call all edifices, city-estates, although built upon farms or in villages. It is required by city-services, that neighbours should bear the burdens of neighbours; and by such services, one neighbour may be permitted to place a beam upon the wall of another; may be compelled to receive the droppings and currents from the gutter-pipes of another man's house, upon his own house, area, or sewer; or may be exempted from receiving them; or may be restrained from raising his house, so as to darken the habitation of his neighbour.

De reliquis servitutibus rusticis.

§ II. Inter rustiorum prædiorum servitutes quidam computari rectè putant aquæ haustum, pecoris ad aquam appulsum, jus pascendi, calcis coquendæ, arenæ fodiendæ.

§ 2. Some rightly judge, that, among rural services, we ought to reckon the right of drawing water, watering and feeding cattle, burning lime, digging sand, &c. in the ground of another.

Qui servitutem debere vel acquirere possunt.

§ III. Ideò autem hæ servitutes prædiorum appellantur, quoniam si- nê prædiis consistere non possunt. Nemo enim potest servitutem acquirere urbani vel rustici prædii, nisi qui habet prædium; nec quisquam debere, nisi qui prædium habet.

§ 3. All these are called the services of estates; because they cannot be constituted without an estate to support them; for no man can either owe, or acquire, a rural or city service, if he possess neither house or lands.

Quibus modis servitus constituitur.

§ 4. When it is wished to ~~denise~~ the right of a service to another, it should be done by contract and stipulation. A man may also by testament prohibit his heir from heightening his house, lest he should obstruct the view of his neighbour; or may oblige him to permit the rafter of another man's house, to be laid upon his wall: or to receive upon his own house the droppings of another's; or suffer any person to walk, drive cattle, or draw water in his grounds.

TITULUS QUARTUS.

DE USUFRUCTU.

D. vii. T. 1. C. iii. T. 33.

Definitio ususfructus.

USUSFRUCTUS est jus alienis rebus utendi, fruendi, salvâ rerum substantia. Est autem jus in corpore, quo sublato, et ipsum tolli necesse est.

Usufruct, is the right of using, and enjoying, without consuming or destroying, things which are the property of another. It is a right over a corporeal substance; if the substance perish, the usufruct must cease.

§ 1. The usufruct may be in various ways separated from the property, as when it is bequeathed: for naked property only is then vested in the heir, while the legatee possesses the usufruct; it happens on the contrary, when a testator hath bequeathed his lands without the usufruct; for then the legatee hath only the bare property, while the heir enjoys the profits: for the usufruct may be bequeathed to one, and the lands, without the usufruct, to another. Yet, if any man would constitute an usufruct otherwise than by testament, he must do it by pact, and stipulation. But, lest the property of lands should be rendered wholly unbeneficial by deducting the usufruct for ever, it was thought convenient, that the usufruct should by certain means become extinguished, and revert to the property.

Quibus in rebus constituitur.

§ 2. The usufruct not only of lands and houses is grantable, but also of slaves, cattle, and other things; except those which are consumed by use; for the usufruct of such things is neither grantable by civil policy, or natural reason; among these may be reckoned wine, oil, cloaths, &c., money is nearly of the same nature; for by constant use, and the frequent change of owners, it in a manner becomes extinct. But the senate, through a motive of public utility, hath ordained, that the usufruct of these things may be constituted, if sufficient security be given to the heir: and therefore, if the usufruct of money is bequeathed, the money is so given to the legatee as to make it instantly his own: but then the legatee, lest he should die, or suffer diminution, is obliged to give security to the heir for the repayment of a like sum. Other things also, are so delivered to the legatee as to become his property; but in this case, after valuation, security must be given to the heir for the payment of that amount, either at the death of the legatee, or if he should suffer diminution. It is not therefore to be understood, that the senate hath created strict usufruct of these things, which is impossible: but a quasi-usufruct by means of a security.

Quibus modis finitur.

§ III. Finitur autem ususfructus morte usufructuarii, et duabus

§ 3. The usufruct determines by the death of the usufructuary; and capitis diminutionibus, maximâ et mediâ, and non utendo per modum et tempus; quæ omnia nostra statuit constitutio. Item finitur ususfructus, si domino proprietatis ab usufructuario cedatur, (nam cedendo extraneo nihil agitur,) vel ex contrario, si usufructarius proprietatem rei acquisiverit: quæ res consolidatio appellatur. Eo amplius constat, si ædes incendio consumptæ fuerint, vel etiam terræ motu, vel vitio suo corruerint, extinguere usumfructum; et ne aræquidem usumfructum deberi.

by two of the three namely, the greatest and the middle diminution, (or change of state; and also by not being used, according to the manner and during the time prescribed: all which is set forth in our constitution. The usufruct also determines if the usufructuary surrender it to the lord of the property; for a cession to a stranger is of no avail: or if the usufructuary hath acquired the property, which is called consolidation. And it is certain, if a house hath been consumed by fire, or thrown down by an earthquake, or fallen through decay, that the usufruct of such house is wholly destroyed; and that no usufruct of the area, or ground of it, enures to the usufructuary.

Si finitus sit.

§ IV. Cum autem finitus fuerit totus ususfructus, revertitur scilicet ad proprietatem; et, ex eo tempore, nudæ proprietatis dominus incipit plenam in re habere potestatem.

§ 4. When the whole usufruct of a thing is determined, it then reverts to the property; and from that time, the owner of the nude property begins to have full power over it.

TITULUS QUINTUS.

DE USU ET HABITATIONE.

D. vii. T. 8. C. iii. T. 33.

Communia de usufructu et usu.

ISDEM iilis modis, quibus ususfructus constituitur, etiam nudus usus constitui solet: iisdem illis modis finitur, quibus et ususfructus desinit.

The usufruct, and the naked use of a thing, are constituted, and determined by the same means.

Quid intersit inter usumfructum et usum fundi.

§ 1. Less right appertains to the use of a thing, than the usufruct; for he, who has but the use of lands, is understood to have nothing more than the liberty of using so much of the herbs, fruit, flowers, hay, straw, and wood, as may be sufficient for his daily supply: and he is permitted to be commorant upon the land, on condition that he neither becomes troublesome to the owner, nor impedes the labours of the husbandmen. Neither can he let, sell, or give his right to another, which an usufructuary may.

Ædium usus.

§ II. Item is, qui ædium usum habet, hactenùs jus habere intelligitur, ut ipse tantum inhabitet; nec hoc jus ad alium transferre potest: et vix receptum esse videtur, ut hospitem ei recipere liceat; sed cum uxore liberisque suis, item libertis, nec non personis aliis liberis, quibus non minus, quam servis utitur, habitandi jus habeat. Et conveni-

§ 2. He, who hath but the use of an house, is understood to have no other right than that of personal habitation: for he cannot transfer this right; and it is hardly thought allowable to receive a guest or a lodger. But he may inhabit the house with his, wife, children, freed-men, and such other free persons as are servants. And agreeably to this, if the enter, si ad mulierem usus ædium " use of a house appertains to a woman, she may live in it with her husband, and her dependants.

De servi vel jumentu usu.

§ III. Item is, ad quem servi usus pertinet, ipse tantum opera atque ministerio ejus uti potest: ad alium verò nullo modo jus suum transferre ei concessum est. Idem scilicet juris est in jumento.

§ 3. He also, who hath the use of a slave, can benefit only by the labour and service of such slave: for it is not in the power of the usuary to transfer his right. The same law prevails in regard to beasts of burden.

De pecorum usu.

§ IV. Sed et, si pecorum vel ovium usus legatus sit, neque lacte neque agnis, neque lanâ, utetur usuarius: quia ea in fructu sunt. Planè ad stercorandum agrum suum pecoribus uti potest.

§ 4. If the use of cattle be devised, as of sheep: yet the usuary can neither use the milk, the lambs, or the wool; for these belong to the usufruct. But he may undoubtedly employ the sheep in soiling his lands.

De habitatione.

§ V. Sed, si cui habitatio legata, sive aliquo modo constituta sit, neque usus videtur, neque usufructus, sed quasi proprium aliquod jus: quamquam habitationem habentibus, propter rerum utilitatem, secundum Marcelli sententiam, nostrâ decisione promulgatâ, permisi-mus non solum in eâ degere, sed etiam aliis locare.

§ 5. An habitation, whether given by testament, or constituted by other means, seems neither an use nor an usufruct, but rather a particular right. And, for public utility and in conformity to the opinion of Marcellus, we have decided, that he who hath an habitation, may not only live in it but let it to another.

Transitio.

§ VI. Hæc de servitutibus, et usufructu, et usu, et habitatione, dixisse sufficiat. De hæreditatibus autem et obligationibus suis locis proponemus. Exposuimus summam, quibus modis jure gentium res

§ 6. What hath been said, may suffice concerning real services, usufructs, uses and habitations. We shall treat of inheritances and obligations, in their proper places. Having already briefly explained how acquiruntur: modò videamus, quibus modis legitimo et civili jure acquiruntur.

things are acquired by the law of nations; let us now examine, how they are acquired by the civil law.

TITULUS SEXTUS.

DE USUCAPIONIBUS ET LONGI TEMPORIS PRESCRIPTIONIBUS.

D. xli. T. 3. C. vii. T. 31, et 33.

Præcipua usucapionis requisita. 1. Bona fides. 2. Possessio per tempus definitum continuata. 3. Justus titulus.

JURE civili constitutum fuerat, ut, qui bonâ fide ab eo, qui dominus non erat, cum crederet eum dominum esse, rem emerit, vel ex donatione, aliâve quavis justâ causâ acceperit, is eam rem, si mobilis erat, anno ubique uno, si immobilis, biennio tantum in Italico solo, usucapert: ne rerum dominia in incerto essent. Et, cum hoc placitum erat putantibus antiquioribus, dominis sufficere ad inquirendas res suas præfata tempora, nobis melior sententia resedit, ne domini maturius suis rebus defraudentur, neque certo loco beneficium hoc concludatur: et ideò constitutionem super hoc promulgavimus, quâ cautum est, ut res quidem mobiles per triennium; immobiles vero per longi temporis possessionem (id est, inter præsentis decennio, inter absentes viginti annis) usucapiantur. Et hîs modis, non solum in Italiâ, sed etiam in omni terra, quæ nostro im-

By the civil law, whoever had fairly obtained a thing from one, whom he supposed the true owner, (although in reality he was not) and, if a moveable, had possessed it bonâ fide for one year, either in Italy or the provinces; or, if immoveable, for two years within the limits of Italy, should prescribe to such thing by use: and this was held to be law, lest the dominion or property of things, should be uncertain. But although it was thought by ancient legislators, that these periods were sufficiently long to enable every owner to search after his property, yet a better opinion hath occurred to us, that the true owners be not defrauded, or too hastily excluded, by the circumscription of time and place, from recovering their just due: we have therefore provided, that things moveable may be prescribed to after the expiration of three years, and that a possession, during a long tract of time, will also found a prescription to things immoveable: that is to say, ten years, if the parties are present, (i. e. in the province,) and twenty years if either of them be absent. Property may thus be acquired; not only in Italy, but throughout our dominions, if the possession was honestly obtained at first.

De his, quæ sunt extra commercium.

§ I. Sed aliquandò, etiamsi maximè quis bonâ fide rem possederit, non tamen illi usucapio ullo tempore procedit: veluti si quis liberum hominem, vel rem sacram, vel religiosam, vel servum fugitivum, possideat.

§ 1. But in some cases, although there hath been possession incontestably bonâ fide, yet no length of time will be sufficient to found a prescription; as when a man holds a free person, a thing sacred or religious, or a fugitive slave.

De rebus furtivis, et vi possessis.

§ II. Furtivæ quoque res, et quæ vi possessæ sunt, nec, si prædicto longo tempore bonâ fide possessæ fuerint, usucapi possunt: nam furtivarum rerum, lex duodecim tabularum, et lex Atilia, inhibent usucapionem; vi possessarum lex Julia et Plautia. Quod autem dictum est, furtivarum et vi possessarum rerum usucapionem per leges prohibitam esse, non eò pertinet, ut ne ipse fur, quive per vim possidet, usucapere possit, (nam his aliâ ratione usucapio non competit; quia scilicet malâ fide possident,) sed ne ullus alius, quamvis ab eis bonâ fide emerit, vel ex aliâ causa acceperit, usucapiendi jus habeat. Unde in rebus mobilibus non faciliè procedit, ut bonæ fidei possessoribus usucapio competat. Nam, qui sciens ali-

§ 2. No prescription lies for things that have been stolen; or seized by violence; although they have been possessed bonâ fide, during the length of time required by our constitution: for prescription to things stolen is prohibited by a law of the twelve tables, and by the law Atilia; and the laws Julia and Plautia forbid a prescription to things seized by violence. And it is not to be inferred from these laws, that a thief, or disseizor only, is prohibited from taking by prescription: (for such are also prohibited because they are fraudulent possessors;) but all others likewise; although they shall have purchased such things bonâ fide, or otherwise fairly received them: hence things moveable cannot easily be prescribed to, even by enam rem vendiderit, vel ex aliâ causa tradiderit, furtum ejus committit. Sed tamen id aliquandò aliter se habet. Nam, si hæres rem defuncto commodatam, aut locatam, vel apud eum depositam, existimans hæreditariam esse, bonâ fide accipienti vendiderit, aut donaverit, aut dotis nomine dederit, quin is, qui acceperit, usucapere possit, dubium non est: quippè cum ea res in furti vitium non ceciderit; cum utique hæres, qui bonâ fide tanquam suam alienaverit, furtum non committat. Item, si is, ad quem ancillæ ususfructus pertinet, partum suum esse credens vendiderit, aut si donaverit, furtum non committit. Furtum enim, sine effectu furandi, non committitur. Aliis quoque modis accidere potest, ut quis, sine vitio furti, rem alienam ad aliquem transferat, et efficiat, ut à possessore usucapiatur. Quod autem ad eas res, quæ solo continentur, expedit, jus ita procedit, ut, si quis loci vacantis possessionem, propter absentiam aut negligentiam domini, aut quia sine successore decesserit, sine vi nanciscatur, quamvis ipse malâ fide possideat, (quia intelligit, se alienum fundum occupasse) tamen, si alii bonâ fide accipienti tradiderit, poterit ei longa possessione res acquiri; quia neque furtivum, neque vi possessum, acceperit. Abolita est enim quorundam veterum sententia existimantium, etiam fundi locive furtum fieri. Et eorum utilitati, qui res soli possident, honest possessors: for whoever hath knowingly sold or transferred the goods of another upon whatever consideration, is guilty of theft. But this rule admits of some cases wherein a moveable may be prescribed to: thus if an heir, supposing a particular thing to be hereditary, which in reality had only been lent, let to, or deposited with the deceased, shall have sold, bestowed, or given it as a portion, the bonâ fide receiver may no doubt prescribe; for this can never be reputed stolen, inasmuch as the heir, who aliened it, believing it his own, committed no theft. So if he, who hath the usufruct of a female slave, sell or give away her child believing it to be his property, he does not commit theft; for theft implies an intention to commit it. It may also happen, by various means, that one man may transfer the property of another without theft, and give a right of prescription to the possessor. As to things immoveable the law ordains, that, if any man should take possession of an estate without force, by reason either of the absence, or negligence of the owner, or because he died without heirs, and (although he hath thus possessed the land dishonestly) shall have made livery of it to another, who took it bonâ fide, the land by long possession may be acquired by such taker, who took neither a thing stolen, or seized, by violence: for the opinion of those ancient lawyers, who held, that lands and things immoveable, might be stolen, is now abolished: and it is provided by the imperial constitutions, in favour of those who possess immoveable property, that a long and undoubted possession ought not to be taken away.

De vitio purgato.

§ III. Aliquandò etiam furtiva, vel vi possessa, res usucapi potest; veluti si in domini potestatem reversa fuerit: tunc enim, vicio rei purgato, procedit ejus usucapio.

§ 3. A prescription may sometimes be founded even to things stolen, or possessed by violence; as, when they fall again into the power of the true owner; for the taint of title being removed, prescription takes place.

De re fiscali et bonis vacantibus.

§ IV. Res fisci nostri usucapi non potest: sed Papinianus scripsit, bonis vacantibus fisco nondum nuntiatis, bonæ fidei emptorem traditam sibi rem ex his bonis usucapere posse; et ita Divus Pius, et Divi Severus et Antoninus rescripserunt.

§ 4. Things, which appertain to our treasury, cannot be acquired by prescription. But, it is held by Papinian, that a bonâ fide purchaser of escheats not yet certified, may prescribe for them after delivery. The emperors Pius Severus and Antoninus have issued their rescripts, conformable to this opinion.

Regula generalis.

§ V. Novissimè sciendum est, rem talem esse debere, ut in se non habeat vitium, ut à bonæ fidei emptore usucapi possit, vel qui ex aliâ iustâ causâ possidet.

§ 5. It is lastly to be observed, that no taint of dishonesty must attach to the article, in order to enable a bonâ fide purchaser or possessor to prescribe for it.

De errore falsæ causæ.

§ VI. Error autem falsæ causæ usucapionem non parit; veluti si quis, cum non emerit, emisse se existimans, possideat; vel, cum ei

§ 6. A mistake of the cause of possession shall not give rise to prescription: as when the possessor imagines, he hath purchased, when donatum non fuerit, quasi ex donato possi deat.

he hath not purchased: or that the thing was a gift, when it was not given.

De accessione possessionis.

§ 7. A long possession beneficially commenced in the lifetime of the deceased is continued in favour of the heir or successor, although he may know that the estate is the property of another; but, if the possession commenced unjustly, it will avail neither the heir, nor the possessor, although ignorant of any fraud. It is in like manner enacted by our constitution, that the time of usucaption shall be continued, (That is from the deceased to his successor in things moveable.)

Quando conjunguntur tempora.

§ 8. The emperors Severus and Antoninus have enacted, that, the possession of the seller shall enure to the buyer.

De his, qui a fisco, aut Imp. Augustæve domo, aliquid acceperunt.

§ IX. Edicto divi Marci cavetur, cum, qui à fisco rem alienam emit, si post venditionem quinquennium præterierit, posse dominum rei exceptione repellere. Constitutio autem divæ memoriæ Zenonis bene prospexit iis, qui à fisco per venditionem, aut donationem, vel alium titulum accipiunt aliquid; ut ipsi quidem securi statim fiant, et victores existant, sive experiantur, sive conveniantur: adversus autem sacratissimum ararium usque ad quadriennium liceat iis intendere, qui pro dominio vel hypotheca earum re-

§ 9. It is provided by an edict of the emperor, Marcus, that, the purchaser of anything from the treasury, after five years possession subsequent to the sale, may repel the former owner by an exception of prescription. But the emperor Zeno of sacred memory, hath well provided by his constitution, that all those, who by sale, donation, or any other title, have received things from the public treasury, may instantly be secured in their possession, and made certain of success, whether they be plaintiffs or defendants: and those, who claim either as proprietors or mortgagees of the things aliened, may bring suit against the treasury, at any time within four years. Our own sacred ordinance, lately promulged in favour of those, who receive any thing, from the private possessions either of our-self, or of the empress, adopts the regulations, contained in the above mentioned constitution of the emperor Zeno, concerning fiscal alienations.

TITULUS SEPTIMUS.

DE DONATIONIBUS.

D. xxxix. T. 5. et 6. C. viii. T. 54. Nov. 162.

De donatione.

EST et aliud genus acquisitionis, donatio. Donationum autem duo sunt genera; mortis causâ, et non mortis causâ.

Donation or gift, is another mode of acquiring property; it is of two kinds; on account of death: and not on account of death.

De mortis causa donatione.

§ I. Mortis causâ donatio est, quæ propter mortis fit suspicionem; cum quis ita donat, ut si quid humanitûs ei contigisset, haberet is, qui accipit: sin autem supervixisset is, qui donavit, reciperet: vel si eum donationis pœnituisset, aut prior decesserit is, cui donatum sit. Hæ mortis causâ donationes, ad exemplum legatorum redactæ sunt per omnia: nam, cum prudentibus ambiguum fuerat, utrum donationis,

§ 1. A donation mortis causâ, is made under apprehension of death; as when anything is given upon condition, that, if the donor dies the donee shall possess it absolutely; or return it, if the donor should survive; or should repent, of having made the gift; or if the donee should die before the donor. Donations mortis causâ, are now reduced, as far as possible, to the similitude of legacies: for, when it was much an legati instar eam obtinere oportet, (et utriusque causæ quædam habebat insignia,) et alii ad aliud genus eam retrahebant, à nobis constitutum est, ut per omnia ferè legatis connumeretur, et sic procedat, quemadmodum nostra constitutio eam formavit. Et in summâ mortis causâ donatio est, cum magis se quis velit habere, quam eum, cui donat; magisque eum, cui donat, quam hæredem suum. Sic et apud Homerum Telemachus donat Piræo.

doubted by our lawyers, whether a donation mortis causâ ought to be reputed as a gift, or as a legacy, inasmuch as, in some things, it partakes of the nature of both, we then ordained, that it should be considered in almost all respects as a legacy; and be made as our constitution directs. In short, a donation, mortis causâ, is then said to be made, when a man so gives, as to demonstrate, that he would rather possess the thing given himself, than that the donee should possess it; and yet that the donee should possess it, rather than his own heir.

The donation which Telemachus makes to Piræus in Homer is of this species.

He (when Piræus ask'd for slaves, to bring The gifts and treasures of the Spartan king)
Thus thoughtful answer'd :—those we shall not move,
Dark and unconscious of the will of Jove.
We know not yet the full event of all;
Stabb'd in his palace, if your prince must fall,
Us, and our house, if treason must o'erthrow,
Better a friend possess them, than a foe.
But on my foes should vengeance heav'n decree,
Riches are welcome then, not else, to me;
'Till then, retain the gifts.—

Pope's Odyss. lib. 17.

De simplice inter vivos donatione.

§ II. Aliæ autem donationes sunt quæ sine ullâ mortis cogitatione fiunt, quas inter vivos appellamus, quæ non omnino comparantur legatis: quæ, si fuerint perfectæ, temerè revocari non possunt. Perficiuntur autem, cum donator suam voluntatem scriptis aut sine scriptis manifestaverit. Et, ad exemplum

§ 2. Donations, made without apprehension of death, called donations inter vivos, admit of no comparison with legacies: for, when once perfected, they cannot be rashly revoked: they are esteemed perfect, when the donor hath manifested his will either in writing or otherwise. And it is appointed by our constitution, that a donation inter vivos shall, like a sale necessarily inforce a delivery; for when things are given, they become fully vested in the donee, and it is incumbent upon the donor to deliver them: and, although it is enacted by our predecessors, that donations, to the value of two hundred solidi, shall be formally registered, our ordinance enlarges this sum to five hundred solidi, and permits donations of less value to be binding without insinuation or inrollment; and it notices some donations, which are of full force without inrollment. We have also, for the enlargement of donations, enacted many other rules, which may be collected from our constitutions, on this subject. It nevertheless must be observed, that, a donation, validly made may be revoked on account of ingratitude in the donee in some particular cases: and this, lest a man should in any of the instances enumerated in our constitution, suffer injury or damage from those upon whom he hath bestowed his property.

De donatione ante nuptias vel propter nuptias.

§ III. Est et aliud genus inter vivos donationis, quod veteribus quidem prudentibus penitus erat incognitum; postea autem à junioribus Divis Principibus introductum est, quod ante nuptias vocabatur, et tacitam in se conditionem habebat, ut tunc ratum esset, cum ma-

§ 3. There is another kind of donations inter vivos, introduced by later emperors, and wholly unknown to the ancient lawyers, termed donation before marriage, containing the tacit condition, that it should take effect, when the marriage was performed; these donations were pro-trimonium esset insecutum; idèoque ante nuptias vocabatur, quod ante matrimonium efficiebatur; et nunquam post nuptias celebratas talis donatio procedebat. Sed primus quidem Divus Justinus pater noster, cum augeri dotes et post nuptias fuerat permissum, si quid tale eveniret, et ante nuptias augeri donationem, et constante matrimonio, suâ constitutione permisit: sed tamen nomen inconveniens remanebat, cum ante nuptias quidem vocabatur, post nuptias autem tale accipiebat incrementum. Sed nos plenissimo fini tradere sanctiones cupientes, et consequentia nomina rebus esse studentes, constituimus, ut tales donationes non augeantur tantum, sed etiam constante matrimonio initium accipiant: et non ante nuptias, sed propter nuptias, vocentur: et dotibus in hoc exæquentur, ut quemadmodum dotes constante matrimonio non solum augentur, sed etiam fiunt, ita et istæ donationes, quæ propter nuptias introductæ sunt, non solum antecendant matrimonium, sed eo etiam contracto augeantur et constituentur.

parly called ante nuptias, because they could never be constituted after the celebration of matrimony. But, inasmuch as it was permitted by the ancient law, that portions might be augmented after marriage, the emperor Justin, our father, hath enacted by his constitution, that donations called ante nuptias might also be augmented at any time during matrimony: but, as it was improper, that a donation should be still termed ante nuptias, when it had received an augmentation post nuptias, and we being desirous, that our sanctions might be as perfect as possible, and that names should be properly adapted to things, have ordained that such donations may not only be augmented, but may commence also at any time during matrimony; and that for the future, they shall not be called donations ante nuptias, but donations propter nuptias; and thus they are made equal with portions; for as portions may be augmented, and even made, during matrimony, so donations, introduced on account of matrimony, may now not only precede marriage, but be augmented, or even constituted, after the celebration of it.

De jure accrescendi.

§ IV. Erat olim et alius modus civilis acquisitionis per jus accrescendi, quod est tale; si, communem servum habens aliquis cum Titio, solus libertatem ei imposuerit, vel vindictâ vel testamento, eo casu pars ejus amittebatur, et socio accrescebat. Sed, cum pessimum fuerat exemplo, et libertate servum

§ 4. There was formerly another manner of acquiring property by the civil law; namely by accretion; as, if Primus holding a slave in common with Titius had enfranchised him, either by the vindicta or by testament, then would the share of Primus in that slave be lost, and accrue to Titius. But, inasmuch as defraudari, et ex eo humanioribus quidem dominis damnum inferri, severioribus autem dominis lucrum accedere, hoc, quasi invidiâ plenum, pio remedio per nostram constitutionem mederi necessarium duximus; et invenimus viam, per quam manumissor, et socius ejus, et qui libertatem accepit, nostro beneficio fruuntur, libertate cum effectu procedente, (cujus favore antiquos legum latores multa etiam contra communes regulas statuuisse manifestum est,) et eo, qui eam libertatem imposuit, suæ liberalitatis stabilitate gaudente, et socio indemni conservato, pretiumque servi secundum partem domini, quod nos definivimus, accipiente.

it affords a bad example, that a man should be defrauded of his liberty, and that the most humane masters, should suffer loss, while the most severe receive emolument, we have thought it necessary, to administer a humane remedy to this grievance; and have devised means by which the manumittor, his co-partner, and the freed person, may all partake of our beneficence: for we have decreed, (and clearly our ancient legislators have often set aside the strict rules of law in favour of liberty,) that freedom, although granted by one partner only, shall immediately take effect: so that the manumittor shall have reason to be pleased with the validity of his gift, if his co-partner be indemnified by receiving his share of the worth of the slave.

TITULUS OCTAVUS.

QUIBUS ALIENARE LICET, VEL NON LICET.

De marito, qui, licet fundi dotalis dominus sit, alienare nequit.

ACCIDIT aliquandò, ut, qui dominus rei sit, alienare non possit: et contrà qui dominus non sit, alienandæ rei potestatem habeat. Nam dotale prædium maritus, invitâ muliere, per legem Juliam prohibetur alienare; quamvis ipsius sit, dotis causâ ei datum: quod nos, legem Juliam corrigentes, in meliorem statum deduximus. Cum enim lex in solis tantummodò rebus

Sometimes the proprietor of a thing may not alien it, while one who is not proprietor, may: for example, by the law Julia, a husband is forbidden to alienate lands, which came to him in right of his wife, without her consent; although given to him, as a marriage portion. But, in this respect, we have corrected and amended the law Julia; for, as this law regards only posseslocum habebat, quæ Italicæ fuerant, et alienationes inhibebat, quæ invitâ muliere fiebant, hypothecas autem earum rerum etiam volente eâ utrique remedium imposuimus, ut etiam in eas res, quæ in provinciali solo positæ sunt, interdicta sit alienatio vel obligatio, ut neutrum eorum neque consentientibus mulieribus procedat: ne sexûs muliebris fragilitas, in perniciem substantiæ earum convertatur.

sions situated in Italy, and although it inhibits the husband to mortgage such possessions, even with the consent of his wife, yet it permits him, with her consent to alienate, we have provided a remedy for both cases; so that now, no husband can alien or mortgage, even with consent of his wife, any property provincial or Italian, obtained with her, as a marriage portion; lest the frailty of women should occasion the ruin of their fortunes.

De creditore, qui, licet non sit dominus, tamen alienare pignus potest.

§ I. Contrâ autem creditor pignus, ex pactione, quamvis ejus ea res non sit, alienare potest. Sed hoc forsitan idè videtur fieri, quod voluntate debitoris intelligitur pignus alienari, qui ab initio contractûs pactus est, ut liceret creditori pignus vendere, si pecunia non solvatur. Sed, ne creditores jus suum persequi impedirentur, neque debitorum temerè suarum rerum dominium amittere viderentur, nostrâ constitutione consultum est, et certus modus impositus est, per quem, pignorum distractio possit procedere: cujus tenore utrique parti, creditorum et debitorum satis abundèque provisum est.

§ 1. But a creditor, may by compact alien a pledge, although not his own property; yet this seems no otherwise allowable, than because the pledge is understood to be aliened by consent of the debtor, who covenanted at the commencement of the contract, that the creditor might sell the pledge, if the loan was not repaid. But, lest creditors should be impeded from prosecuting their just claims, and debtors too hastily deprived of their property, it is provided for in our ordinance, and a certain method appointed, by which the sale of pledges may be made: and, ample care hath been taken, in respect both of creditors and debtors.

De pupillo, qui, licet dominus, non tamen sine tutoris auctoritate alienare potest.

§ II. Nunc admonendi sumus, neque pupillum, neque pupillam, ullam rem sinè tutoris auctoritate alienare posse; idèque, si mutu-

§ 2. It must now be observed, that no pupil, male nor female, can alien anything without the authority of a tutor: and therefore, if a am pecuniam sinè tutoris auctoritate alicui dedit, non contrahit obligationem : quia pecuniam non facit accipientis : ideòque vindicari nummi possunt, sicubi extant. Sed, si nummi, quos mutuo minor dedit, ab eo, qui accepit, bonâ fide consumpti sunt, condici possunt : si malâ fide, ad exhibendum de his agi potest.

pupil, without such authority lend money to any man, the pupil acquires no obligation : for he cannot vest in the receiver the property of the money, which may be claimed by vindication, if it still exist. But if money, lent by a minor, be consumed by the borrower, bonâ fide, (i. e. believing the lender was of full age) it may be recovered from such borrower by condiction ; if malâ fide, an action ad exhibendum will lie against him.

Continuatio.

§ 3. On the contrary, property may be transferred to pupils, male or female, without the authority of their tutors : yet, if a debtor make payment to a pupil, he should be warranted by the authority of the tutor, otherwise he will not be acquitted of the debt : and this, for an evident reason, was ordained by a constitution, which we promulgated to the advocates of Cæsarea, at the suggestion of that most eminent man Tribonian, the questor of our sacred palace ; whereby it is enacted, that the debtor of a minor may pay over to the tutor or curator, under a judicial decree, permitting the payment previously obtained without expense to the minor : for when the debt is paid under the decree of a judge, it is attended with the fullest security. But, although money hath been paid to a pupil, otherwise than we have ordained, yet, if he be really enriched by the payment, and hath preserved the money, and should afterwards require, that it should be repaid he might be barred by an exception of fraud. But, if the pupil hath squandered the money, or lost it by theft or violence, an exception of fraud will be of no benefit to the debtor, who will be compelled to make a second payment; because the first was made inconsiderately without the authority of the tutor, and not according to our ordinance. Pupils may not pay money without the authority of their tutors; it does not vest as the property of the receiver: for without such authority a pupil can alien nothing.

si malè consumpserit, aut furto aut vi amiserit, nihil proderit debitori doli mali exceptio, sed nihilominus condemnabitur: quia temerè sine tutoris auctoritate, et non secundum nostram dispositionem, solverit. Sed ex diverso, pupilli vel pupillæ solvere sine tutoris auctoritate non possunt: quia id, quod solvunt, non fit accipientis: cum scilicet nullius rei alienatio eis sine tutoris auctoritate concessa sit.

TITULUS NONUS.

PER QUAS PERSONAS CUIQUE ACQUIRITUR.

C. iv. T. 57.

Summa.

ACQUIRITUR vobis non solum per vosmetipsos, sed etiam per eos, quos in potestate habetis: item per servos, in quibus usumfructum habetis: item per homines liberos, et per servos alienos, quos bonâ fide possidetis: de quibus singulis diligentius dispiciamus.

Things may be acquired not only by ourselves, but also by those, who are under our power; also by slaves, of whom we have the usufruct; by free-men; and by the slaves of others whom we possess bonâ fide. Let us diligently investigate each of these cases.

De liberis in potestate.

§ 1. Igitur liberi vestri utriusque sexus, quos in potestate habetis, olim quidem quicquid ad eos per-venerat, (exceptis videlicet castrensis peculiiis,) hoc parentibus suis acquirebant sine ullâ distinctione : et hoc ita parentum fiebat, ut etiam esset iis licentia quod per unum vel unam eorum acquisitum esset, alii filio, vel extraneo donare, vel vendere, vel quocumque modo voluerant, applicare : quod nobis inhumanum visum est : et generali constitutione emissâ, et liberis peperimus, et parentibus honorem debitum reservavimus : sancitum etenim à nobis est, ut, si quid ex re patris ei obveniat, hoc secundum antiquam observationem totum parenti acquiratur : Quæ enim invidia est, quod ex patris occasione profectum est, hoc ad eum reverti ? Quod autem ex aliâ causâ sibi filius familias acquisivit, hujus usumfructum patri quidem acquirat, dominium autem apud eum remaneat : ne, quod ei suis laboribus vel prosperâ fortunâ accesserit, hoc, in alium perveniens, luctuosum ei procedat.

ed for the parents without any distinction, if we except the peculium castrense : and this so absolutely, that what was acquired by one child, the parent might have given to another, or to a stranger ; or sold it, or applied it in what manner he thought proper : this seemed to be inhuman ; and we have therefore, by a general constitution, mitigated the law as it respects children, and at the same time, supported that honour, which is due to parents ; having ordained, that, if any thing accrue to the son by means of the father's fortune, the whole shall be acquired for the father, according to ancient practice : (for can it be unjust, that the wealth, which the son hath obtained, by means of the father, should revert to the father ?) but that the acquisitions of the son by any other means shall remain in the son ; and that the father shall be entitled only to the usufruct of such acquisition ; lest that which hath accrued from his labour or good fortune, being transferred to another should affect him as a hardship.

De emancipatione liberorum.

§ II. Hoc quoque à nobis dispositum est et in eâ specie, ubi parens, emancipando liberos suos, ex rebus, quæ acquisitionem effugiebant, sibi tertiam partem retinere (si voluerat) licentiam ex anterioribus constitutionibus habebat, quasi pro pretio quodammodo emancipationis : et inhumanum quiddam accidebat, ut filius rerum suarum ex hac emancipatione dominio pro ter-

§ 2. We have made some regulations also as to emancipation : for a parent, when he emancipated his children, might, according to former constitutions, have taken to himself, if so inclined, the third part of those things, which were excepted from paternal acquisition, as the price of emancipation. But it appeared inhuman, that the son should be thus defrauded of the third part of tiâ parte defraudaretur; et, quod h  noris ei ex emancipatione additum erat, quod sui juris effectus esset, hoc per rerum diminutionem decresceret. Ide  que statuimus, ut parens pro terti   parte dominii, quam retinere patera, dimidiam non dominii rerum, sed ususfruct  s, retineat. Ita etenim res intact   apud filium remanebunt, et pater ampliore summ   fruetur, pro terti  , dimidi   potiturus.

his property, and that the honour which he had obtained by becoming independent, should be decreased by the diminution of his estate: we have therefore decreed, that the parent instead of the third part of the property, which he formerly might have retained, shall now be entitled to an half-share, not of the property, but of the usufruct; so that the property will remain intire to the son, and the father will enjoy a greater share; namely, half instead of a third part.

De servis nostris.

   III. Item vobis acquiritur, quod servi vestri ex traditione nanciscuntur, sive quid stipulentur, sive ex donatione, vel ex legato, vel ex qu  libet ali   caus  , acquirant. Hoc enim vobis et ignorantibus et invitis obvenit; ipse enim servus, qui in potestate alterius est, nihil suum habere potest. Sed, si h  eres institutus sit, non ali  s, nisi vestro jussu, h  reditatem adire potest, et, si vobis jubentibus adierit, vobis h  reditas acquiritur, perind   ac si vos ipsi h  redes instituti essetis: et convenient  r scilicet vobis legatum per eos acquiritur. Non solum autem proprietas per eos, quos in potestate habetis, vobis acquiritur, sed etiam possessio: cujuscunque enim rei possessionem adepti fuerint, id vos possidere videmini. Und   etiam per eos usucapio, vel longi temporis possessio, vobis accidit.

   3. Whatever your slaves have at any time acquired, whether by delivery, stipulation, donation, bequest, or any other means, is acquired by you; although you may be ignorant of or even averse to the acquisition; for he, who is a slave, can have no property. And, if a slave be made heir, he cannot otherwise take upon himself the inheritance, than at the command of his master; but, if commanded so to do, the inheritance is as fully acquired by the master, as if he had been himself made heir; and consequently a legacy, left to a slave, is acquired by his master. Moreover, masters acquire by their slaves not only the property of things, but also the possession; for whatever is possessed by a slave, is deemed to be possessed by his master; who may found a prescription to it, by means of his slave.

De fructuariis et bona fide possessis.

§ 4. As to slaves, of whom you have the usufruct only, it hath seemed right, that, whatever they earn by means of your goods, or by their own work and labour, appertains to you: but whatever they earn by other means, belongs to the proprietor: therefore, if a slave be made heir, or legatee, or donee, the inheritance, legacy, or gift, will not be acquired for the usufructuary master, but for the proprietor.

Continuatio.

§ V. Idem placet et de eo, qui à vobis bonâ fide possidetur, sive is liber sit, sive alienus servus: quod enim placuit de usufructuario, idem placet et de bonæ fidei possessore. Itaque, quod extra istas duas causas acquiritur, id vel ad ipsum pertinet, si liber est, vel ad dominum, si servus est. Sed bonæ fidei possessor, cum usuceperit servum, (quia eo modo dominus fit,) ex omnibus causis per eum sibi acquirere potest. Fructuarius verò usucapere non potest: primùm quia non possidet, sed habet jus utendi, fruendi: deindè, quia scit, servum alienum esse. Non solùm autem proprietas per eos servos, in quibus usumfructum habetis, vel quos bonâ fide possidetis, aut per liberam personam, quæ bonâ fide vobis servit, vobis acquiritur, sed etiam possessio. Loquimur autem in utriusque personâ secundum distinctionem, quam proximè exposuimus, id est, si quam posses-

§ 5. The same rule is observed as to the bonâ fide possessor of a slave, whether he be a free-man, or the slave of another: for the same law prevails respecting an usufructuary master, and a bonâ fide possessor; therefore, whatever is acquired, otherwise than by the two causes above-mentioned, either belongs to the person possessed, if he be free; or to the proprietor, if he be a slave. But a bonâ fide possessor, who hath gained a slave by usucaption or prescription, (inasmuch he thus becomes the absolute proprietor,) can acquire by means of such slave, by all manner of ways. But an usufructuary master cannot prescribe; first, because he can not be strictly said to possess, having only the power of using: and because he knows, the slave belongs to another. We nevertheless may acquire not only property, but also possession, by means of slaves, whom we possess sionem ex re vestrâ vel ex suis operis, adepti fuerint.

bonâ fide, or by usufruct; and even by a free person, of whom we have bonâ fide possession. But, in saying this, we adhere to the distinction, before explained, and speak of those things only, of which a slave may acquire the possession, either through the goods of his master, or by his own industry.

De reliquis seu extraneis personis.

§ VI. Ex his itaque apparet, per liberos homines quos neque vestro juri subjectos habetis, neque bonâ fide possidetis, item per alienos servos, in quibus neque usumfructum habetis, neque possessionem justam, nullâ ex causâ vobis acquiri posse. Et hoc est, quod dicitur, per extraneam personam nihil acquiri posse; excepto eo, quod per liberam personam (veluti per procuratorem) placet non solum scientibus, sed et ignorantibus, vobis acquiri possessionem, secundum Divi Severi constitutionem; et per hanc possessionem etiam dominium, si dominus fuerit, qui tradidit; vel usucapionem aut longi temporis præscriptionem, si dominus non sit.

§ 6. Hence it appears that you cannot acquire by means of free persons, not under your subjection, or possessed by you bonâ fide; nor by the slave of another, of whom you have neither the usufruct, nor the just possession. And this is meant, when it is said, that nothing can be acquired by means of a stranger; except indeed according to the constitution of the emperor Severus, that possession may be acquired for you by a free person, as by a proctor, not only with, but even without your knowledge; and, by this possession, the property may be gained, if the delivery were made by the proprietor; and an usucaption or prescription may be acquired, although the delivery were made by one, who was not the proprietor.

Transitio.

and in gross by one single acquisition: for example; if you are nominated heir, or seek possession of the goods of another, or arrogate one as your son, or if goods are adjudged to you for preserving the liberty of slaves; in all these cases, the entire inheritance passes to you. Let us therefore inquire into inheritances, which are twofold; for they proceed either from a testacy, or an intestacy. And first of those, which come by testament; and herein it will be necessary to begin by explaining the manner of making testaments.

TITULUS DECIMUS.

DE TESTAMENTIS ORDINANDIS.

D. xviii. T. 1. C. vi. T. 23. Nov. 66. 119.

Etymologia.

TESTAMENTUM ex eo appellatur, quod testatio mentis sit.

A testament is so called from testatio: because it testifies the determination of the mind.

De antiquis modis testandi civilibus.

§ I. Sed, ut nihil antiquitatis penitus ignoretur, sciendum est, olim quidem duo genera testamentorum in usu fuisse; quorum altero in pace et otio utebantur, quod catalis comitiis appellabant; altero, cum in prælium exituri essent, quod procinctum dicebatur. Accessit de-

§ 1. But, lest ancient usage should be forgotten, it is necessary to observe, that formerly there were two kinds of testaments; one practiced in times of peace, and named calatis comitiis; because made in a full assembly of the people; and the other, when the people were going forth indè tertium genus testamentorum, quod dicebatur per æs et libram, scilicèt quod per emancipationem, id est, imaginariam quandam venditionem agebatur, quinque testibus et libripende, civibus Romanus puberibus, præsentibus, et eo, qui familiæ emptor dicebatur. Sed illa quidem priora duo genera testamentorum ex veteribus temporibus in desuetudinem abierunt : quod verò per æs et libram fiebat, licet diutius permanserit, attamen partim et hoc in usu esse desiit.

to battle, and this was the procinctum testamentum. A third species was afterwards added, called per æs et libram, being effected by emancipation ; which was an alienation, made by an imaginary sale in the presence of five witnesses, and the libripens or balance-holder, all citizens of Rome, above the age of fourteen : and also in the presence of him who was called the emptor familiæ, or purchaser. The two former kinds of testaments, have been disused for many ages : and that, which was made per æs et libram, although it continued longer in practice, hath now ceased in part to be observed.

De antiqua testandi ratione prætoria.

§ II. Sed prædicta quidem nomina testamentorum, ad jus civile referebantur : postèa verò ex edicto prætoris forma alia faciendorum testamentorum introducta est. Jure etenim honorario, nulla mancipatio desiderabatur, sed septem testium signa sufficiebant : cum jure civili, signa testium non essent necessaria.

§ 2. These three kinds of testament originated from the civil law ; but afterwards another kind was introduced by the honorary or prætorian edict ; whereby the signature of seven witnesses was decreed sufficient to establish a will without any emancipation or imaginary sale ; but this signature of witnesses, was not required by the civil law.

De conjunctione juris civilis et prætorii.

§ III. Sed, cum paulatim, tam ex usu hominum, quam ex constitutionum emendationibus, cœpit in unam consonantiam jus civile et prætorium jungi, constitutum est, ut uno eodemque tempore, quod jus civile quodammodo exigebat, septem testibus adhibitis, et subscriptione testium, quod ex constitutionibus inventum est, et ex edic-

§ 3. When the civil and prætorian laws began to be blended partly by usage, and partly by the emendation of imperial constitutions, it became a rule, that all testaments should be made at one and the same time according to the civil law ; that they should be sealed by seven witnesses according to the prætorian law, and that they should also be subscribed by the witnesses, in obedience to the constitutions. Thus the law of testaments seems to be tripartite : for the civil law requires witnesses to make a settlement valid, who must all be present at the same time without interval : the sacred constitutions ordain, that every testament must be subscribed by the testator and the witnesses ; and the prætorian edict requires sealing, and settles the number of witnesses.

Solemnitas addita a Justiniano.

§ IV. Sed his omnibus à nostrâ constitutione propter testamentorum sinceritatem, ut nullâ fraus adhibeatur, hoc aditum est, ut, per manus testatoris vel testium, nomen hæredis exprimatur, et omnia secundum illius constitutionis tenorem procedant.

§ 4. To all these solemnities, we have enacted in additional security of testaments, and for the prevention of frauds that the name of the heir shall be expressed, by the hand-writing, either of the testator, or of the witnesses ; and that every thing shall be done in conformity to the tenor of our constitution.

De annulis, quibus testamenta signantur.

§ V. Possunt autem omnes testes et uno annulo signare testamentum ; (quid enim si septem annuli unâ sculpturâ fuerint ?) secundum quod Papiniano visum est. Sed et alieno quoque annulo, licet signare testamentum.

§ 5. Every witness to a testament, according to Papinian, may use the same signet : for otherwise, what must be the consequence, if seven seals should happen all to bear the same device ? It is also allowable to seal with the signet of another.

Qui testes esse possunt.

§ VI. Testes autem adhiberi possunt ii, cum quibus testamenti factio est. Sed neque mulier, neque impubes, neque servus, neque furiosus, neque mutus, neque surdus, neque is, cui bonis interdictum est, neque ii, quos leges ju-

§ 6. Those persons are good witnesses, who can legally take by testament : but no woman or minor under puberty, or slave ; no person, mad mute, or deaf ; no interdicted prodigal ; nor any whom the laws, have reprobated and rendered intestable, bent improbos intestabilesque esse, possunt in numerum testium adhiberi.

De servo, qui liber existimabatur.

§ VII. Sed, cum aliquis ex testibus, testamenti quidem faciendi tempore, liber existimabatur, postea autem servus apparuit, tam Divus Adrianus Catoni, quam postea Divi Serverus et Antoninus rescripserunt, subvenire se ex suâ liberalitate testamento ut sic habeatur firmum, ac si, ut oportebat, factum esset; cum, eo tempore, quo testamentum signaretur, omnium consensu hic testis liberi loco fuerit, nec quisquam esset, qui status ei quæestionem moveret.

§ 7. If a witness, was regarded as free at the time of attesting, but afterwards appeared to have been then a slave, the emperor Adrian, in his rescript to Cato, and afterwards the emperors Severus and Antoninus by their rescript decreed, that they would aid such a defect in a testament, and confirm it equally as if the witness, at the time of sealing, was, in the estimation of all men, taken to be a free person, no one having made a question of his condition.

De pluribus testibus ex eadem domo.

§ VIII. Pater, nec non is, qui in potestate ejus est: item duo fratres, qui in ejusdem patris potestate sunt, utique testes in uno testamento fieri possunt: quia nihil nocet, ex unâ domo plures testes alieno negotio adhiberi.

§ 8. A father, and a son under his power, or two brothers, under the power of the same father, may be witnesses to a testament: for nothing prevents several persons of the same family, being witnesses to the transaction of another person.

De his, qui sunt in familia testatoris.

§ IX. In testibus autem non debet esse is, qui in potestate testatoris est. Sed, si filiusfamilias de castrensi peculio post missionem faciat testamentum, nec pater ejus rectè adhibetur testis, nec is, qui in potestate ejusdem patris est. Reprobatur enim in eâ re domesticum testimonium.

§ 9. No person under power of the testator can witness the testament. And if the son of a family devise his military estate after his dismissal from the army, neither his father, nor any one under power of his father, can be a witness to the will. For, in this case, the law does not allow of a domestic testimony.

De hærede

§ X. Sed neque hæres scriptus, neque is, qui in ejus potestate est, neque pater ejus, qui eum habet in potestate, neque fratres, qui in ejusdem patris potestate sunt, testes adhiberi possunt; quia hoc totum negotium, quod agitur testamenti ordinandi gratiâ, creditur hodie inter testatorem et hæredem agi. Licet autem totum jus tale conturbatum fuerat, et veteres quidem familiæ emptorem, et eos, qui per potestatem ei conjuncti fuerant, à testamentariis testimoniis repellabant; hæredi autem, et iis, qui per potestatem ei conjuncti fuerant, concedebant testimonia in testamentis præstare: licet ii, qui id permittebant, hoc jure minimè abuti, eos debere suadebant: tamen nos eandem observationem corrigentes, et, quod ab illis suasum est, in legis necessitatem transferentes, ad imitationem pristini familiæ emptoris, meritò nec hæredi, qui imaginem vetustissimi familiæ emptoris obtinet, neque aliis personis, quæ ei, (ut dictum est,) conjunctæ sunt, licentiam concedimus sibi quodammodo testimonia præstare: ideòque nec ejusmodi veteres constitutiones nostro codici inseri permisimus.

§ 10. No heir nominated in the will, nor any person in subjection to him; nor his father, under whose power he is; nor his brothers under power of the same father, can be admitted witnesses; for the whole business of completing a testament, is at this day considered as transacted between the testator, and the real heir. But formerly there was great confusion; for although the ancients would never admit the testimony of the emptor familiæ, (nominal purchaser) or the supposed heir, nor of any one allied to him by subjection, yet they admitted that of the real heir, and of persons connected with him by subjection; and the only precaution taken, was, to exhort those persons not to abuse their privilege. We have corrected this practice; preventing by the coercion of law, that, which the ancient lawyers endeavoured to prevent by persuasion only: for we admit neither the real heir, who represents the emptor familiæ of the ancients, nor any person allied to him as a witness, to the testament, by which he is nominated. It is for this reason, that we have not suffered the old constitutions to be inserted in our Code.

De legatariis et fideicommissariis, et his, qui sunt in eorum familia.

§ XI. Legatariis autem et fideicommissariis, quia non juris successores sunt, et aliis personis eis conjunctis, testimonium non dene-

§ 11. But we refuse not the testimony of legatees and trustees, or of persons allied to them, because they are not successors by law: nay, gamus: imò in quâdam nostrâ constitutione et hoc specialitèr eis concessimus; et multo magis iis, qui in eorum potestate sunt, vel qui eos habent in potestate, hujusmodi licentiam damus.

by our constitution, we have specially granted them this privilege; and we allow this still more readily to persons under their subjection, and to those, to whom they are subject.

De materia, in qua testamenta scribuntur.

§ XII. Nihil autem interest, testamentum in tabulis, an chartis, membranise, vel in alia materia fiat.

§ 12. It is immaterial, whether a testament be written upon a tablet of wax, upon paper, parchment, or any other substance.

De pluribus codicibus.

§ XIII. Sed et unum testamentum pluribus codicibus conficere quis potest, secundùm obtinentem tamen observationem omnibus factis: quod interdum etiam necessarium est; veluti si quis navigaturus et secum ferre et domi relinquere judiciorum suorum contestationem velit: vel propter alias innumerabiles causas, quæ humanis necessitatibus imminet.

§ 13. Any person may execute counter-parts of the same testament observing the prescribed forms. This is sometimes necessary; as when a man going a voyage, is desirous to carry his will with him, and to leave a counter-part at home for his better security. Innumerable other reasons for doing this may arise, according to the various necessities of mankind.

De testamento nuncupativo.

§ XIV. Sed hæc quidem de testamentis, quæ scriptis conficiuntur, sufficiunt. Si quis autem sine scriptis voluerit ordinare jure civili testamentum, septem testibus adhibitis, et suâ voluntate coram eis nuncupatâ, sciat, hoc perfectissimum testamentum jure civili firmissimumque constitutum.

§ 14. Thus much may suffice concerning written testaments. But if a man wishes to dispose of his effects by a nuncupative or unwritten testament, he may do so, if in the presence of seven witnesses, he verbally declares his will; and this will be a valid testament according to the civil law.

TITULUS UNDECIMUS.

DE MILITARI TESTAMENTO.

D. xxix. T. 1. C. vi. T. 21.

In militum testamentis solemnitates remissæ.

SUPRADICTA diligens observatio in ordinandis testamentis militibus, propter nimiam imperitiam eorum, constitutionibus principalibus remissa est. Nam, quamvis ii neque legitimum numerum testium adhibuerint, neque aliam testamentorum solemnitatem observaverint, rectè nihilominus testantur, videlicet cum in expeditionibus occupati sunt: quod meritò nostra constitutio introduxit. Quoquo enim modo voluntas ejus suprema inveniat, sive scripta, sive sine scriptura, valet testamentum ex voluntate ejus. Illis autem temporibus, per quæ, citra expeditionum necessitatem, in aliis locis, vel suis ædibus, degunt, minimè ad vindicandum tale privilegium adjuvantur. Sed testari quidem, etsi filii-familiarum sint, propter militiam conceduntur: jure tamen communi, eadem observatione et in eorum testamentis adhibenda, quam in testamentis paganorum proximè exposuimus.

The before-mentioned strict observance of formalities, in the construction of testaments, is dispensed with by the imperial constitutions, in favour of all military persons, on account of their unskilfulness in these matters. For, although they should neither call the legal number of witnesses, nor observe any other solemnity, yet they may make a good testament, if they are in actual service. This was introduced by our ordinance with good reason; so that in whatever manner the testament of a military person is conceived, whether in writing, or not, it prevails according to his intention: but, when soldiers are not upon an expedition, and live in their own houses or elsewhere, they are by no means intitled to claim this privilege; but a soldier, on account of his profession is allowed to make a testament, although he is the son of a family: observing however, according to the general law, all the formalities, which are required of others in this respect.

Rescriptum Divi Trajani.

sint, sic intelligi debet, ut utique prius constare debeat, testamentum factum esse: quod et sine scriptura, et a non militantibus quoque, fieri potest. Si ergo miles, de cujus bonis apud te quaeritur, convocatis ad hoc hominibus, ut voluntatem suam testaretur, ita locutus est, ut declararet quem vellet sibi heredem esse, et cui libertatem tribueret; potest videri sine scripto hoc modo esse, testatus, et voluntas ejus rata habenda est. Ceterum, si (ut plerumque sermonibus fieri solet) dixit alicui, ego te heredem facio, aut, bona mea tibi relinquo, non oportet hoc pro testamento observari. Nec ullorum magis interest, quam ipsorum, quibus id privilegium datum est, ejusmodi exemplum non admitti. Alioqui non diffculter post mortem alicujus militis testes existerent, qui affirmarent, se audisse dicentem aliquem relinquere se bona, cui visum sit: et per hoc vera judicia subverterentur.

ments, in whatever manner made, shall be valid, must be thus understood; it ought first to be apparent that a testament was made in some manner; for a testament may be made without writing, by persons not military. And therefore, if it appear, that the soldier, concerning whose goods question is now made before you, did, in the presence of witnesses, purposely called, declare what person should be his heir, and to what slaves he should give liberty, he shall be reputed to have made his testament without writing, and his will shall be ratified. But if it is only proved, that he said to some one, as it often happens in discourse, I appoint you my heir—or—I leave you all my estate, such words do not amount to a testament. Nor are any persons more interested than the soldiery, that words so spoken should not amount to a will; otherwise, witnesses might without difficulty be produced after the death of any military man, who would affirm, that they had heard him bequeath his estate, to whomever they please; and the true intentions might be defeated.

De surdo et muto.

§ II. Quinimo et mutus et surdus miles testamentum facere potest.

§ 2. A soldier though mute and deaf, may yet make a testament.

De militibus et veteranis.

§ III. Sed hactenus hoc illis a principalibus constitutionibus conceditur, quatenus militant et in castris degunt. Post missionem vero

§ 3. This privilege was granted by the imperial constitutions to military men, to be enjoyed only during actual service, and while they veterani, vel extra castra alii, si faciant adhuc militantes testamentum, communi omnium civium Romanorum jure id facere debent. Et quod in castris fecerint testamentum non communi jure, sed quomodo voluerint, post missionem intra annum tantum valebit. Quid ergo si intra annum quis decesserit, conditio autem hæredi adscripta post annum extiterit? an quasi militis testamentum valeat? Et placet valere quasi militis.

lived in tents. For, if veterans after dismissal, or soldiers out of camp, would make their testaments, they must pursue the forms required of all the citizens of Rome. And, if a testament be made in camp, and the solemnities of the law are not adhered to, it will continue valid only for one year after dismissal from the army. Suppose therefore, a soldier should die testate within a year after his dismissal, and the condition, enjoined upon the heir should happen after the year, would his testament be valid? We answer, it would prevail as a military testament.

De facto ante militiam testamento.

§ IV. Sed et, si quis ante militiam non jure fecit testamentum, et miles factus, et in expeditione degens, resignavit illud, et quædam adjecit sive detraxit, vel aliàs manifesta est militis voluntas, hoc valere volentis, dicendum est, valere hoc testamentum, quasi ex novâ militis voluntate.

§ 4. If a man, before entering into the army, should make his testament irregularly, and afterwards, upon an expedition, open it for the purpose of adding, or striking out; or if he should otherwise make his intention manifest, that this testament should be valid, it must be pronounced so, by virtue of this republication.

De milite arrogato vel emancipato.

§ V. Denique, et si in arrogationem datus fuerit miles, vel filius-familias emancipatus est, testamentum ejus quasi ex novâ militis voluntate, valet: nec videtur capitis diminutione irritum fieri.

§ 5. If a soldier be given in arrogation, or, being the son of a family, be emancipated, his testament is equally valid, as if he had republished it by a new declaration: nor is it invalidated by his change of state.

De peculio quasi castrensi.

§ 6. Be it known, that, since the ancient laws, as well as the later constitutions, have, in imitation of cupales constitutiones, quibusdam quasi castrensia dederant peculia, et horum quibusdam permissum fuerat etiam in potestate degentibus testari, nostra constitutio, id latius extendens, permiserit omnibus in hujusmodi peculiis testari quidem, sed jure communi. Cujus constitutionis tenore perspecto, licentia est nihil eorum, quæ ad præfatum jus pertinent, ignorare.

the military estates, given to some persons quasi military estates, and have indulged some of these in the liberty of making testaments, while they were under power, our constitution still extending this privilege, hath permitted all persons, who possess these estates, to make their testaments, but according to the common forms of law. Whoever carefully peruses that constitution, may fully inform himself of all that relates to the before-mentioned privilege.

TITULUS DUODECIMUS.

QUIBUS NON EST PERMISSUM FACERE TESTAMENTUM.

D. xxviii. T. 1. C. vi. T. 22.

De filio-familias.

NON tamen omnibus licet facere testamentum: statim enim ii, qui alieno juri subjecti sunt, testamenti faciendi jus non habent: adeo quidem ut, quamvis parentes eis permiserint, nihilo magis jure testari possint: exceptis iis, quos antea enumeravimus, et præcipuè militibus, qui in potestate parentum sunt; quibus de eo, quod in castris acquisiverunt, permissum est, ex constitutionibus principum, testamentum facere. Quod quidem jus ab initio tantum militantibus datum est, tam ex auctoritate Divi Augusti, quam Nervæ, nec non optimi imperatoris

The right of making a testament is not granted to all. Persons under the power of others, have not this right: so that, although parents have given permission, this will not enable their children to make a valid testament; those excepted whom we have already mentioned, and principally sons of families engaged in the army, who by our constitutions may bequeath whatever they have acquired by military service. This permission was at first granted by Augustus, Nerva, and that excellent prince Trajan, to actual soldiers only; but afterwards it was extended by the emperor Adrian to veterans, that is, to soldiers who had received their dismissal : and therefore, if the son of a family bequeath his castrensi or military estate, it will pass to his instituted heir : but, if such son die intestate without children or brothers, his estate will then pass of common right to his father, (or other paternal ascendants.) We may hence infer, that whatever a soldier, although under power, hath acquired by military service, cannot be taken from him even by his father ; whose creditors cannot sell it, or otherwise disturb the son in his possession ; and what is thus acquired is not liable to be shared in common with brothers, upon the demise of the father, but remains the sole property of him, who acquired it : although by the civil law, the peculia, or estates of those, who are under power, are reckoned among the wealth of their parents ; in the same manner as the peculium of a slave is esteemed the property of his master. But those estates must be excepted, which by the constitutions of the emperors, and chiefly by our own, are prohibited for divers reasons to be acquired for parents. Upon the whole, if the son of a family, neither possessed of a military or quasi-military estate, make a testament, it will not be valid, even though he be afterwards emancipated, and sui juris before his death.

Tranjani : postea verò subscriptione Divi Hadriani etiam dimissis à militia, id est, veteranis, concessum est. Itaque, siquidem fecerint de castrensi peculio testamentum, pertinebit hoc ad eum, quem hæredem reliquerunt : si verò intestati decesserint nullis liberis vel fratribus superstitibus, ad parentes eorum, jure communi pertinebit. Ex hoc intelligere possumus, quod in castris adquisierit miles, qui in potestate patris est, neque ipsum patrem adimere posse, neque patris creditores id vendere, vel alitèr inquietare, neque patre mortuo cum fratribus commune esse ; sed scilicèt proprium esse ejus, qui id in castris adquisierit : quanquàm jure civili omnium, qui in potestate parentum sunt, peculia, perindè in bonis parentum computentur, ac servorum peculia in bonis dominorum numerantur : exceptis videlicèt iis, quæ ex sacris constitutionibus, et præcipuè nostris, propter diversas causas non acquiruntur. Prætèr hos igitur, qui castrense peculium vel quasi castrense habent, si quis alius filius-familias testamentum fecerit, inutile est ; licet suæ potestatis factus decesserit.

De impubere et furioso.

§ I. Præterea testamentum facere non possunt impuberes; quia nullum eorum animi iudicium est. Item furiosi; quia mente carent. Nec ad rem pertinet, si impubes postea pubes, aut furiosus postea compos mentis factus fuerit, et decesserit. Furiosi autem, si per id tempus fecerint testamentum, quo furor eorum intermissus est, jure testati esse videntur; certè eo, quod ante furorem fecerint, testamento valente, nam neque testamentum rectè factum neque ullum aliud negotium rectè gestum, postea furor interveniens perimit.

§ 1. A person within the age of puberty, cannot make a good testament; because he is not supposed to possess the requisite judgment of mind; so of a madman, inasmuch as he is deprived of his senses. Nor is it material though the minor arrive at puberty before his death; or the madman regain his senses, and then die. But, if he make his will during a lucid interval, he is a legal testator; for it is certain that a testament which a man hath made before he was seized with madness, is good: for a subsequent fit of frenzy can neither invalidate a regular testament or any other regular transaction.

De prodigo.

§ II. Item prodigus, cui bonorum suorum administratio interdicta est, testamentum facere non potest: sed id, quod antè fecerit, quam interdictio bonorum suorum ei fiat, ratum est.

§ 2. A prodigal also, who is interdicted from the management of his own affairs, cannot make a testament: but if it were made before such interdiction, it is valid.

De surdo et muto.

§ III. Item surdus et mutus non semper testamentum facere possunt. Utique autem de eo surdo loquimur, qui omninò non exaudit, non qui tardè exaudit. Nam et mutus is intelligitur, qui eloqui nihil potest, non qui tardè loquitur. Sæpè enim etiam, literati homines variis casibus et audiendiet loquendi facultatem amittunt. Undè nostra constitutio etiam his subvenit, ut, certis casibus et modis, secun-

§ 3. A man deaf and dumb is not always capable of making a testament: but this must be understood of one, who is so deaf as to be unable to hear at all, and not of a mere thickness of hearing: and of that dumbness which prevents all utterance, and not of a mere difficulty of speech: for it often happens, that men of learning lose the faculty of hearing and speaking by various misfortunes; therefore our constitution comes in aid of all such persons, and permits them, in certain cases to make testaments, and do many other acts. observing the rules therein laid down. But, if any man after making his testament, become deaf or mute by reason of ill health or any other accident, his testament will remain good notwithstanding.

De cæco.

§ IV. Cæcus autem non potest facere testamentum, nisi per observationem, quam lex Divi Justiniani patris nostri introduxit.

§ 4. A blind man cannot make a will unless observing the rules which the law of the emperor Justin our father, has introduced.

De eo, qui est apud hostes.

§ V. Ejus, qui apud hostes est, testamentum, quod ibi fecit, non valet, quamvis redierit : sed quod, dum in civitate fuerat, fecit, sive redierit, valet, jure postliminii; sive illic decesserit, valet ex lege Cornelia.

§ 5. The testament of a captive is not valid, if made during his captivity; even although he live to return. But if made while in the city, it is good; either by the jus postliminii, if the prisoner return: or by the law Cornelia, if he die captive.

Jus vetus de liberis in potestate.

NON tamen, ut omninò valeat testamentum, sufficit hæc observatio quam supra exposuimus: sed, qui filium in potestate habet, curare debet, ut eum hæredem insti-

The solemnities of law, before explained, are not alone sufficient to make a testament valid. For he who has a son under his power, should take care either to institute tuat, vel exhæredem eum nominatim faciat. Alioqui, si eum silentio præterierit, inutilitè testabitur : adeò quidem ut, si vivo patre filius mortuus sit, nemo hæres ex eo testamento existere possit : quia scilicèt ab initio non constiterit testamentum. Sed non ita de filiabus, et aliis per virilem sexum descendentibus liberis utriusque sexus, antiquitati fuerat observatum : sed, si non fuerant scripti hæredes scriptæve, vel exhæredati exhæredatæve testamentum quidem non infirmabatur, jus tamen accrescendi eis ad certam portionem præstabatur. Sed nec nominatim eas personas exhæredare parentibus necesse erat, sed licebat inter cæteros hoc facere. Nominatim autem quis exhæredari videtur, sive ita exhæredetur, Titius filius meus exhæres esto, sive ita filius meus exhæres esto, non adjecto proprio nomine : scilicèt, si alius filius non extet.

him his heir, or to disinherit him by name : for if he pass over his son in silence, the testament will have no effect. And even if the son die living the father, yet no one can take upon himself the heirship by virtue of such a testament, inasmuch as it was null from the beginning. But the ancients did not observe this rule in regard to daughters and grand-children of either sex, though descended from the male line ; for although these were neither instituted heirs, or disinherited, yet the testament was not invalidated ; because a right of accretion intitled them to a certain portion of the inheritance : parents were therefore not necessitated to disinherit these children nominally, but might do it inter cæteros. A child is nominally disinherited, if the words of the will are let Titius my son be disinherited ; or even thus ; let my son be disinherited, without the addition of a proper name, provided the testator had no other son living.

De posthumis.

§ I. Posthumi quoque liberi vel hæredes instituti debent vel exhæredari : et in eo par omnium conditio est ; quod et filio posthumo, et quolibet ex cæteris liberis, sive feminini sexus sive masculini præterito, valet quidem testamentum, sed postea, agnatione posthumi sive posthumæ, rumpitur, et eâ ratione totum infirmatur. Ideòque, si mulier, ex quâ posthumous aut posthumus sperabatur, abortum fecerit, nihil impedimento est scriptis hæ-

§ 1. Also posthumous children should either be instituted heirs, or disinherited : and in this the condition of all children is equal : but, if a posthumous son, or any posthumous descendant in the right line, male or female, be pretermitted, the testament will nevertheless be valid at the time of making it ; but, by the subsequent birth of a child of either sex, it will be annulled. And therefore, if a woman from whom a posthumous child is expected, should redibus ad hæreditatem adeundam. Sed fœminini quidem sexûs personæ vel nominatim vel inter cæteros exhæredari solebant : dùm tamèn, si inter cæteros exhæredarentur, aliquid eis legaretur, nè viderentur præteritis esse per oblivionem. Masculos verò posthumos, id est, filios et deinceps, placuit non aliter rectè exhæredari, nisi nominatim exhæredarentur, hoc scilicèt modo, quicumque mihi filius genitus fuerit, exhaeres esto.

miscarry nothing can prevent the written heirs from entering upon the inheritance. But posthumous females may be either nominally disinherited, or inter cæteros by a general clause : yet, if disinherited inter cæteros, something must be left them to show they were not omitted through forgetfulness. But male posthumous children, i. e. sons, and their descendants in the direct line, cannot be disinherited otherwise, than nominally in this form ; whatever son is hereafter born to me, I disinherit him.

De quasi posthumis.

§ II. Posthumorum autem loco sunt et hi, qui in sui hæredis locum succedendo, quasi agnascendo, fiunt parentibus sui hæredes : ut ecchè, si quis filium, et ex eo nepotem nepotemve in potestate habeat, quia filius gradu præcedit, is solus jura sui hæredis habet ; quamvis nepos quoque et neptis ex eo in eadem potestate sint. Sed, si filius ejus vivo eo moriatur, aut quâlibet aliâ ratione exeat de potestate ejus incipit nepos neptisve in ejus locum succedere, et eo modo jura suorum hæredum quasi agnatione nanciscitur. Ne ergò eo modo rumpatur ejus testamentum sicut ipsum filium vel hæredem institutere vel nominatim exhæredare debet, nenon jure faciat testamentum ; ita et nepotem nepotemve ex filio necesse est ei vel hæredem instituere vel exhæredare ; ne fortè eo vivo, filio mortuo, succedendo in locum ejus nepos, neptisve, quasi agnascendo, rumpat tes-

§ 2. Those are reckoned in the place of posthumous children, who, succeeding in the stead of proper heirs, become by agnation, or quasi-birth, proper heirs to their parents : thus, if Titius have a son under his power, and by him a grand-son, or grand-daughter, then would the son because he is first in degree, have the sole right of a proper heir, although the grand-son, or grand-daughter by that son, is under the same parental power. But, if the son of Titius should die in his father's lifetime, or should by any other means cease to be under his father's power, the grand-son or grand-daughter would succeed in his place ; and would thus by what may be called a quasi birth obtain the right of a proper heir. Therefore, as it behoves a testator for his own security, either to institute or disinherit his son, lest his testament should be annulled, so it is equally necessary for him either to institute or disinherit his grand-son or grand-daughter by that son, lest, if his son should die in his (the testator's) life-time, his grand-son or grand-daughter, succeeding to the place of his son, should make void his testament by quasi agnation. This has been introduced by the law Julia Velleia, in which is set forth a form of disinheriting quasi-posthumous, like that of posthumous children.

De emancipatis.

§ III. Emancipatos liberos jure civili neque hæredes instituere, neque exhæredare, necesse est: quia non sunt sui hæredes. Sed prætor omnes, tam fœminini sexûs quam masculini, si hæredes non instituantur, exhæredari jubet; virilis sexus nominatim, fœminini vero inter cæteros: quia, si neque hæredes instituti fuerunt, neque ita (ut diximus) exhæredati, promittit eis prætor contra tabulas testamenti, bonorum possessionem.

§ 3. The civil law does not make it necessary, either to institute emancipated children heirs, or to disinherit them in a testament; inasmuch as they are not sui hæredes, i. e. proper heirs. But the prætor ordains, that all children male or female, if they be not instituted heirs, shall be disinherited; the males nominally; the females inter cæteros: for, if children have neither been instituted heirs, nor properly disinherited in manner before mentioned, the prætor gives them possession of the goods, contrary to the testament.

De adoptivis.

§ IV. Adoptivi liberi, quamdiu sunt in potestate patris adoptivi, ejusdem juris habentur, cujus sunt justis nuptiis quæsi: itaque hæredes instituendi vel exhæredandi sunt, secundum ea, quæ de naturalibus exposuimus. Emancipati vero à patre adoptivo, neque jure civili, neque eo jure, quod ad edictum prætoris attinet, inter liberos connumerantur. Quâ ratione acci-

§ 4. Adopted children, while under the power of their adoptive father, are intitled to the rights of children born in lawful matrimony: and therefore they must either be instituted heirs, or disinherited, according to the rules laid down respecting natural (legitimate) children. But neither by the civil law, or by prætorian equity, are children emancipated by an adoptive father, dit, ut ex diverso, quod ad naturalem parentem attinet, quamdiù quidem sunt in adoptivâ familiâ, extraneorum numero habeantur, ut eos neque hæredes instituere, neque exhæredare, necesse sit: cum verò emancipati fuerint ab adoptivo patre, tunc incipiant in eâ causâ esse, in quâ futuri essent, si à naturali patre emancipati fuissent.

numbered among his natural or legitimate children, so as to partake of their rights: hence adopted children, while in adoption, are reputed strangers to their natural parents, who need not institute them heirs, or disinherit them: but, when emancipated by their adoptive father, they are in the same state, in which they would have been, if emancipated by their natural father.

Jus novum.

§ 5. These were the rules of old times. But we (not thinking, that any distinction can reasonably be made between the two sexes, inasmuch as they equally contribute to the procreation of the species, and because, by the ancient law of the twelve tables, all children, were equally called to the succession ab intestato, which law the prætors seem afterwards to have followed) have by our constitution introduced the same law both as to sons and daughters, and also to all other descendants in the male line, whether in being, or posthumous: so that all children whether they are proper heirs or emancipated, must either be instituted heirs or disinherited by name: and they possess the same influence as to avoiding the testament of the parent, and destroying the heirship, as the legitimate or emancipated children have, whether appointed as living or as posthumous children. In respect of adopted children, we have introduced certain regulations, which are contained in our constitution of adoptions.

De testamento militis.

§ VI. Sed, si in expeditione occupatus miles testamentum faciat, et liberos suos jam natos vel posthumos nominatim non exhæredaverit, sed silentio præterierit, non ignorans, an habeat liberos, silentium ejus pro exhæredatione nominatim facta valere, constitutionibus principum cautum est.

§ 6. If a soldier in actual service make his testament, and neither disinherit his children already born, or his posthumous children by name, but pass them over in silence, although it be known to him, that he has such children, it is provided by the constitutions of the emperors, that such silence shall be equal to a nominal disinherison.

De testamento matris, aut avi materni.

§ VII. Mater vel avus maternus necesse non habent liberos suos aut hæredes instituere, aut exhæredare, sed possunt eos silentio omittere: nam silentium matris aut avi materni, et cæterorum per matrem ascendendum, tantum facit, quantum exhæredatio patris. Nèque enim matri filium filiamve, neque avo materno nepotem neptemve ex filiâ, si eum eamve hæredem non instituat, exhæredare necesse est, sive de jure civili quæramus, sive de edicto prætoris, quo prætor præteritis liberis contra tabulas bonorum possessionem promittit: sed aliud eis adminiculum servatur, quod paulò post vobis manifestum fiet.

§ 7. Neither a mother, nor a grandfather on the mother's side, need expressly institute their children heirs, or disinherit them, but may pass them by in silence; for the silence of a mother, a maternal grandfather, and of all other ascendants on the mother's side, is equivalent to an actual disinherison by a father. For a mother is not obliged to disinherit her children, if she does not think proper to institute them her heirs: neither is a maternal grandfather under a necessity of instituting or of disinheriting his grandson or granddaughter by a daughter; inasmuch as this is not required either by the civil law, or the edict of the prætor, which gives possession of goods contrary to the testament, to those children, who have been passed over in silence. But children, in this case, are not without remedy against the testament of their mother or maternal grandfather, which shall be shewn hereafter.

HÆREDES instituere permisservos; et tam proprios, quam alie-nos. Proprios autem olim quidem secundum plurimum sententias non aliter, quam cum libertate, rectè instituere licebat: hodiè verò eti-am sinè libertate ex nostra constitu-tione eos hæredes instituere permissum est. Quod non per innovatio-usierat, et Atilicino placuisse, Paulus suis libris, quos tam ad Masuri-um Sabinum quam ad Plautium scripsit, refert. Proprius autem servus etiam is intelligitur, in quo nudam proprietatem testator habet, alio usumfructum habente. Est tamen casus, in quo nec cum libertate utiliter servus à dominâ hæres instituitur, ut constitutione Divorum Severi et Antonini cavetur, cujus verba hæc sunt. Servum, adul-terio maculatum, non jure testa-am ab ea muliere videri, quæ rea fuerat ejusdem criminis postulata, rationis est. Quare sequitur, ut, in eundem a domina collata, hæredis institutio nullius momenti habeatur.

Alienus servus etiam is intelligitur, in quo usumfructum testator habet.

A man may appoint slaves, as well as freemen, to be his heirs by testament; and may nominate the slaves of another as well as his own: yet, according to the opinion of many, no master could formerly make his own slaves his heirs, without freeing them: but, at present, by our constitution, masters may do this: which we have introduced, not for the sake of innovation, but because it seemed most just; and because Paulus, in his commentaries upon Sabinus and Plautius, affirms, that this was also the opinion of Atilicinus. We call a slave proprius servus, if the testator had only a naked property in him, the usufruct being in another. But, in a constitution of the emperors Severus and Antoninus, there is a case, in which a slave was not permitted to be instituted heir by his owner, although his liberty was expressly given to him. The words are—
It is consonant to right reason, that no slave, accused of adultery with his mistress, shall be allowed, before a sentence of acquittal, to be made free by that mistress, who is alleged to be a partner in the crime. Hence if a mistress institute such a slave to be her heir, it is of no avail.
Alienus servus is one of whom the testator had only the usufruct.

Si servus hæres institutis in eadem causa manserit, vel non.

§ I. Servus autem à domino suo hæres institutus, siquidem in eadem causâ manserit, fit ex testamento liber, hæresque ejus necessarius. Si verò à vivo testatore manumissus fuerit, suo arbitrio adire hæreditatem potest; quia non fit hæres necessarius, cum utrumque ex domini testamento non consequatur. Quod si alienatus fuerit, jussu novi domini adire hæreditatem debet, et eâ ratione per eum dominus fit hæres: nam ipse alienatus neque liber, neque hæres esse potest; etiamsi cum libertate hæres institutus fuerit: destitisse enim à libertatis datione videtur dominus, qui eum alienavit. Alienus quoque servus hæres institutus, si in eadem causa duraverit, jussu ejus domini adire hæreditatem debet. Si verò alienatus fuerit ab eo, aut vivo testatore, aut post mortem ejus, antequam adeat, debet jussu novi domini adire. At, si manumissus est vivo testatore, vel mortuo, antequam adeat, suo arbitrio adire potest hæreditatem.

§ 1. A slave instituted by his master, remaining in slavery becomes free at the death of his master by virtue of the testament, and his necessary heir. But if he be manumitted in the lifetime of his master, he may accept or refuse the inheritance; for he does not become a necessary heir, since he does not obtain both his liberty and the inheritance by virtue of the testament. But, if he should be aliened, he cannot enter upon the inheritance unless at the command of his new master, who though his slave may become the heir of the testator. For a slave aliened cannot obtain his liberty, or take an inheritance to his own use, by virtue of the treatment of the master, who transferred him, although his freedom was expressly given by such testament; because a master who has aliened his slave, seems to have renounced the intention of enfranchising him. And, when the slave of another is appointed heir, but remains in slavery, he cannot take the inheritance, but by his master's order: and, if the slave be aliened in the lifetime of the testator, or even after his death, before he has actually taken the inheritance he must accept or refuse it, at the command of his new master. But, if the slave be enfranchised, living the testator, or after his death, before he has accepted the heirship, he may enter upon the inheritance or not, at his own option.

De servo de hæreditario.

§ II. Servus etiam alienus post domini mortem rectè hæres instituitur: quia et cum hæreditariis servis testamenti factio est. Nondum enim adita hæreditas, personæ vicem sustinet non hæredis futuri, sed defuncti: cum etiam ejus, qui in utero est, servus rectè hæres instituitur.

§ 2. The slave of another may legally be instituted an heir, after the death of his master; for slaves of an inheritance not entered upon, may take by testament: for an inheritance, not yet entered on, represents the person of the deceased, and not of the future heir: thus the slave even of a child in the womb, may be constituted an heir.

De servo plurium.

§ III. Servus autem plurium, cum quibus testamenti factio est, ab extraneo institutus hæres unicuique dominorum, cujus jussu adierit, pro portione domini acquirit hæreditatem.

§ 3. If the slave of many masters all capable of taking by testament, is instituted heir by a stranger, he acquires a part of the inheritance for each master, who commanded him to take it, according to the several proportions of property.

De numero hæredum.

§ IV. Et unum hominem, et plures, usque in infinitum, quot usque hæredes velit, facere licet.

§ 4. A testator may appoint one heir, or as many heirs as he pleases in infinitum.

De divisione hæreditatis.

§ V. Hæreditas plerumque dividitur in duodecim uncias; quæ assis appellatione continentur. Habent autem et hæ partes propria nomina ab uncia usque ad assem; ut puta hæc, sextans, quadrans, triens, quincunx, semis, septunx, bes, dodrans, dextans, deunx. Non autem utique semper duodecim uncias esse oportet: nam tot unciae assem efficiunt, quot testator voluerit: et, si unum tantum quis eum semisse (verbi gratiâ) hæredem scripserit

§ 5. An inheritance is generally divided into twelve unciae, that is, parts or ounces, all of which are comprehended under one total, termed an As: and each of these parts from the uncia to the As, has its peculiar name: viz.

Sextans—a sixth part, or 2 ounces.

Quadrans—a fourth, or 3 ounces.

Triens—a third, or 4 ounces.

Quincunx—five ounces.

Semis—a moiety, or 6 ounces.

Septunx—seven ounces.

totus as in semisse erit; neque enim idem ex parte testatus, et ex parte intestatus, decedere potest, nisi sit miles, cujus sola voluntas in testanda spectatur. Et è contrario potest quis in quantascunque voluerit, plurimas uncias suam hæreditatem dividere.

Bes—two thirds, or 8 ounces; quasi bis triens.

Dodrans—nine ounces, or three fourths; quasi, dempto quadrante, As.

Dextans—ten ounces; quasi dempto sextante, As.

Deunx—eleven ounces out of twelve; quasi, demptâ unciâ, As.

But it is not necessary, that an As, or total, should always be divided into twelve parts: for an As may consist of what parts the testator pleases; and, if a man name but one heir, and appoint him ex semisse i. e. the heir of six parts; yet the whole As will be included; for no man can die partly testate and partly intestate, except a soldier, whose intention is solely to be regarded. And a testator may also divide his estate into as many parts, as he thinks convenient.

De portionibus sigulorum hæredum. Si testator assem non diveserit, aut partes in quorundam persona non ultra assem expresserit.

§ VI. Si plures instituantur hæredes, ita demùm in hoc casu partium distributio necessaria est, si nolit testator, eos ex æquis partibus hæredes esse. Satis enim constat, nullis partibus nominatis, ex æquis partibus eos hæredes esse. Partibus autem in quorundam personis expressis, si quis alius sinè parte nominatus erit, siquidem aliqua pars assi deerit, ex eâ parte hæres fit. Et, si plures sinè parte scripti sunt, omnes in eandem partem concurrunt. Si verò totus As completus sit, ii, qui nominatim expressas

§ 6. If many heirs be appointed, it is necessary to make a division of the effects, if it be not intended, that all should take in equal portions; which must be the case if no distribution be made. But if the shares of some should be expressed, and a share or shares remain undisposed of, such share or shares will belong equally to him or them whose shares are not specified. But, if a whole As, or inheritance, be given among some of the nominated heirs, yet they, whose shares are mentioned, are entitled only to a moiety, and he partes habent, in dimidiam partem vocantur; et ille, vel illi omnes, in alteram dimidiam. Nec interest, primus an medius, an novissimus, sinè parte hæres scriptus sit: ea enim pars data intelligitur, quæ vacat.

or they, whose shares are not mentioned, are called to the succession of the other moiety. And, when a whole inheritance is not given, it is immaterial whether an heir, whose share is not specified, hold the first, middle, or last place in the nomination: for he is equally intitled to the part not bequeathed.

Si pars vacet, aut exuperet.

§ 7. Let us inquire in case a part should remain unbequeathed, and yet a certain portion should be given to each nominated heir: as if three should be instituted, and a fourth given to each. It is clear in this case that the undisposed part would vest in each, in proportion to his share bequeathed: and that each would be reputed the written heir of a third. And, on the contrary if many are nominated heirs in certain portions, so as to exceed the As, then each heir must suffer a defalcation pro ratâ—for example, if four are instituted, and a third be given to each, then this disposition would be the same as if each of the written heirs had been instituted to a fourth only.

Si plures uncie quam duodecim distributæ sunt.

§ VIII. Et, si plures uncie, quam duodecim, distributæ sint, is, qui sinè parte institutus est, quod dupondio deest, habebit. Indemque erit, si dupondius expletus sit. Quæ omnes partes ad assem postea

§ 8. If more than twelve ounces are bequeathed, then he, who is instituted without any prescribed share, shall be intitled to what remains of a dupondius; that is, of twenty-four parts: and if more than revocantur, quamvis sint plurium unciarum.

twenty-four parts are bequeathed, then the heir, who is nominated without any determinate share, is intitled to the remainder of a tri-pondius, i. e. of thirty-six parts or ounces. But all these parts are afterwards reduced to twelve.

De modis instituendi.

§ IX. Hæres et purè et sub conditione institui potest; ex certo tempore, aut ad certum tempus, non potest: veluti, post quinquenium, quam moriar; vel ex calendis illis: vel, usque ad calendis illa hæres esto. Denique diem adjectum haberi pro supervacuo placet, et perindè esse, ac si purè hæres institutes esset.

§ 9. An heir may be constituted simply, or conditionally—but not from or to any certain period: as, be my heir after five years to be computed from my death—or—from the calends of such a month—or—until the calends of such a month. For time, thus added, is in law deemed void, and the appointment becomes unconditional.

De conditione impossibili.

§ X. Impossibilis conditio in institutionibus et legatis, nec non in fideicommissis et libertatibus, pro non scriptâ habetur.

§ 10. An impossible condition in the institution of heirs, legatees, or trustees, or the conferring of liberty, is treated as unwritten or void.

De pluribus conditionibus.

§ XI. Si plures conditiones in institutionibus adscriptæ sunt, siquidem conjunctim, ut puta, si illud et illud factum fuerit, omnibus parendum est: si separatim, veluti, si illud aut illud factum erit, cui libet conditioni obtemperare satis est.

§ 11. If many conditions be jointly required in the appointment, as if this and that thing be done, then both must be complied with. But, if the conditions be placed in the disjunctive, as, if this, or that be done, it will then be sufficient to obey either.

De his, quos nunquam testator vidit.

§ XII. Li, quos nunquam testator vidit, hæredes institui possunt, veluti si fratris filios peregrinantes, ignorans qui essent, hæredes instinot where they are; for the want of this knowledge will not vitiate the institution.

DE VULGARI SUBSTITUTIONE.

D. xxviii. T. 6. C. vi. T. 25 et 26.

De pluribus gradibus hæredum.

POTEST autem quis in testamento suo plures gradus hæredum facere; ut puta si ille hæres non erit, ille hæres esto. Et deinceps, in quantum velit, testator substituere potest: ut novissimo loco, in subsidem, vel servum, necessarium hæredem instituere possit.

A man by testament may appoint many degrees of heirs; as thus: if Titius will not, let Seius be my heir. And he may proceed in such a substitution as far as he shall think proper; and lastly, in default of all others, he may constitute a slave his necessary heir.

De numero hæredum in singulis gradibus.

§ I. Et plures in unius locum possunt substituti, vel unus in pluri-um, vel singuli in singulorum, vel invicem ipsi, qui hæredes instituti sunt.

§ 1. A testator may substitute many in the place of one, or one in the place of many, or one in the place of each, or he may substitute even his instituted heirs reciprocally to one another.

Quam partem singuli substituti accipiant, si partes in substitutione expressæ non sint.

§ II. Et, si ex disparibus partibus hæredes scriptos invicem substituerit, et nullam mentionem partium in substitutione habuerit, eas videtur in substitutione partes dedisse, quas in institutione expressit: et ita Divus Pius rescripsit.

seems to have given the same shares by the substitution, which he gave by the institution; and thus the emperor Antoninus ordained.

Si cohæredi substituto alius substituatur.

§ III. Sed, si instituto hæredi, cohærede substituto dato, alius ei substitutus fuerit, Divi Severus et Antoninus sinè distinctione rescripserunt, ad utramque partem substitutum admitti.

§ 3. If a co-heir be substituted to an instituted heir, and a third person to that co-heir, the emperors, Severus and Antoninus, have by rescript ordained, that such substituted person, shall be admitted to the portions of both the co-heirs without distinction.

Si quis servo, qui liber existimabatur, instituto substitutus fuerit.

§ 4. If a testator constitute the slave of another his heir, supposing him free, and add, if he does not become my heir, I substitute Mævius in his place; then, if that slave should afterwards enter upon the inheritance at the command of his master, Mævius the substitute, would be admitted to a moiety. For the words, if he do not become my heir, in regard to him, whom the testator knew to be under the dominion of another, are taken to mean, if he will neither become my heir himself, nor cause another to be my heir: but in regard to him, whom the testator supposed to be free, they imply this condition; viz. if my heir will neither acquire the inheritance for himself, nor for him to whose dominion he may afterwards become subject. But it was determined by Tiberius, the emperor, in the case of his own slave Parthenius, that a substitute in such a case should be admitted to a moiety.

TITULUS DECIMUS-SEXTUS.

DE PUPILLARI SUBSTITUTIONE.

D. xxviii. T. 6. C. vi. T. 26.

Forma, effectus, origo, et ratio pupillaris substitutionis.

LIBERIS suis impuberibus, quos in potestate quis habet, non solum ita, ut supra diximus, substituere potest, id est, ut, si hæres ei non existerint, alius sit ei hæres; sed eo amplius, ut, si hæres ei extiterint, et adhuc impuberes mortui fuerint, sit eis aliquis hæres: veluti si quis dicat hoc modo: Titius filius hæres mihi esto; et, si filius mihi hæres non erit, sive hæres, erit, et prius moriatur, quam in suam tutelam venerit, id est, antequam pubes factus sit, tunc Seius hæres esto. Quo casu, siquidem non extiterit hæres filius, tunc substitutus patri fit hæres: si verò extiterit hæres filius, et ante pubertatem decesserit, ipsi filio fit hæres substitutus. Nam moribus institutum est, ut, cum ejus ætatis filii sint, in qua ipsi sibi testamentum facere non possunt, parentes eis faciant.

A parent can substitute to his children, within puberty, and under his power, not only in manner before-mentioned, as, if my children will not, let some other person be my heir; but he may write if my children become my heirs, but die within puberty, let another become their heir: for example; let Titius, my son, be my heir; and, if he should refuse, or if accepting, he should die before he ceases to be under tutelage, [i. e. before he arrives at puberty,] let Seius be my heir. In this case, if the son do not enter upon the inheritance, or, if taking the inheritance, he dies a pupil before puberty, the substitute is then heir to the son. For custom has ordained, that parents may make wills for their children, who are not of age to make wills for themselves.

De substitutione mente capti.

§ I. Quâ ratione excitati, etiam constitutionem posuimus in nostro codice, quâ prospectum est, ut, si qui mente captos habeant filios, vel nepotes, vel pronepotes, cujuscunque sexus vel gradus, liceat eis, etsi puberes sint, ad exemplum pupillaris substitutionis, certas personas

§ 1. Reasoning in the same way, we have provided by a constitution inserted in our code, that, if a man have children, grand-children, or great-grand-children, disordered in their senses, he may substitute to such children, in the manner of pupillary substitution, although substituere: sin autem resipuerint eandem substitutionem infirmari sancimus: et hoc ad exemplum pupillaris substitutionis, quæ, postquam pupillus adoleverit, infirmatur.

they are arrived at puberty. But this species of substitution shall be void on their recovery; like pupillary substitution, which ceases when the minor attains to puberty.

Proprium pupillaris substitutionis.

§ II. Igitur in pupillari substitutione secundum præfatum modum ordinata duo quodammodo sunt testamenta, alterum patris, alterum filii; tanquam si ipse filius sibi hæredem instituisset: aut certè unum testamentum est duarum causarum, id est, duarum hæreditatum.

§ 2. In a pupillary substitution, so made, there are in a manner two testaments, one of the father, the other of the son; as if the son had instituted an heir for himself: at least there is one testament, containing a disposition of two inheritances.

Alia forma substituendi pupillariter.

§ III. Sin autem quis ita formidolosus sit, ut timeat, ne filius suus pupillus adhuc ex eo, quod palam substitutum acceperit, post obitum ejus periculo insidarium subjaceat, vulgarem quidem substitutionem palam facere, et in primis testamenti partibus ordinare, debet: illam autem substitutionem, per quam, si hæres extiterit pupillus et intra pubertatem decesserit, substitutus vocatur separatim in inferioribus partibus scribere debet, eamque partem proprio lino propriæque ceræ consignare; et in priore parte testamenti cavere, ne inferiores tabulæ, vivo filio et adhuc impubere, aperiantur. Illud palam est, non idè minus valere substitutionem impuberis filii, quod in iisdem tabulis scripta sit, quibus sibi quisque hæredem instituisset; quamvis pupillo hoc, periculosum sit.

§ 3. If a testator be apprehensive, lest, at his death, his son, being yet a pupil, should be liable to imposition if a substitute should be publicly given to him, he ought to insert a vulgar substitution in the first tablet of his testament; and to write that substitution, in which a substitute is named, if his son should die within puberty, in the lower tablet, which ought to be separately tied up and sealed: it behoves him also to insert a clause in the first part of his testament, forbidding the lower part to be opened, while his son is alive and within the age of puberty. A substitution to a son within puberty is valid, although written on the same tablet, in which the testator hath appointed him his heir; it is however unsafe to the pupil.

Quibus substituitur.

§ 4. Parents may not only substitute to their children within puberty, if such children become their heirs, and die within puberty; but they may substitute to their disinherited children; and therefore, whatever a disinherited child, within the age of puberty, may have acquired by inheritances, by legacies, or by the gifts of relations and friends the whole will become the property of the substitute. All we have said concerning the substitution of pupils, instituted heirs, or disinherited children, is understood to extend also to posthumous children.

Pupillare testamentum sequela paterni.

§ V. Liberis autem suis testamentum nemo facere potest, nisi et sibi faciat; nam pupillare testamentum pars et sequela est paterni testamenti: adeo ut, si patris testamentum non valeat, nec filii quidem valebit.

§ 5. No parent can make a testament for his children, unless he hath made a testament for himself: for the pupillary testament is a part and consequence of the testament of the parent, insomuch that, if the testament of the father be not valid, neither will that of the son.

Quod liberis substituitur.

§ VI. Vel singulis autem liberis, vel ei, qui eorum novissimus impubes morietur, substitui potest. Singulis quidem, si neminem eorum intestatum decedere voluerit: novissimo, si jus legitimarum hæreditatum integrum inter eos custodiri velit.

§ 6. A parent may make a pupillary substitution to each of his children, or to him, who shall die the last within puberty. To each, if he be unwilling, that any of them should die intestate; to the last who shall die within puberty, if he wish that they should preserve among them the intire right of succession.

§ VII. Substituatur autem impuberi aut nominatim, veluti, Titius hæres esto : aut generaliter, ut, Quisquis mihi hæres erit. Quibus verbis vocantur ex substitutione, impubere mortuo filio, illi, qui et scripti sunt hæredes, et extiterunt, et pro quâ parte hæredes facti sunt.

§ 7. A substitution may be made to a child within puberty, by name, as, let Titius be heir ; or generally—Whoever shall be my heir, let him be substitute to my son, if he die within puberty. By these words, all, who have been instituted, and acted as heirs to the father, are called, by substitution, to the inheritance of the son, if he should die within puberty, in proportion to the share assigned to each in the father's will.

Quomodo substitutio pupillaris finitur.

§ VIII. Masculo igitur usque ad quatuordecim annos substitui potest : fœminæ usque ad duodecim annos. Et, si hoc tempus excesserint, substitutio evanescit.

§ 8. A pupillary substitution may be made to males, until they reach fourteen : and to females, until they have completed their twelfth year : after which the substitution becomes extinct.

Quibus pupillariter non substituatur.

§ IX. Extraneo verò vel filio puberi hæredi instituto ita substituere nemo potest, ut, si hæres extiterit, et intra aliquod tempus decesserit, alius ei sit hæres : sed hoc solum permissum est, ut eum per fideicommissum testator obliget alii hæreditatem ejus vel totam vel pro parte restituere : quod jus quale sit, suo loco trademus.

§ 9. A pupillary substitution cannot be made either to an instituted stranger, or instituted son, if past the age of puberty. But a testator may oblige his heir to give to another a part, or even the whole of the inheritance, by virtue of a fideicommissum, or gift in trust ; which we will treat of in its proper place.

TITULUS DECIMUS-SEPTIMUS.

QUIBUS MODIS TESTAMENTA INFIRMANTUR.

D. xxviii. T. 3.

Quibus modis testamenta infirmantur.

TESTAMENTUM jure factum usque eò valet, donec rumpatur, irritumve fiat.

A testament, legally made, remains valid, until it be either broken or rendered ineffectual.

Quando testamentum dicatur rumpi. Primum de adoptione.

§ I. Rumpitur autem testamentum, cum, in eodem statu manente testatore, ipsius testamenti jus vitatur. Si quis enim post factum testamentum adoptaverit sibi filium per imperatorum eum, qui est sui juris, aut per prætorem, secundum nostram constitutionem, eum, qui in potestate parentis fuerit, testamentum ejus rumpitur quasi agnatione sui hæredis.

§ 1. A testament is broken, when the force of it is destroyed, while the testator still remains in the same state. For, if, after making his testament he should arrogate an independent person, by licence from the emperor, or, in the presence of the prætor should adopt a child under the power of his natural parent, by virtue of our constitution, then that testament would be broken by this agnation or quasi-birth of a proper heir.

De posteriore testamento.

§ II. Posteriore quoque testamento quod jure perfectum est, superius rumpitur; nec interest, extiterit aliquis hæres ex eo, an non; hoc enim solum spectatur, an aliquo casu existere potuerit. Ideoque, si quis aut noluerit hæres esse, aut vivo testatore, aut post mortem ejus, antequam hæreditatem adiret, decesserit, aut conditione, sub quâ hæres institutus est, defectus sit, in his casibus pater-familias intestatus moritur. Nam et prius testamen-

§ 2. A former testament, may be broken by a subsequent one legally made, nor is it material, whether any heir, be nominated in the latter or not: for the only question is, whether an heir might have been made: therefore, if an instituted heir should renounce, or should die, living the testator; or after his death, and before he could enter upon the inheritance; or before the condition is accomplished, upon which he was instituted; in any of these cases, the tum non valet, ruptum à posteriore; et posterius æque nullas vires habet, cum ex eo nemo hæres extiterit.

testator would die intestate; for the first testament would be invalid, being broken by the second, and the second would be of as little force, for want of an heir.

De posteriore, in quo hæres certæ rei institutus.

§ III. Sed, si quis, priore testamento jure perfecto, posterius æque jure fecerit, etiam si ex certis rebus in eo hæredem instituerit, superius tamen testamentum sublatum esse, Divi Severus et Antoninus Augusti rescripserunt; cujus constitutionis verba et hic inseri jussimus, cum aliud quoque præterea in eâ constitutione expressum sit. Imperatores Severus et Antoninus Augusti Cocceio Campano. Testamentum secundo loco factum, licet in eo certarum rerum hæres scriptus sit, perinde jure valere, ac si rerum mentio facta non esset: sed et teneri hæredem scriptum, ut contentus rebus sibi datis, aut suppleta quarta ex lege Falcidia, hæreditatem restituat his qui in priore testamento scripti fuerant, propter inserta fidei-commissi verba, quibus ut valeret prius testamentum expressum est, dubitari non oportet. Et ruptum quidem testamentum hoc modo efficitur.

§ 3. If a man, having duly executed one testament, should make another equally good, and institute an heir in it to some particular things only, the emperors Severus and Antoninus have by rescript declared, that, in this case, the first will shall be considered as broken. We have commanded the words of this constitution to be here inserted, as it contains a further provision. The emperors Severus and Antoninus to Cocceius Campanus. A second testament, although the heir named in it, be instituted to particular things only, shall be as valid, as if they had not been specified; yet doubtless, the written heir must content himself either with the things given him, or with the fourth part, allowed by the Falcidian law, and shall be bound to restore the rest of the inheritance to the heirs instituted in the first testament, on account of words, denoting a trust, inserted in the second: by which words it is declared, that the first testament shall subsist. And, in this manner, a testament may be said to be broken or cancelled.

De testamento irrito ; et quibus modis fit irritum.

§ IV. Alio autem moda testamenta jure facta infirmantur ; veluti cum is, qui fecit testamentum, capite diminutus sit : quod, quibus modis accadat, primo libro retulimus.

§ 4. Testaments, legally made, are also invalidated, if the testator suffer diminution, (that is, change his condition :) in the first book (of these institutes,) we have shewn by what means diminution may happen.

Cur dicatur irritum.

§ 5. In case of diminution, testaments are said to become irrita, (ineffectual ;) although those which are broken, or which, from the beginning, were not legal, are equally so. We may also consider those testaments broken, which being at first legally made, are afterwards rendered ineffectual by diminution. But, as it is proper, that every particular defect should be distinguished by a particular appellation, those testaments, which are illegal in their formation, are termed null ; those which were at first legal, but afterwards lose their force, by some revocatory act of the testator, are said to be rupta, or broken ; and those, since the making whereof, the testator hath suffered a change of state, are irrita, or ineffectual.

Quibus modis convalescit.

§ VI. Non tamen per omnia inutilia sunt ea testamenta, quæ, ab initio jure facta, per capitis diminutionem irrita facta sunt : nam, si septem testium signis signata sunt, potest scriptus hæres, secundum tabulas testamenti, bonorum possessionem agnoscere, si modò defunctus et civis Romanus, et suæ potes-

§ 6. But a testament, at first legally made, and afterwards rendered ineffectual by diminution, may not be altogether void ; for the written heir is intitled to the possession of the goods, under the testament, if it appear, that it was sealed by seven witnesses, and that the testator was a Roman citizen, and not under tatis. mortis tempore fuerit. Nam, si ideo irritum factum sit testamentum, quia civitatem vel etiam libertatem testator amissit, aut quia in adoptionem se dedit, et mortis tempore in adoptivi patris potestate sit, non potest scriptus hæres secundum tabulas bonorum possessionem petere.

power, at the time of his death : but if a testament became void, because the testator had lost the right of a citizen, or his liberty, or had given himself in adoption, and at the time of his death continued under power of his adoptive father, then the written heir could not demand possession under it.

De nuda voluntate.

§ VII. Ex eo autem solo non potest infirmari testamentum, quod postea testator id noluerit valere ; usque adeo ut, si quis, post factum prius testamentum, posterius facere coeperit, et, aut mortalitate præventus, aut quia eum ejus rei poenituit, id non perfecerit, Divi Pertinacis oratione cautum sit, ne aliàs tabulæ priores, jure factæ, irritæ fiant, nisi sequentes jure ordinatæ et perfectæ fuerint : nam imperfectum testamentum sine dubio nullum est.

§ 7. A testament cannot be invalidated solely, because the testator was afterwards unwilling, that it should subsist: so that if a man, after making one testament, should begin another, and by reason of death or change of mind, should not proceed to perfect that testament, it is provided by the oration of the emperor Pertinax, that the first testament shall not be revoked, unless the second is both legal and perfect; for an imperfect testament is undoubtedly null.

§ 8. The emperor Pertinax hath declared by the same oration, that he would not take the inheritance of any testator, who left him his heir, because a law-suit was depending ; that he would never establish a will legally deficient in form, if he was upon that account instituted the heir ; that he would by no means suffer himself to be nominated heir by parol ; and that he would never derive emolument from any writing not authorised by strict rules of law.

The emperors Severus and Antoninus have also often issued rescripts to the same purpose: "for although, [say they,] we are not subject to the laws, yet we live in obedience to them."

TITULUS DECIMUS-OCTAVUS.

DE INOFFICIOSO TESTAMENTO.

D. v. T. 2. C. iii. T. 28.

Ratio hujus querelæ.

QUIA plerumque parentes sine causa liberos suos exhæredant vel omittunt, indictum est, ut de inofficioso testamento agere possint liberi, qui queruntur, aut iniquè se exhæredatos, aut iniquè præteritos; hoc colore, quasi non sanæ mentis fuerint, cum testamentum ordinarent. Sed hoc dicitur, non quasi verè furiosus sit; sed rectè quidem testamentum fecerit, non autem ex officio pietatis. Nam, si verè furiosus sit, nullum testamentum est.

Since parents often disinherit their children without cause, or omit to mention them in their testaments, it has therefore been introduced, that children, who have been unjustly disinherited, or omitted, may complain, that such testaments are inofficious, under colour, that their parents were not of sane mind, when they made them: not that the testator was really insane, for the testament may have been well made; but that it is not consistent with the duty of a parent. For, if a testator were really insane at the time, his testament is null.

Qui de inofficioso agunt.

§ 1. Non autem liberis tantum permissum est testamentum parentum inofficiosum accusare, verum etiam liberorum parentibus: soror autem et frater turpibus personis scriptis hæredibus, et sacris consti-

§ 1. Not children only are allowed to complain, that testaments are inofficious; for parents are permitted to do the same. Also the brothers and sisters of a testator, by the imperial constitutions, are preferred to infamous persons, if any such have been instituted heirs; but they are not therefore allowed to complain against any heir. Collaterals, beyond brothers and sisters, cannot sustain a complaint in this respect or succeed for themselves, (but though their right of complaining be not disputed, and the testament be annulled, yet those only can be benefited, who are the nearest in succession upon an intestacy.)

Qui alio jure veniunt, de inofficioso non agunt.

§ II. Tam autem naturales liberi, quam secundum nostræ constitutionis divisionem adoptati, ita demum de inofficioso testamento agere possunt, si nullo alio jure ad defuncti bona venire possint: nam, qui ad hæreditatem totam vel partem ejus, alio jure veniunt, de inofficioso agere non possunt. Posthumi quoque, qui nullo alio jure venire possunt, de inofficioso agere possunt.

§ 2. Adopted as well as natural children, according to our constitution, are admitted to complain against a testament as inofficious, if they can obtain the effects of the deceased no other way; but if they can obtain the whole or a part of the inheritance by any other means, they cannot pursue this remedy, Posthumous children also, who are unable to recover their inheritance by any other method, are allowed to urge this complaint.

De eo, cui testator aliquid reliquit.

§ III. Sed hæc ita accipienda sunt, si nihil eis penitus à testatoribus testamento relictum est: quod nostra constitutio ad verecundiam naturæ introduxit. Sin verò quantacunque pars hæreditatis, vel res, eis fuerit relicta, de inofficioso querela quiescente, id, quod eis deest, usque ad quartam legitimæ partis replentur, licet non fuerit adjectum,

§ 3. All this must be understood to take place only, when nothing hath been left by the will of the deceased; and this hath been introduced by our constitution, out of respect to parental authority and the ties of nature: for, if a single thing, or the least part of an inheritance, hath been bequeathed, the suit de inofficioso testamento is barred: but their legal portion, or fourth part, though not added by the testator, may be completed according to the arbitration of some person of approved character.

Si tutor, cui nihil a patre relictum, pupilli nomine legatum acceperit.

§ IV. Si tutor nomine pupilli, cujus tutelam gerebat, ex testamento patris sui legatum acceperit, cum nihil erat ipsi tutori relictum à patre suo, nihilominus poterit nomine suo de inofficioso patris testamento agere.

§ 4. If a tutor should accept a legacy in the name of his pupil, in consequence of a bequest made in the testament of such tutor's father, who left nothing to his son; the tutor may nevertheless complain in his own name against the testament of his father, as inofficious (or contrary to parental duty.)

Si de inofficioso nomine pupilli agens succubuerit.

§ V. Sed, si è contrario pupilli nomine, cui nihil relictum fuerat, de inofficioso egerit et superatus est ipse tutor, quod sibi in testamento eodem relictum est, non amittit.

§ 5. On the contrary, if a tutor should complain in the name of his pupil, against the testament of his pupil's father, who left nothing to his son as inofficious, and this testament should be confirmed, yet the tutor would not be barred, on account of this proceeding virtute officii, from claiming his own legacy under the same testament.

De quarta legitimæ partis.

§ VI. Igitur quartam quis debet habere, ut de inofficioso agere non possit, sive jure hæreditario, sive jure legati vel fidei-commissi, vel si mortis causâ ei quarta donata fuerit, vel inter vivos in iis tantum modo casibus, quorum mentionem nostra facit constitutio, vel aliis modis, qui in nostris constitutionibus continentur. Quod autem de quartâ diximus, ita intelligen-

§ 6. No person, entitled to a fourth can be barred from bringing a complaint (de inofficioso) of undutifulness, unless he hath received it either by being appointed heir, by having a legacy, or by means of a trust for his use; or unless his legal part hath been given him by donation mortis causâ or inter vivos, (in those cases, noticed by our constitution) or by any other means set forth in our ordinances. What we have said of the fourth or legal portion, is to be so understood, that, if there be more persons than one, who have a right to bring a plaint of undutifulness against a testament, yet one fourth will be sufficient, divided among them all in equal portions.

TITULUS DECIMUS-NONUS.

DE HÆREDUM QUALITATE ET DIFFERENTIA.

D. xxix. T. 11. C. vi. T. 31.

Divisio hæredum.

HÆREDES autem aut necessarii dicuntur, aut sui et necessarii, aut extranei.

Heirs are divided into three sorts necessary; proper and necessary; and strangers.

De hæredibus necessariis.

§ 1. Necessarius hæres est servus hæres institutus; ideòque sic appellatur, quia, sive velit, sive nolit, omninò post mortem testatoris protinùs liber et necessarius hæres fit. Undè, qui facultates suas suspectas habent, solent servum suum primo aut secundo aut etiam ulteriore gradu hæredem instituere; ut, si creditoribus satis non fiat, potius ejus hæredis bona, quam ipsius testatoris, à creditoribus possideantur, vel distrahantur, vel inter eos dividantur. Pro hoc tamen incommodo illud ei commodum præstatur, ut ea, quæ post mortem patroni sui si-

§ 1. A slave instituted by his master, is a necessary heir; and he is so called, because at the death of the testator he becomes instantly free and is compellable to take the heirship; he therefore who suspects his circumstances, commonly institutes his slave to be his heir in the first, second, or some other place; so that, if he does not leave a sum equal to his debts, the goods which are seized, sold, or divided among his creditors, may rather seem to be those of his heir, than his own. But a slave, in recompence of this inconvenience, is allowed whatever he hath acquired after the death of his patron ; for such acquisitions are not to be sold although the goods of the deceased should ever be so insufficient for the payment of his creditors.

De suis hæredibus.

§ II. Sui autem et necessarii hæredes sunt, veluti filius, filia, nepos neptisve ex filio, et deinceps cæteri liberi, qui in potestate morientis modò fuerint. Sed ut nepos neptisve sui hæredes sint, non sufficit eum eamve in potestate avi mortis tempore fuisse : sed opus est, ut pater ejus, vivo patre suo, desierit suus hæres esse, aut morte interceptus, aut qualibet aliâ ratione liberatus à patriâ potestate ; tunc enim nepos neptisve in locum patris sui succedit. Sed sui quidem hæredes idè appellantur, quia domestici hæredes sunt, et vivo quoque patre quodammodo domini existimantur. Undè etiam, si quis intestatus moriatur, prima causa est in successione liberorum. Necessarii vero idè dicuntur, quia omninò, sive velint, sive nolint, tam ab intestato quam ex testamento, ex lege duodecim tabularum hæredes fiunt. Sed his prætor permittit volentibus abstinere hæreditate, ut potius parentis quam ipsorum bona similiter à creditoribus possideantur.

§ 2. Proper and necessary heirs, are sons, daughters, grand-sons or grand-daughters by a son or other direct descendants, in the power of the deceased at the time of his death. To constitute grand-children proper heirs, it does not suffice, that they were in the power of their grandfather at the time of his decease ; but it is requisite, that their father should have ceased to be a proper heir in the life-time of his father, by having been freed, either by death or otherwise from paternal authority ; for then it is, that the grandson or grand-daughter succeeds in place of their father. Heirs are called sui or proper, because they are domestic ; and in the very life-time of their father are reputed masters in a certain degree. Hence the children of an intestate are first in succession ; and are called necessary heirs, because, willing or unwilling they become the heirs of their parent according to the law of the 12 tables, whether under a testament or an intestacy. But when children request it, the prætor permits them to abstain from the inheritance, that the effects of their parents, rather than their own, may be seized by the creditors.

De extraneis.

§ III. Cæteri, qui testatoris juri subjecti non sunt, extranei hæredes appellantur; itaque liberi nostri, qui in potestate nostrâ non sunt, hæredes à nobis instituti, extranei hæredis nobis videntur. Quâ de causâ et qui hæredes à matre instituuntur eodem numero sunt : quia fœminæ, in potestate, liberos non habent. Servus quoque hæres à domino institutus, et post factum testamentum ab eo manumissus, eodem numero habetur.

§ 3. All other heirs, not subject to the power of the testator, are called strangers : thus, children not under the power of their father, but who are constituted his heirs, are strangers in a legal sense : and so are children instituted heirs by their mother, for a woman is not allowed to have her children under her own power. A slave also, whom his master hath instituted by testament and afterwards manumitted is so accounted.

De testamenti factione.

§ IV. In extraneis hæredibus illud observatur, ut sit cum eis testamenti factio, sive hæredes ipsi instituantur, sive ii, qui in potestate eorum sunt. Et id duobus temporibus inspicitur ; testamenti quidem facti tempore, ut constiterit institutio ; mortis verò testatoris, ut effectum habeat. Hoc amplius, et cum adit hæreditatem, esse debet cum eo testamenti factio, sive purè sive sub conditione hæres institutus sit. Nam jus hæredis eo maxime tempore inspicendum est, quo acquirit hæreditatem. Medio autem tempore, inter factum testamentum et mortem testatoris vel conditionem institutionis existentem, mutatio juris non nocet hæredi : quia ut diximus, tria tempora inspicere debent. Testamenti autem factionem non solum is habere videtur, qui testamentum facere potest ; sed etiam, qui ex alieno testamento vel ipse capere potest, vel alii acquirere, licet non possit facere testamentum. Et ideo furiosus, et mutus, et posthumus, et infans, et filius-familias, et servus alienus, testamenti factionem habere dicuntur. Licet enim testamentum facere non possint, attamen ex testamento vel sibi vel alii acquirere possunt.

§ 4. As to strangers, it is requisite, that they should be capable of the faction of a testament, whether instituted heirs themselves, or whether those, under their power, are instituted. And this qualification is required at two several times ; at the making of the testament, that the institution may be valid ; and at the testator's death, that it may take effect ; and farther, whether an heir be appointed simply or conditionally, yet he ought to be capable of the faction of a testament at the time of entering upon the inheritance ; for his right is principally regarded at the time of acquiring the possession. But intermediately between the making of the testament and the death of the testator, or the completion of the condition of the institution, the heir will not be prejudiced by incapacity of change of state ; because the three points of time which we have noted, are the times to be regarded. Not only a man capable of willing, is said to have testamenti factionem; but also any person capable of taking for the benefit of himself, or of acquiring by testament for the benefit of another: hence, persons mad, mute, or posthumous, infants, the sons of a family, or slaves not your own, may all be said to have the faction of a testament (in its passive signification.) For, although incapable of making, they are capable of acquiring by testament, either for themselves or others.

De jure deliberandi, et de beneficio inventarii.

§ V. Extraneis autem hæredibus deliberandi potestas est de adeundâ hæreditate vel non adeundâ. Sed sive is, cui abstinendi potestas est, immiscuerit se bonis hæreditatis, sive extraneus, cui de adeundâ hæreditate deliberare licet, adierit, postea relinquendæ hæreditatis facultatem non habet, nisi minor sit 25 annis: nam hujusmodi ætatis hominibus, sicut in cæteris omnibus causis, deceptis, ita et si temerè damnosam hæreditatem susceperint prætor succurrit. Sciendum est tamen, Divum Hadrianum etiam majori 25 annis veniam dedisse, cum post aditam hæreditatem grande æs alienum, quod aditæ hæreditatis tempore latebat, emersisset. Sed hoc quidem Divus Hadrianus cuiusdam speciali beneficio præstitit. Divus autem Gordianus postea militibus tantummodò hoc concessit. Sed nostra benevolentia commune omnibus subjectis imperio nostro hoc

§ 5. Strangers, appointed heirs, may deliberate 'ere they enter upon an inheritance. But, if one, who has the liberty of abstaining, or a stranger who is permitted to deliberate, should once intermeddle, it will not afterwards be in his power to renounce the inheritance, unless he shall be under the age of twenty-five years: for the prætor, in this as in all other cases, relieves minors who have been deceived, and who rashly take upon themselves an injurious inheritance. Here it must be noted, that the emperor Adrian once gave permission to a person of full age, to relinquish an inheritance when it appeared to be incumbered with a great debt, which had been concealed, until the heir had taken upon himself the administration. But this was granted as a special favour. The emperor Gordian afterwards published a constitution for the indemnification of heirs yet con*fined the force of it to those only, who were of the soldiery. But our extended benevolence hath rendered this benefit common to all our subjects, having dictated a constitution just and noble, which, if heirs will observe, they may enter upon their inheritance, and not be chargeable beyond the value of the estate; so that they need not pray time for deliberation, unless they omit to observe the tenor of our ordinance, choosing rather to deliberate, and submit themselves to the risk attending the acceptance under the ancient law.*

De acquirenda vel omittenda hæreditate.

§ 6. A stranger, instituted by testament, or called by law to a succession in a case of intestacy, may make himself accountable as heir, either by doing some act as such; or by barely signifying his acceptance of the heirship. And a man is deemed to act as the heir of an inheritance, if he treat it as his own, by selling any part of it, by cultivating the ground, or by leasing it: or declare his consent to accept it, either by act or speech; knowing that the person, with whose estate he intermeddles, is dead testate or intestate, and that he himself is the heir: for to act as heir, is to act as proprietor; and the ancients frequently used the term heir, when they would denote the proprietor. But as a stranger may become heir by a bare consent, so on the contrary, by a mere dissent, he may bar himself from an inheritance. And pro hærede gerere, et acquirere sibi hæreditatem; si tamen intelligit, quod agit.

nothing prevents, but that a person, who was born deaf and dumb, or become so by accident, may, act as heir, and acquire the inheritance, if he know what he is doing.

TITULUS VIGESIMUS.

DE LEGATIS.

D. xxx. xxxi. xxxii. C. vi. T. 37.

Continuatio.

POST hæc videamus de legatis; quæ pars juris extra propositam quidem materiam videtur: nam loquimur de iis juris figuris, quibus per universitatem res nobis acquiruntur: sed, cum omninò de testamento instituuntur, loquuti simus, non sinè causâ sequenti loco potest hæc juris materia tractari.

We will now make some observations upon legacies; although this part of the law may not seem to fall in with the subject proposed; for we are treating of those legal methods, by which things may be acquired universally: but, as we have already spoken at large of testaments and testamentary heirs, we may not improperly proceed to the subject of legacies.

Definitio.

§ I. Legatum itaque est donatio quædam à defuncto relicta, ab hærede præstanda.

§ 1. A legacy is a gift directed by the deceased, and to be fulfilled by the heir.

De antiquis generibus legatorum sublatiis.

§ II. Sed olim quidem erant legatorum genera quatuor; per vindicationem, per damnationem, sinendi modo, per præceptionem: et certa quædam verba cuique generi legatorum assignata erant, per quæ singula genera legatorum significa-

§ 2. Anciently there were four kinds of legacies in use; namely, per vindicationem, per damnationem, sinendo modo and per præceptionem. To each of these was assigned a certain form of words, by which their different species bantur : sed ex constitutionibus Divorum principum solemnitas hujusmodi verborum sublata est. Nostra autem constitutio, quam cum magnâ fecimus lucubratione, defunctorum voluntates validiores esse cupientes, et non verbis sed voluntatibus eorum faventes, disposuit, ut omnibus una sit natura, et quibuscunque verbis aliquid relictum sit, liceat legatariis id persequi, non solum per actiones personales, sed etiam per in rem et per hypothecariam. Cujus constitutionis perpensum modum ex ipsius tenore perfectissimè accipere possibile est.

were signified; but these fixed forms have been wholly taken away by the imperial ordinance of the later emperors, Constantinus, Constantius, and Constans. We also, desirous of enforcing the wills of deceased persons, and regarding their intentions more than their words, have, after great study, enacted that the nature of all legacies shall be the same; and legatees, by whatever words constituted, may sue for what is left them, not only by a personal, but by a real or hypothecary action. But the reader may perfectly comprehend the well weighed matter of this constitution, from the tenor of it.

Collatio legatorum et fidei-commissorum.

§ III. Sed non usque ad eam constitutionem standum esse existimavimus: cum enim antiquitatem invenimus legata quidem strictè concludentem, fidei-commissis autem, quæ ex voluntate magis descendebant defunctorum, pinguiorem naturam indulgentem, necessarium esse duximus, omnia, legata fidei-commissis exæquare, ut nulla sit inter ea differentia, sed, quod deest legatis, hoc repleatur ex naturâ fidei-commissorum: et, si quid amplius est in legatis, per hoc crescat fidei-commissorum natura. Sed, nè in primis legum cunabulis, permistim de his exponendo, studiosis adolescentibus quandam introducamus difficultatem, operæ pretium esse duximus, interim, separatim priùs de legatis et postea de fidei-

§ 3. We have judged it expedient that our constitution should not rest here; for, observing that the ancients confined legacies within strict rules, but were favourable to gifts in trust, it was thought necessary to make all legacies equal to gifts in trust, that no difference in effect should remain between them; so that whatever is deficient in the nature of legacies, may be supplied by the nature of trust, and whatever is abundant in the nature of legacies may become an accretion to the nature of trusts. But, that we may not raise difficulties, and perplex the minds of young persons at their entrance upon the study of the law, by explaining these things promiscuously, we have esteemed it worth our pains to treat separately, first of legacies and then of trusts, that, the nature of both being known, the student, thus instructed, may more easily understand their relation and intermixture.

De re legata. Et primum de re testatoris, hæredis, aliena, cujus non est commercium.

§ IV. Non solum autem testatoris vel hæredis res, sed etiam aliena legari potest, ita ut hæres cogatur redimere eam et præstare; vel, si eam non potest redimere, æstimationem ejus dare. Sed, si talis sit res, cujus commercium non est, vel adipisci non potest, nec æstimationem ejus debetur; veluti si quis campum martium, vel basilicas, vel templa, vel quæ publico usui destinata sunt, legaverit: nam nullius momenti tale legatum est. Quod autem diximus, alienam rem posse legari, ita intelligendum est, si defunctus sciebat, alienam rem esse, non si ignorabat. Forsitàn enim, si scivisset alienam rem esse, non legasset; et ita Divus Pius rescriptit. Et verius est, ipsum, qui agit, id est, legatarium, probare oportere, scivisse alienam rem legare defunctum, non hæredem probare oportere, gnorasse alienam: quia semper necessitas probandi incumbit illi, qui agit.

§ 4. A testator may not only bequeath his own property, or that of his heir, but also the property of others; and, if the thing bequeathed belong to another, the heir can be obliged either to purchase and deliver it, or to render the value of it, if it cannot be purchased. But, if the thing bequeathed be not in commerce, or cannot be purchased, the heir is not bound to pay the value to the legatee; as if a man should bequeath the Campus Martius, the palaces, the temples, or any of those things, which appertain to the public: for such legacies can be of no avail. But, in saying that a testator might bequeath the goods of another, we would be understood to mean, that this can be done only, if the deceased knew, that what he bequeathed belonged to another, and not, if he were ignorant of it; since, if he had known, he probably would not have left such a legacy: and to this purpose is the rescript of the emperor Antoninus. And it is incumbent upon the plaintiff or legatee to prove the deceased knew that what he left belonged to another; the heir is not obliged to prove, that the deceased did not know it; for the burthen of proof lies upon the complainant.

§ V. Sed et, si rem obligatam creditori, aliquis legaverit, necesse habet hæres eam luere. Et in hoc quoque casu idem placet, quod in re alienâ; ut ita demum luere necesse habeat hæres, si sciebat defunctus, rem obligatam esse: et ita Divi Severus et Antoninus rescripserunt. Si tamen defunctus voluerit legatarium luere, et hoc expresserit, non debet hæres eam luere.

§ 5. If a man bequeath that which he hath pledged to a creditor the heir is under a necessity of redeeming it: but in this, as in the former case, concerning the goods of another, the heir cannot be obliged to redeem, unless the deceased knew that the thing was pledged; and this the emperors Severus and Antoninus have declared by their rescript. But when it appears to have been the express will of the deceased, that the legatee should redeem the thing bequeathed, the heir ought not to redeem it.

§ VI. Si res aliena legata fuerit, et ejus rei vivo testatore legatarius dominus factus fuerit, siquidem ex causâ emptionis, ex testamento actione pretium consequi potest: si verò ex causâ lucrativâ, veluti ex donatione, vel ex aliâ simili causâ, agere non potest: nam traditum est duas lucrativas causas in eundem hominem et eandem rem concurrere non posse. Hac ratione, si ex duobus testamentis eadem res eidem debeatur, interest, utrùm rem, an æstimationem, ex testamento consecutus sit: nam, si rem habet agere non potest; quia habet eam ex causâ lucrativâ: si æstimationem; agere potest.

§ 6. If a thing bequeathed be the property of another, and the legatee become the proprietor of it in the life-time of the testator by purchase, he may recover the value, by an action under the will; but, if he obtained it as a gift, or by any lucrative title, no action will lie; for it is a maxim, that two lucrative causes can never concur in the same person and thing. And therefore, if the same specific thing be left by two testaments to the same person, the question will be, when the legatee sues under one of them, whether he hath obtained the thing itself, or the value of it, by virtue of the other? for, if he be already possessed of the thing itself, the suit is at an end, because he hath received it on a lucrative account; but if he hath already obtained the value of it only, he may still sue for the thing itself.

De his, quæ non sunt in rerum natura.

§ VII. Ea quoque res, quæ in rerum naturâ non est, si modò futura est, rectè legatur; veluti fructus, qui in illo fundo nati erunt, aut quod ex illâ ancillâ natum erit.

§ 7. Things, which exist only in possibility, may be bequeathed; as the fruits, which shall grow on such a spot of ground: or the offspring, which shall be born of a particular slave.

De eadem re duobus legata.

§ VIII. Si eadem res duobus legata sit, sive conjunctim, sive disjunctim, si ambo perveniant ad legatum, scinditur inter eos legatum: si alter deficiat, quia aut spreverit legatum, aut vivo testatore decesserit, vel alio quoquo modo defecerit, totum ad collegatarium pertinet. Conjunctim autem legatur, veluti si quis dicat, Titio et Seio hominem Stichum do, lego: disjunctim ita Titio hominem Stichum do, lego: Seio hominem Stichum do, lego. Sed et, si expresserit eundem hominem Stichum, æque disjunctim legatum intelligitur.

§ 8. When the same specific legacy is left to two persons, either conjunctively or disjunctively, and both are willing to accept, it must be divided between them. But, should one of the legatees die in the lifetime of the testator, or dislike his legacy, or be by any means prevented from taking it, the whole vests in his co-legatee. A legacy thus worded, is in the conjunctive, I give and bequeath my slave Stichus to Titius and Seius: but if thus, in the disjunctive, I give and bequeath my slave Stichus to Titius: I give and bequeath my slave Stichus to Seius. Although the testator add, that he gives the same slave Stichus to Seius, yet the legacy would be understood in the disjunctive.

Si legatarius proprietatem fundi alieni sibi legatis emerit et ususfructus ad eam pervenerit.

§ IX. Si cui fundus alienus legatus sit, et emerit proprietatem deducto usufructu, et ususfructus ad eum pervenerit, et postea ex testamento agat, rectè eum agere et fundum petere Julianus ait; quia ususfructus in petitione servitutis locum obtinet: sed officio judicis conti-

§ 9. If a man bequeath to any one the ground of another, and the legatee purchase the property without the usufruct, which afterwards accrues to him, it is said by Julianus, that he may sue under the testament, and demand the ground; because the usufruct is regarded as a service only. But it is the duty of a judge, in this case, to order the price of the property to be paid, deducting the value of the usufruct.

De re legatarii.

§ X. Sed, si rem legatarii quis ei legaverit, inutile est legatum; quia, quod proprium est ipsius, amplius ejus fieri non potest: et licet alienaverit eam, non debetur, nec ipsa res, nec æstimatio ejus.

§ 10. A man uselessly bequeaths to another, what already belongs to him; for what is already the property of a legatee, cannot become more so. And, although the legatee should, after the bequest, alien the thing bequeathed, neither the thing itself, nor the value of it, would become due to him.

Si quis rem suam, quasi non suam, legaverit.

§ XI. Si quis rem suam quasi alienam legaverit, valet legatum: nam plus valet quod in veritate est, quam quod in opinione. Sed et, si legatarii esse putavit, valere constat; quia exitum voluntas defuncti habere potest.

§ 11. If a testator bequeath what is his own, as if it were the property of another, the bequest would be good; for truth is more prevalent than what is founded upon opinion only. But although the testator imagine, that what he bequeaths, belongs already to the legatee, yet, if it do not, it is certain, that such a legacy would also be valid; because the will of the deceased can thus take effect.

De alienatione et oppignoratione rei legatæ.

§ XII. Si rem suam legaverit testator, posteaque eam alienaverit, Celsus putat, si non adimendi animo vendidit, nihilominus deberi: idemque Divi Severus et Antoninus rescripserunt. Idem rescripserunt, eum, qui post testamentum factum prædia, quæ legata erant, pignori dedit, ademisse legatum non videri: et ideo legatarium cum hæredē ejus agere posse, ut prædia

§ 12. If a testator bequeath his own property, and afterwards alien, it is the opinion of Celsus, that the thing bequeathed will become due to the legatee, if the testator did not dispose of it, with an intention to oust him. The emperors Severus and Antoninus have published their rescript to this effect; and they have also signified by another rescript that a legacy afterwards pawned or à ereditore luantur. Si verò quis partem rei legatæ alienaverit, pars, quæ non est alienata, omnino debetur: pars autem alienata, ita debetur, si non adimendi animo alienata sit.

mortgaged, shall not be considered as retracted; and that the legatee may bring suit against the heir, and oblige him to redeem. And, if but a part of the thing bequeathed be aliened, that part which remains unaliened, is still due; and that, which is aliened, is only due, if it appear not to have been aliened by the testator with a design to retract the legacy.

De liberatione legata.

§ XIII. Si quis debitori suo liberationem legaverit, legatum utile est: et nèque ab ipso debitore, nèque ab hærede ejus, potest hæres petere, neque ab alio, qui hæredis loco sit. Sed et potest à debitore conveniri, ut liberet eum. Potest etiam quis vel ad tempus jubere, ne hæres petat.

§ 13. If a man by will discharge his debtor, the bequest is effectual; and the heir can bring no suit against the debtor, his heir or any representative. On the contrary, the heir of the testator may be convened by the debtor, and obliged to give him his discharge. A man may also forbid his heir to sue a debtor, within a time limited.

De debito legato creditori.

§ XIV. Ex contrario si debitor creditori suo, quod debet, legaverit, inutile est legatum, si nihil plus est in legato, quam in debito: quia nihil amplius per legatum habet: quod si in diem, vel sub conditione, debitum ei pure legaverit, utile est legatum propter representationem. Quod si vivo testatore dies venerit, vel conditio extiterit, Papinianus scripsit, utile esse nihilominus legatum, quia semel constitit: quod et verum est. Non enim placuit sententia existimantium, extinctum esse legatum, quia in eam causam

§ 14. On the contrary, a legacy by a debtor to his creditor of the money, which he owes him, is ineffectual, if it amount merely to the value of the debt; for the creditor receives no benefit. But, if a debtor bequeath simply to his creditor a sum of money, which was to be paid at a day certain, or which he owed upon condition, the legacy will take effect on account of the representation, i. e. because it becomes due before the debt. But, according to Papinian, if the day of payment should come, or the event of the condition happen in the lifetime of the testator, the legacy would nevertheless be effectual, because it was once good; which is true. For we are not satisfied with the opinion that a legacy once good, may afterwards become extinct, by falling into a state, from which it could not have taken a legal commencement.

De dote uxori legata.

§ XV. Sed, si uxori maritus dotem legaverit, valet legatum : quia plenius est legatum, quam de dote actio. Sed, si, quam non accepit, dotem legaverit, Divi Severus et Antoninus rescripserunt, siquidem simpliciter legaverit, inutile esse legatum ; si verò certa pecunia, vel certum corpus, aut instrumenta dotis in prælegando demonstrata sunt, valere legatum.

§ 15. If a man bequeath to his wife her marriage portion, it is valid ; for the legacy is more beneficial than the action she might maintain for the recovery of her portion. But, if he bequeath to his wife, her marriage portion, never actually received, the emperors Severus and Antoninus have declared by their rescript that if it be left simply without any specification of a sum certain, the legacy is void ; but if any sum or thing be specified, or if the instruments, in which the exact value of the portion is mentioned, be referred to, the legacy is valid.

De interitu et mutatione rei legatae.

§ XVI. Si res legata sinè facto hæredis perierit, legatario decedit. Et, si servus alienus legatus sinè facto hæredis manumissus fuerit, non tenetur hæres. Si verò heredis servus legatus sit, et ipse eum manumiserit, teneri eum, Julianus scripsit : nec interest, sciverit, an ignoraverit, à se eum legatum esse. Sed et, si alii, donaverit servum, et is, cui donatus est, eum manumise-

§ 16. If a thing bequeathed should perish before delivery without fault of the heir, the loss falls upon the legatee. And, if the slave of another, who is bequeathed, should be manumitted the heir not being privy to the manumission, he can be subject to no action. But, if a testator bequeath the slave of his heir, who afterwards manumits that slave, it is the opinion of Julian, that the heir is answerable ; whether he knew of the legacy or not. Also if the heir hath made a present of a slave bequeathed, and the donee hath manumitted him, the heir is liable although ignorant of the bequest.

De interitu quarundam ex pluribus rebus legatis.

§ XVII. Si quis ancillas cum suis natis legaverit, etiamsi ancillæ mortuæ fuerint, partus legato cedunt. Idem est, et si ordinarii servi cum vicariis legati fuerint : quia licet mortui sint ordinarii, tamen vicarii legato cedunt. Sed, si servus fuerit cum peculio legatus, mortuo servo, vel manumisso, vel alienato, peculii legatum extinguitur. Idem est, si fundus instructus, vel cum instrumento, legatus fuerit ; nam, fundo alienato, et instrumenti legatum extinguitur.

§ 17. If a testator bequeath his female slaves and their offspring, although the slaves die, their issue becomes due to the legatee : and so, if ordinary slaves are bequeathed together with vicarial ; for although the ordinary slaves die, yet the vicarial slaves will pass by virtue of the bequest. But, where a slave is bequeathed with his peculium, and afterwards dies, or is manumitted, or aliened, the legacy of the peculium becomes extinct. The consequences will be the same, if a piece of ground is bequeathed with the instruments for improving it ; for, if the testator aliens the ground, the legacy of the instruments of husbandry is of course extinguished.

De grege legato.

§ 18. If a flock is bequeathed, and afterwards reduced to a single sheep, that sheep is claimable ; and if a flock receive an addition, after it hath been bequeathed, this addition will also according to Julian enure to the legatee. For a flock is deemed one body, consisting of separate members, as a house is reckoned one body, composed of materials, joined together and adhering.

De ædibus legatis.

§ 19. And lastly, when an house is bequeathed, the marble or pillars which are added after the bequest is made, will pass under the general legacy.

De peculio.

§ 20. When the peculium (of a slave) is bequeathed, it is certain, that the increase or decrease of it in the life of the testator, becomes the loss or gain of the legatee. And, if the peculium of a slave be left to him with his liberty and he increase the peculium subsequent to the death of the testator, and before the inheritance is entered upon, it is the opinion of Julian, that the increase will pass to him as legatee: for such a legacy does not become due, but from the day of the acceptance of the inheritance: but should the peculium of a slave be bequeathed to a stranger, an increase, acquired within the period above-mentioned will not pass under the legacy, unless the acquisition were made, by means of something appertaining to the peculium; for the peculium of a slave does not belong to him, after he is manumitted by testament, unless expressly given; although, if a master in his life-time manumit

his slave, his peculium will pass to him of course, if not excepted : and such is the rescript of the emperors Severus and Antoninus ; who have also declared, that when a peculium is bequeathed to a slave, it does not seem intended that he should have the right of demanding what he may have expended for the use of his master. The same princes have farther declared that a slave seems intitled to his peculium, if his liberty be left him on condition, that he will bring in his accounts, and supply any deficiency out of the profits of his peculium.

De rebus corporalibus et incorporalibus.

§ 21. Things incorporeal may be bequeathed as well as things corporeal : and so therefore may a debt, due to the testator ; and the heir be obliged to transfer his right of action to the legatee : unless the testator in his life-time received the money due to him ; for in this case the legacy would become extinct. Such a legacy as this, is also good ; I command my heir to rebuild the house of Titius : or to free him from his debts.

De legato generali.

§ 22. If a testator bequeath a slave, or else some particular thing disjunctively, the right of election is in the legatee, unless the testator hath declared otherwise.

De optione legata.

§ XXIII. Optionis legatum, id est, ubi testator ex servis suis vel

§ 23. An optional legacy, is when a testator directs his legatee to choose aliis rebus optare legatarium jusserrat, habebat olim in se conditionem : et ideo, nisi ipse legatarius vivus optasset, ad hæredem legatum non trans mittebat. Sed ex constitutione nostrâ et hoc in meliorem statum reformatum est, et data est licentia hæredi legatarii optare servum, licet vivus legatarius hoc non fecerit. Et, diligentiore tractata habito, hoc in nostrâ constitutione additum est, sive plures legatarii extiterint, quibus optio relicta est, et dissentiant in corpore eligendo; sive unius legatarii plures hæredes sint, et inter se circa optandum dissentiant, alio aliud corpus eligere cupiente, ne pereat legatum, (quod plerique prudentium contra benevolentiam introducebant,) fortunam esse hujus optionis judicem, et fortè hoc esse dirimendum, ut, ad quem sors pervenerit, illus sententia in optione præcellat.

any slave, from among his slaves, or any article from a certain class of things; and such legacy was formerly presumed to imply this condition, that, if the legatee in his life-time did not make his election, the legacy could not be transmitted to his heir. But, by our constitution, this presumed condition is now taken away, and the heir of the legatee is permitted to elect, although the legatee in his life-time hath neglected to do it. And, upon further consideration, we have added to our constitution, that, if there be several legatees, to whom an option is left, and they differ in their choice, or if there be many heirs of one legatee, of divers sentiments, then Fortune must be the judge: for, lest the loss of the legacy should ensue, (which the generality of ancient lawyers, contrary to all benevolence, would have permitted,) we have decreed, that such dissensions should be decided by lot; so that his option, to whom the lot falls, shall be preferred.

Quibus legari potest.

§ 24. A legacy can be left to those only, who have the capacity of taking by testament, (i. e. factio passiva.)

Jus antiquum de incertis personis.

§ XXV. Incertis verò personis neque legata neque fidei-commissa olim relinqui concessum erat; nam ne miles quidem incertæ personæ poterat relinquere, ut Divus Hadrianus rescripit. Incerta autem persona debatur, quam incertâ opi-

§ 25. It was not permitted formerly, that either legacies, or gifts in trust, should be bequeathed to uncertain persons; this was even prohibited to a soldier, by the emperor Adrian. An uncertain person is one whom the testator has figured in nione animo suo testator subiciebat, veluti, si quis ita dicat, quicumque filio meo filiam suam in matrimonium dederit, ei hæres meus illum fundum dato. Illud quoque, quod iis relinquebatur, qui post testamentum scriptum primi consules designati essent, æque incertæ personæ legari videbatur: et denique multæ aliæ hujusmodi species sunt. Libertas quoque incertæ personæ non videbatur posse dari, quia placebat, nominatim servos liberari. Sub certâ verò demonstratione, id est, ex certis personis, incertæ personæ rectè legabatur: veluti, ex cognatis meis, qui nunc sunt, si quis filiam meam uxorem duxerit, ei hæres meus illam rem dato. Incertis autem personis legata vel fidei-commissa relicta, et per errorem soluta, repeti non posse, sacris constitutionibus cautum erat.

his imagination, without any determinate knowledge; as if he should say: whoever shall give his daughter in marriage to my son, to that person let my heir deliver up such a piece of ground. And, if he had made a bequest to the first consuls appointed after his testament was written, this also would have been a bequest to uncertain persons; and there are other similar examples. Freedom likewise could not be conferred upon an uncertain person; for it was necessary, that all slaves should be nominally enfranchised: but a legacy might have been given to an uncertain person under a certain demonstration; or, in other words, to an uncertain person, being one of a number of persons certain: as, I direct my heir to give such a thing to any one of my present collateral relations, who shall take my daughter in marriage. But, if a legacy or fiduciary gift had been paid to uncertain persons by mistake, it was provided by the constitutions, that such persons were not compellable to refund.

Jus antiquum de posthumo alieno.

§ XXVI. Posthumus quoque alieno inutilitèr antea legabatur. Est autem alienus posthumus, qui natus inter suos hæredes testatori futurus non est: ideòque, ex emancipato filio conceptus nepos, extraneus erat posthumus avo.

§ 26. Formerly a legacy could not enure to a posthumous stranger: that is, to one who, if he had been born before the death of the testator, could not have been numbered among his proper heirs: and of consequence a posthumous grandson, by an emancipated son, was a posthumous stranger in regard to his grandfather.

Jus novum de personis incertis et posthumo alieno.

§ XXVII. Sed nec hujusmodi species penitus est sinè justa emendatione relicta, cum in nostro codice constitutio posita sit, per quam et huic parti medemur, non solum in hæreditatibus, sed etiam in legatis et fidei-commissis: quod evidentè ex ipsius constitutionis lectione clarescit. Tutor autem nec per nostram constitutionem incertus dari debet: quia certo judicio debet quis pro tutelâ suæ posteritati cavere.

§ 27. But the ancient law hath not been left without proper emendation; for a constitution in our collection hath altered the law concerning uncertain persons, not only in respect of inheritances, but also legacies and fiduciary bequest. This alteration will appear from the constitution itself; which gives no authority to the nomination of an uncertain tutor; for it is incumbent upon every parent to take care of his posterity in this respect, by a determinate appointment.

De posthumo aliena hærede instituto.

§ XXVIII. Posthumus autem alienus hæres instituti et antè poterat, et nunc potest; nisi in utero ejus sit, quæ jure nostro, uxor esse non potest.

§ 28. A posthumous stranger could formerly, and may now be appointed heir, unless it appear, that he was conceived by a woman, who could not have been legally married to his father.

De errore in nomine legatarii.

§ XXIX. Siquidem in nomine, cognomine, prænomine, agnomine, legatarii testator erraverit, cum de persona constat, nihilominus valet legatum; idèmq; in hæredibus servatur; et rectè: nomina enim significandorum hominum gratia reperta sunt; qui si alio quolibet modo intelligantur, nihil interest.

§ 29. Although a testator may have mistaken the nomen, cognomen, prænomen or agnomen of a legatee, yet, if his person be certain, the legacy is good. The same rule is observed as to heirs, and with reason: for the use of names is but to point out persons; and, if they can be denoted by any other method, it will make no difference.

De falsa demonstratione.

§ XXX. Huic proxima est illa juris regula, falsa demonstratione legatum non perimi: veluti, si quis ita legaverit, Stichum servum

§ 30. The rule of law, which comes nearest to the foregoing, is, that a legacy is not rendered null by a false description: suppose a bequest thus worded: I give and bequeath Stichus my slave, who was born in my family: in this case, although Stichus was not born in the family, but bought, yet, if there be certainty of his person, the legacy is valid. And if a testator should write: I bequeath Stichus my slave, whom I bought of Seius; yet, although bought of another, the legacy would be good, if no doubt existed as to the person of Stichus.

De falsa causa adjecta.

§ XXXI. Longè magis legato falsa causa adjecta non nocet: veluti cum quis ita dixerit: Titio, quia me absente negotia mea curavit, Stichum do, lego: vel ita, Titio, quia patrocinio ejus, capitali crimine liberatus sum, Stichum do, lego. Licet enim neque negotia testatoris unquam gesserit Titius, neque patrocinio ejus liberatus sit, legatum tamen valet. Sed, si conditionaliter enunciata fuerit causa, aliud juris est; veluti hoc modo, Titio, si negotia mea curaverit, fundum meum do, lego.

§ 31. A fortiori a legacy is not rendered less valid, although a false reason be assigned for bequeathing it: as if a testator should say: I give my slave Stichus to Titius because he took care of my affairs in my absence: or because I was acquitted upon a capital accusation, by his protection. For although Titius had never taken care of the affairs of the deceased, and although the testator was never thus acquitted by means of Titius, the legacy will be good. But if the bequest had been conditional, as I give to Titius, such a piece of ground, if it shall appear, that he hath taken proper care of my affairs, then the law would be different.

De servo hæredis.

§ XXXII. An servo hæredis rectè legemus, quæritur: et constat, purè inutiliter legari, nec quicquam proficere, si vivo testatore de potestate hæredis exierit: quia, quod inutile foret legatum, si statim post

§ 32. It is doubted, whether a testator can bequeath to the slave of his heir; and it is settled that such a legacy, would be of no avail, although the slaves should be freed from the power of the heir in the lifetime of the testator; for a bequest, void if the testator had expired immediately after he had made it, ought not to become valid, merely because he happened to enjoy a longer life. But a testator may give a conditional legacy to the slave, (of his instituted heir,) which will be good, if the slave be not under the power of the heir when the condition is fulfilled.

De domino hæredis.

§ XXXIII. Ex diverso, hærede instituto servo, quin domino rectè etiam sinè conditione legetur, non dubitatur: nam, etsi statim post factum testamentum decesserit testator, non tamen apud eum, qui hæres sit, dies legati cedere intelligitur; cum hæreditas à legato separata sit, et possit per eum servum alius hæres effici, si prius, quam jussu domini adeat, in alterius potestatem translatus sit; vel manumissus ipse hæres efficitur: quibus casibus utile est legatum. Quod si in eadem causâ permanserit, et jussu legatarii adierit, evanescit legatum.

§ 33. On the contrary it is not doubted, but if a slave be appointed heir, that his master may take an unconditional legacy (by the same testament :) for, although the testator should die instantly, yet the legacy does not become immediately due from the slave who is heir; for the inheritance is here separate from the legacy, and another may become heir by means of the slave, if he should be transferred to a new master, before he hath entered upon the inheritance, at the command of his master, who is the legatee; or the slave himself may become heir in his own right by manumission; and in these cases, the legacy would be good. But, if the slave should remain in the same state, and enter upon the inheritance by order of his master, who is the legatee, the legacy becomes extinct.

De modo et ratione legandi. De ordine scripturæ.

§ XXXIV. Ante hæredis institutionem inutilitèr antea legabatur; scilicèt, quia testamenta, vim ex institutione hæredis accipiunt, et ob id veluti caput atque fundamen-

tum, intelligitur totius testamenti hæredis institutio. Pari ratione, nec libertas ante hæredis institutionem dari poterat. Sed, quia incivile esse putavimus, scripturæ ordinem quidem sequi, (quod et ipsi antiquitati vituperandum fuerat visum) sperni autem testatoris voluntatem, per nostram constitutionem et hoc vitium emendavimus, ut liceat et ante hæredis institutionem et inter medias hæredum institutiones legatum relinquere, et multò magis libertatem, cujus usus favorabilior est.

son the institution of an heir should always precede the grant of freedom. But we have thought it wrong that the mere order of writing should be attended to in opposition to the express intention of a testator: and the ancients themselves seem to have thought so: we have therefore, by our constitution amended the law in this point; so that a legacy, and a fortiori, a grant of liberty, which is always favoured, may now be bequeathed, before the institution of an heir, (where there is but one; and, either before, or between the institutions of heirs, where there are several.)

De legato post mortem hæredis, vel legatarii.

§ XXXV. Post mortem quoque hæredis aut legatarii simili modo inutilitèr legabatur: veluti, si quis ita dicat, cum hæres meus mortuus fuerit, do, lego: item pridie quam hæres aut legatarius morietur. Sed simili modo et hoc correximus, firmitatem hujusmodi legatis ad fideicommissorum similitudinem præstantes; ne in hoc casu deterior causa legatorum, quam fideicommissorum, inveniatur.

§ 35. A bequest, made to take place after the death of an heir or legatee, was also ineffectual: for, if a testator had said, when my heir is dead, I give and bequeath, or even thus, I give and bequeath the day preceding the day of the death of my heir, or, of my legatee, the legacies were void. But we have corrected the ancient rule in this respect, by giving all such legacies the same validity, as gifts in trust; lest trusts should be found to be more favoured, than legacies.

Si pœnæ nomine relinquatur, adimatur, vel transferatur.

§ XXXVI. Pœnæ quoque nomine inutilitèr antea legabatur, et adimebatur, vel transferebatur. Pœnæ autem nomine legari videtur, quod coercendi hæredis causâ relinquitur, quo magis aliquid faciat, § 36. Also formerly, if a testator had given, revoked, or transferred a legacy nomine pœnæ, he would have acted ineffectually: and a legacy is reputed to be bequeathed nomine pœnæ, [i. e. as a punishment or penal-aut non faciat: veluti si quis ita scripserit, hæres meus si filiam suam in matrimonium Titio collocaverit; vel ex diverso, si non collocaverit, dato decem aureos Seio; aut si ita scripserit, hæres meus si servum Stichum alienaverit: vel ex diverso, si non alienaverit, Titio decem aureos dato. Et in tantum hæc regula observabatur, ut quam plurimis principalibus constitutionibus significaretur, nec principem agnoscere, quod ei pœnæ nomine legatum sit: nec ex militis quidem testamento talia legata valebant: quamvis aliæ militum voluntates in ordinandis testamentis valdè observabantur: quinetiam nec libertates pœnæ nomine dari posse placebat: eo ampliùs, nec hæredem pœnæ nomine adjici posse, Sabinus existimabat: veluti si quis ita dicat, Titius hæres esto; si Titius filiam suam in matrimonium Seio collocaverit, Seius quoque hæres esto. Nihil enim intererat, quâ ratione Titius coaceretur, utrum legati datione, an cohæredis adjectione. Sed hujusmodi scrupulositas nobis non placuit; et generalitèr ea, quæ relinquuntur, licèt pœnæ nomine fuerint relicta vel adempta, vel in alium translata, nihil distare à cæteris legatis constituimus, vel in dando, vel in adimendo, vel in transferendo: exceptis videlicèt iis, quæ impossibilia sunt, vel legibus interdicta, aut alias probrosa. Hujusmodi enim testamentorum dis-ty,] when an heir is put under the necessity of doing or not doing something; as if a testator had thus written; if my heir give his daughter in marriage to Titius; or if he do not give her in marriage to Titius, let him pay ten aurei to Seius: or thus, if my heir shall alien my slave Stichus; or, if my heir shall not alien my slave Stichus, let him pay ten aurei to Titius. And this rule was so far observed, that it was expressly ordained by many constitutions, that even the emperor could not receive a legacy, which was bequeathed nomine pœnæ; nor could a penal legacy be valid, even when bequeathed by the testament of a soldier; although, in every other respect, the intention of a testator in a military testament was scrupulously adhered to. And even freedom could not be bequeathed, nor, in the opinion of Sabinus could an heir he added in a testament, nomine pœnæ: for, if a testator had said, let Titius be my heir, but if he give his daughter in marriage to Seius, let Seius also be my heir, the appointment of Seius would have been void; for the manner, in which an heir was laid under coercion, whether by the gift of a legacy, or by the addition of another heir, worked no alteration in the general rule of law. But this strictness hath not pleased us, and we have therefore ordained generally that things left, revoked, or transferred, nomine pœna, should fall under the same rules of law as other legacies, whereof the condition is neither impossible, prohibited by law, or contrary to good manners, for the morality, of the present times, will not suffer testamentary dispositions of this character.

positiones valere secta meorum

DE ADEPTIONE LEGATORUM ET TRANSLATIONE.

D. xxxiv. T. 4.

De ademptione.

ADEPTIO legatorum, sive eodem testamento adimantur, sive codicillis, firma est. Sed et, sive contrariis verbis fiat ademptio, veluti si quod ita quis legaverit, do, lego, ita adimatur, non do, non lego: sive non contrarii, sed aliis quibuscumque verbis.

A revocation of a legacy is valid, although inserted in the same testament or codicil. And it is immaterial, whether the revocation be made in some form of words contrary to the bequest; as when a testator bequeaths in these terms, I give and bequeath to Titius, and revokes it by adding, I do not give and bequeath to Titius: or in any other form.

De translatione.

§ I. Transferri quoque legatum ab alio ad alium potest: veluti si quis ita dixerit, hominem Stichum, quem Titio legavi, Seio do, lego: sive in eodem testamento, sive codicillis, id fecerit: quo casu, simul et Titio adimi videtur, et Seio dari.

§ 1. A legacy may also be transferred from one person to another; as, I give to Seius my slave Stichus, whom I have bequeathed to Titius. This may be done in the same testament or codicil; and thus a legacy may be taken from Titius and transferred to Seius.

DE LEGE FALCIDIA.

D. xxxv. T. 2. C. vi. T. 50. Nov. 1.

Ratio et summa hujus legis.

SUPEREST, ut de lege Falcidia dispiciamus, quâ modus novissimè legatis impositus est. Cum enim olim lege duodecim tabularum libera erat legandi potestas, ut liceret vel totum patrimonium legatis erogare : quippè, cum eâ lege ita cautum esset, uti quisque legas sit suæ rei, ita jus esto, visum est hanc legandi licentiam coarctare ; idque ipsorum testamentorum gratiâ provisum est, ob id, quod plerumque intestati moriebantur, recusantibus scriptis hæredibus pro nullo aut minimo lucro hæreditates adire. Et, cum super hoc tam lex Furia, quam lex Voconia latæ sunt, quarum neutra sufficiens ad rei consummationem videbatur, novissimè lata est lex Falcidia, quâ cavetur, ne plus legare liceat, quam dodrantem totorem bonorum ; id est, ut, sive unus hæres institutus sit, sive plures apud eum eoque pars quarta remaneat.

It remains to speak of the law Falcidia, by which legacies have received their latest regulation. By the law of the 12 tables, uti quisque legasset suæ rei, ita jus esto, a testator was permitted to dispose of his whole patrimony in legacies : but it was thought proper to restrain this licence even for the benefit of testators themselves, because they frequently died intestate, their heirs refusing to enter upon an inheritance from which they could receive little or no profit. And this gave rise first to the law Furia, and afterwards the law Voconia : but neither of these being found adequate to the purpose, the Falcidian law was at length enacted ; which forbids a testator to give more in legacies, than three fourths of all his effects ; so that, whether there be one or more heirs, there must now remain to him, or them, an intire fourth part of the whole.

De pluribus hæredibus.

§ I. Et, cum qæsitum esset, duobus hæredibus institutis (veluti Titio et Seio) si Titii pars aut tota exhausta sit legatis, quæ nominatim ab eo data sunt, aut supra modum onerata, à Seio verò aut nulla relicbeen queried, whether, although Seius hath a fourth or more of the whole inheritance, it may not be lawful nevertheless for Titius to make a stoppage out of the legacies with which he is charged, so as to retain a fourth part out of his own moiety? and it hath been determined, that he may: for the reason of the law Falcidia extends to each heir.

§ II. Quantitas autem patrimonii, ad quam ratio legis Falcidiæ redigitur, mortis tempore spectatur. Itaque, (verbi gratiâ) si is, qui centum aureorum patrimonium in bonis habeat, centum aureos legaverit, nihil legatariis prodest, si ante aditam hæreditatem per servos hæreditarios, aut ex partu ancillarum hæreditarium, aut ex fœtu pecorum, tantum accesserit hæreditati, ut, centum aureis legatorum nomine erogatis, hæres quartam partem hæreditatis habiturus sit: sed necesse est, ut nihilominus quarta pars legatis detrahatur. Ex diverso, si septuaginta quinque legaverit, et ante aditam hæreditatem in tantum decreverint bona, (incendiis forte, aut naufragiis, aut morte servorum) ut non amplius quam septuaginta quinque aureorum substantia vel etiam minus relinquatur solida legata debentur. Nec ea res damnosa est hæredi, cui liberum est non adire hæreditatem: quæ res efficit, ut sit necesse legatariis, ne destituto testamento nihil conse-

§ 2. The law Falcidia looks to the quantity of the estate at the time of the death of the testator; and therefore if he who is worth but an hundred aurei at his decease, bequeath them all in legacies, the legatees must suffer a defalcation; for they will be entitled to no advantage, although the inheritance, after the death of the testator and before it is entered upon, should so increase by the acquisition of slaves, the children of female slaves, or the product of cattle, that after a full payment of the 100 aurei in legacies, an intire fourth of the whole estate might remain to the heir; the legacies notwithstanding would still be liable to a deduction of one fourth. On the contrary, if the same testator hath bequeathed only 75 aurei, then, although before the entrance of the heir, the estate should so decrease by fire, shipwreck, or the loss of slaves, that its whole value should not be more than 75 aurei, or less, yet the legacies would still be due without defalcation: nor is this law prejudicial to an heir who is always at his election either to refuse or accept an inheritance; but it obliges legatees to compromise with the heir, lest they should lose the whole for want of some one to act.

Quæ detrahuntur ante Falcidiam.

§ III. Cum autem ratio legis Falcidiæ ponitur, antè deducitur æs alienum, item funeris impensa, et pretia servorum manumissorum: tunc demùm in reliquo ita ratio habetur, ut ex eo quarta pars apud hæredem remaneat, tres vero partes inter legatarios distribuantur, pro ratâ scilicèt portione ejus, quod cuique eorum legatum fuerit. Itaque, si fingamus, quadringentos aureos legatos esse, et patrimonii quantitatem, ex quâ legata erogari oportet, quadringentorum esse, quarta pars singulis legatariis debet detrahi. Quod si trecentos quinquaginta legatos fingamus, octava debet detrahi. Quod si quingentos legaverit, initio quinta, deinde quarta, detrahi debet. Antè enim detrahendum est quod extra bonorum quantitatem est, deindè quod ex bonis apud hæredem remanere oportet.

§ 3. The Falcidian portion is not taken until the debts, funeral expenses, and the price of the manumission of slaves, have been deducted; and then the fourth part of the remainder appertains to the heir, and the other three parts are divided among the legatees in a ratable proportion: for example, let it be supposed, that 400 aurei have been bequeathed, and the estate, turns out to be worth no more, a fourth must be subtracted from each legacy; but, if the testator gave in legacies no more than 350 aurei, and there remained after debts paid 400, then an eighth only ought to be deducted. And, if 500 aurei have been bequeathed, and there remain clear in the hands of the heir but 400, a fifth must first be deducted, and then a fourth: but that, which exceeds the real value of the goods of the deceased, must first be subtracted, and then follows the deduction of what is due to the heir.

DE FIDEI-COMMISSARIIS HÆREDITATIBUS.

D. xxxvi. T. 1. C. vi. T. 42. et 49. Nov. 39. 108.

Continuatio.

NUNC transeamus ad fidei-commissa. Sed prius est, ut de hæreditatibus fidei-commissariis videamus.

Let us now proceed to trusts; but first, we will treat of fiduciary inheritances.

Origo fidei-commissorum.

§ I. Sciendum itaque est, omnia fidei-commissa primis temporibus infirma fuisse; quia nemo invitus cogebatur præstare id, de quo rogatus erat. Quibus enim non poterant hæreditatem vel legata relinquere, si relinquebant, fidei committebant eorum, qui capere ex testamento poterant. Et ideo fidei-commissa appellata sunt, quia nullo vinculo juris, sed tantum pudore eorum, qui rogabantur, continebantur. Postea Divus Augustus primus, semel interumque gratiâ personarum motus, vel quia per ipsius salutem rogatus quis diceretur, aut ob insignem quorundam perfidiam, jussit consulibus auctoritatem suam interponere: quod, quia justum videbatur et popolare erat, paulatim conversum est in assiduam jurisdictionem; tantusque eorum favor factus est, ut paulatim etiam prætor proprius crearetur, qui de fidei-commissis jus diceret, quem fidei-commissarium appellabant.

§ 1. It must be observed, that anciently all trusts were weak and precarious; for no man could be compelled to perform what he was only requested to perform. But when testators were desirous of giving an inheritance or legacy to persons, to whom they could directly give neither, they then bequeathed in trust to some person capable of taking; and such bequests were called fiduciary, because the performance could not be enforced by law, but depended solely upon the honour of the trustee. The emperor Augustus, having been frequently moved with compassion on account of some persons, and detesting the perfidy of others, commanded the consuls to interpose their authority; and this, being a just and popular command, gave them by degrees a continued jurisdiction; and in process of time, trusts became so common, and were so highly favoured, that a prætor was purposely appointed to give judgment in these cases, and was therefore called the commissary of trusts.

De fidei-commisso hæredis scripti.

§ II. In primis igitur sciendum est, opus esse, ut aliquis recto jure testamento hæres instituatur, ejusque fidei committatur, ut eam hæreditatem alii restituat : aliqui inutile est testamentum, in quo nemo hæres instituitur. Cum igitur aliquis scripserit, Lucius Titius hæres esto, potest adjicere, togo te, Luci Titi ut, cum primum poteris hæreditatem meam adire, eam Cato Scio reddas, restituas. Potest autem quisque et de parte restituendâ hæredem rogare ; et liberum est vel purè, vel sub conditione, relinquere fidei-commissum, vel ex certo die,

§ 2. We should first observe that there must be an heir appointed to every testament : to whom it is entrusted in confidence that he will restore the inheritance to some other person ; for without an heir, a testament is ineffectual. And therefore, when a testator says ; let Lucius Titius be my heir ; he may add, and I request you Lucius Titius, that, so soon as you enter upon my inheritance, you would restore it to Catus Scius. But a testator may request his heir to restore a part of the inheritance only, and may make him a trustee upon condition, or from a day certain.

Effectus restitutionis hæreditatis.

§ III. Restitutâ autem hæreditate, is quidem, qui restituit, nihilominus hæres permanet ; is verò qui recipit hæreditatem, aliquandò hæredis, aliquando legatarii, loco habetur.

§ 3. After an heir hath restored the inheritance, he still continues heir. But he, who hath received the inheritance, is sometimes considered as in the place of the heir, and sometimes of a legatee.

De senatus-consulto Trebelliano.

§ IV. Et Neronis quidem temporibus, Trebellio Maximo et Annæo Seneca cons. senatus-consultum factum est, quo cautum est, ut, si hæreditas ex fidei-commissi causâ restituta sit, omnes actiones, quæ jure civili hæredi et in hæredem competerent, ei et in eum darentur, cui ex fidei-commisso restituta esset hæreditas. § 4. In the reign of Nero, Trebellius Maximus and Annæus Seneca being consuls, a decree passed in the senate, that, when an inheritance was restored under a trust, all actions, which by the civil law might be brought by, or against the heir, should be given to and against him, to whom the inheritance was restored. After this decree, the prætor began to give equitable and beneficial actions to and against the receiver of an inheritance, as if he were the heir.

De senatus-consulto Pegasiano.

§ V. Sed, quia hæredes scripti, cum aut totam hæreditatem, aut penè totam, plerumque restituere rogabantur, adire hæreditatem ob nullum vel minimum lucrum recusabant, atque ob id exstinguebantur fidei-commissa : postea Vespasiani Augusti temporibus, Pegaso et Pusione consulibus, senatus censuit, ut ei, qui rogatus esset hæreditatem restituere, perindè liceret quartam partem retinere, atque ex lege Falcidia ex legatis retinere conceditur. Ex singulis quoque rebus, quæ per fidei-commissum relinquuntur, eadem retentio permissa est. Post quod senatus-consultum, ipse hæres onera hæreditaria sustinebat : ille autem, qui ex fidei-commisso recipiebat partem hæreditatis, legatarii partiarum loco erat ; id est, ejus legatarii, cui pars bonorum legabatur ; quæ species legati partitio vocabatur, quia cum hærede legatarius partiebatur hæreditatem. Undè, quæ solebant stipulationes inter hæredem et partiarum legatarium interponi, eadem interponebantur inter eum, qui ex fidei-commisso recepit hæreditatem et hæredem ; id est, ut lucrum et damnum hæreditarium pro ratâ parte inter eos commune esset.

§ 5. But, when written heirs were requested to restore the whole or almost the whole, of an inheritance, they often refused to accept it, since they could receive but little or no emolument ; and thus trusts were frequently extinguished. Afterwards, in the consulate of Pegasus and Pugio, in the reign of the emperor Vespasian, the senate decreed, that an heir, who was requested to restore an inheritance, might retain a fourth, as in the case of legacies by the Falcidian law. And the same deduction is allowed from particular things, which are left to him as trustee. For some time after this decree, the heir alone bore the burden (expence and charges) of the inheritance ; but afterwards whoever had received a share or part of an inheritance, under a trust was regarded as a part legatee ; having a legacy of part of the property : and this species of legacy was called partition, because the legatee took a part of the inheritance together with the heir : thence it arose, that the same stipulations, which were formerly used between the heir and legatee in part, were also interposed between the person benefitted under the trust and the heir or trustee to the intent that the profit and loss might be in common between them in due proportion.

vel Pegasiano.

§ VI. Ergò, siquidè non plus quam dodrantem hæreditatis scriptus hæres rogatus sit restituere, tum ex Trebelliano senatus-consulto restituebatur hæreditas; et in utrùmque actiones hæreditariæ pro parte ratâ dabantur: in hæredem quidem jure civili; in eum verò, qui recipiebat hæreditatem ex senatus-consulto Trebelliano, tanquam in hæredem. At, si plus quam dodrantem, vel etiam totam hæreditatem, restituere rogatus esset, locus erat Pegasiano senatus-consulto: et hæres, qui semel adierat hæreditatem, (si modo suâ voluntate adierat,) sivè retinuerat quartam partem, sivè retinere noluerat, ipse universa onera sustinebat. Sed, quartâ quidem retentâ, quasi partis et pro parte stipulationes interponebantur, tanquam inter partiarium legatarium et hæredem: si verò totam hæreditatem restitueret, emptæ et vinditæ hæreditatis stipulationes interponebantur. Sed, si recusabat scriptus hæres adire hæreditatem, ob id, quod diceret eam sibi suspectam esse, quasi damnosam, cavebatur Pegasiano senatus-consulto, ut, desiderante eo, cui restituere rogatus esset, jussu prætoris adiret, et restituerit hæreditatem; perindèque ei et in eum, qui resciperit hæreditatem, actiones darentur, ac juris est ex Trebelliano senatus-consulto; quo casu nullis stipulationibus est opus: quia, simul et hinc, qui restituit, securitas

§ 6. Therefore, if a written heir, or heir in trust, had not been requested to surrender more than three fourths of the inheritance, he was obliged to restore so much of it, by virtue of the Trebellian senatus-consultum; and all actions, whether in favour of, or against, the inheritance, were brought, or sustained, by the heir and fidei-commissary according to their respective shares; and this is incident to the heir, by virtue of the civil law, and, to the fidei-commissary, by the Trebellian decree. But, when the written heir was requested by the testator to restore the whole inheritance, or more than three fourths, then the Pegasian senatus-consultum took place; for, if he had once taken upon himself the heirship voluntarily, he was obliged to sustain all charges; and this, whether he did, or did not, retain his fourth. But, when the heir retained a fourth part, the stipulations, called partis et pro parte, were entered into, as between a legatee in part and an heir; and, when the heir did not retain a fourth, then the stipulations, called emptæ et venditæ hæreditatis, were interposed. But, if the written fiduciary heir declined, suspecting loss from defect of assets, it was provided by the Pegasian decree, that the prætor at the instance of the fidei-commissary, might compel such heir to take upon himself the inheritance, and then restore it; and that afterwards all actions should be brought by or against the fidei-commissary only; as ordained by the Trebellian decree. And in this case stipulations are not necessary; for the heir, who restores the inheritance, is secured, and all hereditary actions are transferred to and against him, by whom it is received; there being, in this instance, a concurrence of both decrees.

Pegasiani in Trebellianum transfusio.

§ 7. But, as the stipulations, which arose from the Pegasian decree, were displeasing even to the ancients, insomuch that Papinian, a man of sublime genius, considers them, in some cases, as captious; and, as we prefer simplicity to complexity in matters of law, it hath therefore pleased us, upon comparing the agreement and disagreement of each decree, to abrogate the Pegasian, which was subsequent to the Trebellian, and to transfer a greater authority to the Trebellian decree, by which all trust inheritances shall be restored for the future, whether the testator hath given by his will a fourth part of his estate to his written heir, or more, or less, or even nothing; so that, when nothing is given to the heir, or less than a fourth part, he may be permitted to retain a fourth, or as much as will complete the deficiency, by virtue of our authority: or to demand repayment of what he hath expended; all actions being divided between the heir and the fidei-commissary in a just proportion according to the Trebellian decree. But, should the heir spontaneously restore the whole inheritance, all actions must be brought either by or against the fidei-commissary. And whereas it was the principal effect of the Pegasian decree, that, when a written heir had refused to accept an inheritance, he might be constrained to take it, and restore it at the instance of the fidei-commissary, to whom, and against whom all actions passed, we have transferred that power to the Trebellian decree; which is now the only law compelling a fiduciary heir to enter upon the inheritance, when the fidei-commissary is desirous that it should be restored; and the heir, in this case, can neither receive profit, or suffer loss.

hæreditatem sponte restituerit omnes hæreditariæ actiones fidei-commissario, et adversus eum, competant. Sed etiam id, quod præcipuum Pegasiani senatus-consulti fuerat, ut, quando recusaret hæres scriptus sibi datam hæreditatem adire, necessitas ei imponeretur totam hæreditatem volenti fidei-commissario restituere, et omnes ad eum, et contra eum, transferre actiones; et hoc transposuimus ad senatus-consultum Trebellianum, ut ex hoc solo necessitas hæredi imponatur, si, ipso nolente adire, fidei-commissarius desiderit restitui sibi hæreditatem, nullo nec damno nec commodo apud hæredem remanente.

De quibus hæredibus, et in quibus fidei-commissariis, supra dicta locum habeant.

§ VIII. Nihil autem interest, utrum aliquis, ex asse hæres institutus, aut totam hæreditatem aut pro parte restituere rogatur; an, ex parte hæres institutus, aut totam eam partem, aut partem partis, restituere rogatur. Nam et hoc casu eadem observari præcipimus, quæ in totius hæreditatis restitutione diximus.

§ 8. But it makes no difference, whether an heir, who is instituted to the whole inheritance, be requested (by the testator) to restore the whole or a part only, or whether being nominated but to a part, be requested to restore that entire part, or only a portion of it; for we have ordained, that the same rule shall be observed as in case of restitution of the whole.

De eo, quod hæres voluntate testatoris deducit, præcipitve.

§ IX. Si quis, unâ aliquâ re deductâ sive præceptâ, quæ quartam continent, (veluti fundo vel aliâ re,) rogatus sit restituere hæreditatem,

§ 9. If an heir be requested by a testator to give up an inheritance, after deducting some specific thing, amounting to a fourth, as a piece of simili modo ex Trebelliano senatus-consulto restitutio fiet, perinde ac si, quartâ parte retentâ, rogatus esset reliquam hæreditatem restituere. Sed illud interest, quod altero casu, id est, cum deductâ sive præceptâ aliquâ re restituitur hæreditas, in solidum ex eo senatus-consulto actiones transferuntur, et res, quæ onere hæreditario apud eum remanet, quasi ex legato ei acquisita; altero vero casu, cum quartâ partè retentâ rogatus est hæres restituere hæreditatem, et restituit, scinduntur actiones: et pro dodrante quidem transferuntur ad fidei-commissarium, pro quadrante remanent apud hæredem. Quinetiam licet unâ aliquâ re deductâ aut præceptâ, restituere aliquis hæreditatem rogatus sit in quâ maxima pars hæreditatis contineatur, æquè in solidum transferuntur actiones: et secum deliberare debet is cui restituitur hæreditas, an expediat sibi restitui. Eadem scilicet interveniunt, et si duabus pluribusve rebus deductis præceptisve, restituere hæreditatem rogatus sit. Sed et, si certâ summâ deductâ præceptâve, quæ quartam vel etiam maximam partem hæreditatis continet, rogatus sit aliquis hæreditatem restituere, idem juris est. Quæ autem diximus de eo, qui ex asse institutus est eadem transferi-ground, &c. he may be compelled to give it up by the Trebellian decree in the same manner, as if he had been requested to restore the remainder of an inheritance, after reserving a fourth. But there is this difference, that, when an heir is requested to give up an inheritance, after deducting a particular thing, then all actions are transferred to the fidei-commissary, and what remains with the heir is free of incumbrance, as if acquired by legacy; but when an heir is requested in general terms to give up an inheritance, after retaining a fourth to himself, all actions are proportionably divided; those, which regard the three fourths of the estate, being transferred to the fidei-commissary; and those, which regard the single fourth remaining for the benefit of the heir. And, even if an heir be requested to give up an inheritance, after making a deduction of some particular thing, which amounts to the value of the greatest part of it, all actions, both active and passive, are nevertheless transferred to the fidei-commissary, who ought always, therefore, to consider, whether it will be expedient or not, that the inheritance should be given up to him. So the law is, whether an heir be requested to give up an inheritance after a deduction of two or more specific things, or of a certain sum of money, which exceeds in value the greatest part of the inheritance. Thus what we have said of an heir, who is instituted to the whole of an inheritance, holds equally of him, who is instituted only to a part.

De fidei-commissis ab intestato relictis.

§ X. Præterea intestatus quoque moriturus potest rogare eum, ad quem bona sua vel legitimo jure vel honorario pertinere intelligit, ut hæreditatem suam totam, partemve ejus, aut rem aliquam, veluti fundum, hominem, pecuniam, alicui restituat; cum aliq̄ui, legata nisi ex testamento non valeant.

§ 10. Moreover a man about to die intestate, may request the person whom he thinks will succeed him, either by the civil or prætorian law to give up the whole inheritance, or a part of it, or any particular thing, as a piece of ground, a slave, a sum of money, &c. (But this regards trusts only;) for legacies are invalid, unless bequeathed by testament.

De fidei-commisso relicto a fidei-commissario.

§ XI. Eum quoque, cui aliquid restituitur, potest rogare, ut id rursus alii, aut totum, aut partem, vel etiam aliquid, aliud restituat.

§ 11. A fidei-commissary may also himself be requested to give up to another, either the whole, or a part, of what he receives; or some other thing in lieu of it.

De probatione fidei-commissi.

§ XII. Et, quia prima fidei-commissorum cunabula à fide hæredum pendent, et tam nomen, quam substantiam, acceperunt, ideò D. Augustus ad necessitatem juris ea retraxit. Nuper et nos, eundem principem superare contententes, ex facto quod Tribonianus, vir excellentissimus, quæstor sacri palatii, suggestit, constitutionem fecimus, per quam disposuimus, si testator fidei hæredis sui commisit, ut vel hæreditatem vel speciale fidei-com-

§ 12. All fiduciary bequests depended formerly upon the sole faith of the heir; whence they took as well their name as their essence. The emperor Augustus was the first, who brought them under judicial cognisance. But we have since endeavoured to exceed that prince; and at the instance of that most excellent man Tribonian, the quæstor of our palace we have enacted, that, if a testator hath trusted to the faith of his heir for the surrender of an inmissum restituat; et neque ex scriptura, neque ex quinque testium numero, qui in fidei-commissis legitimus esse noscitur, possit res manifestari, sed vel pauciores, vel nemo penitus testis interveni-rit; tunc, sive pater hæredis, si-ve alius quicumque sit, qui fi-dem hæredis elegerit, et ab eo restitui aliquid voluerit, si hæres perfidiâ tentus adimplere fidem re-cusat, negando rem ita esse subse-cutam; si fidei-commissarius ei jus-jurandum detulerit, cum prius ipse de calumniâ juraverit, necesse eum habere, vel jusjurandum subire, quod nihil tale à testatore audiverit, vel recusantem ad fidei-commissi vel universalis vel specialis solutio-nem coarctari; ne depereat ultima voluntas testatoris fidei hæredis commissæ. Eadem observari cen-suimus, etsi a legatario vel fidei-commissario aliquid similiter relic-tum sit. Quod si is, à quo relic-tum dicitur, [postquam negaverit,] confiteatur quidem, aliquid à se re-lictum esse, sed ad legis subtilita-tem recurrat, omnino solvere cogendus est.

heritance or any particular thing, and this trust cannot be made man-ifest by the depositions of five wit-nesses, (which is known to be the legal number in such cases,) there having been not so many, or per-haps no witnesses present, the heir at the same time perfidiously refus-ing to make any payment, and de-nying the whole transaction, then the fidei-commissary, having previ-ously taken the oath of calumny, may put the heir although he be the son of the testator, to his oath; and thus force him either to deny the trust upon oath, or comply with it, whether the trust be universal or particular; and this is allowed, lest the last will of a testator, committed to the faith of an heir, should be de-feated. And we have granted the same remedy against a legatee, or even a fidei-commissary, to whom any thing hath been thus bequeath-ed. And, if he, to whom some-thing hath been so left, should con-fess the trust, after having denied it, but endeavour at the same time to shelter himself under subtlety of the law, he may nevertheless be compelled to perform his duty.

TITULUS VIGESIMUS-QUARTUS.

DE SINGULIS REBUS PER FIDEI-COMMISSUM RELICTIS.

Summa.

POTEST tamen quis etiam singulas res per fidei-commissum relinquere; veluti fundum, argentum, hominem, vestem, et pecuniam numeratam; et vel ipsum hæredem rogare, ut alicui restituat; vel legatarium, quamvis è legatario legari non possit.

A man may also leave particular things in trust; as a field, silver, cloaths, or a certain sum of money; and may request either his heir to restore them, or even a legatee; although a legatee cannot be made chargeable with a legacy.

Quæ relinqui possunt.

§ 1. A testator may leave in trust not only his own property, but also that of his heir, of a legatee, of a fidei-commissary, or of any other: so that a legatee or fidei-commissary may not only be requested to give what hath been left to him, but what is his own, or even what is the property of another. The only caution necessary to be observed by the testator is, that no man be requested to give more, than he hath received under the will; for the excess will be ineffectually bequeathed. And, when the property of another is left in trust, the person, requested to restore it, is obliged either to obtain from the proprietor the very thing bequeathed, or to pay the value of it.

res eum rogetur manumittere, vel legatarius, vel fidei-commissarius; nec interest, utrùm de suo proprio servo testator roget, an de eo, qui ipsius hæredis, aut legatarii, vel etiam extranei sit: itaque et alienus servus redimi et manumitti debet. Quod si dominus eum non vendat, (si modò nihil ex iudicio ejus, qui reliquit libertatem, perceperit,) non statim extinguitur fidei-commissaria libertas, sed differtur, quoad possit tempore procedente, ubicunque occasio servi redimendi fuerit, præstari libertas. Qui autem ex fidei-commissi causâ manumittitur, non testatoris fit libertus, etiamsi testatoris servus sit, sed ejus, qui manumittit. At is, qui directò ex testamento liber esse jubetur, ipsius testatoris libertus fit; qui etiam Orcinus appellatur: nec alius ullus directò ex testamento libertatem habere potest, quam qui utroque tempore testatoris fuerit, et quo faceret testamentum, et quo moreretur. Directò autem libertas tunc dari videtur, cum non ab alio servum manumitti rogat, sed velut ex suo testamento libertatem ei competere vult.

trust; for an heir, legatee, or fidei-commissary, may be requested to manumit: nor does it signify whether the testator request the manumission of his own slave, of the slave of his heir, of a legatee, or of a stranger: and therefore, when a slave is not the testator's own property, he must be bought, if possible and manumitted. But, if the proprietor of the slave refuse to sell him, (which he may do, if he hath taken nothing under the will of the testator,) yet the fiduciary bequest is not extinguished, but deferred only, till it can be conveniently performed. Note, that he, who is manumitted in consequence of a trust, does not become the freeman of the testator, although he was the testator's own slave, but he becomes the freeman of the manumittor: but a slave, to whom liberty is directly given by testament, becomes the freeman of the testator, and is called Orcinus; and no one can obtain liberty directly by testament, unless he were the slave of the testator, not only at the time of the testator's death, but also at the time of making his testament. And liberty is understood to be directly given, not when a testator requests, that freedom shall be given to his slave by another, but when he wills it to take place by virtue of his own testament.

DE CODICILLIS.

D. xxix. T. 7. C. vi. T. 36.

Codicillorum origo.

ANTE Augusti tempora constat, codicillorum jus in usu non fuisse: sed primus Lucius Lentulus, ex cujus personâ etiam fideicommissa esse cœperunt, codicillos introduxit. Nam, cum decederet in Africa, scripsit codicillos testamento confirmatos, quibus ab Augusto petiit per fideicommissum, ut faceret aliquid: et, cum D. Augustus voluntatem ejus implesset, deinceps reliqui, ejus auctoritatem secuti, fideicommissa præstabant: et filia Lentuli, legata, quæ jure non debebat, solvit. Dicitur autem Augustus convocasse sapientes viros, interque eos Trebatium quoque, cujus tunc auctoritas maxima erat, et quæsisse, an posset recipi hoc, nec absonans à juris ratione codicillorum usus esset? et Trebatium suasisse Augusto, quod diceret, utilissimum et necessarium hoc civibus esse, propter magnas et longas peregrinationes, quæ apud veteres fuissent; ubi, si quis testamentum facere non posset, tamen codicillos posset. Post quæ tempora,

It is certain, that codicils were not in frequent use before the reign of Augustus: for Lucius Lentulus, by whose means trusts became efficacious, was the first, who introduced codicils. When dying in Africa, he wrote several codicils, which were confirmed by his testament; and in these he requested Augustus to perform some particular act in consequence of a trust: the emperor complied with the request; and many other persons influenced by the emperor's example, executed trusts, committed to their charge; and the daughter of Lentulus paid debts, which in strictness of law were not due. But it is reported, that Augustus, having convened upon this occasion the sages of the law, among the rest Trebatius, whose opinion was of the greatest authority, demanded whether codicils could be admitted and whether they were not repugnant to the reason of the law? to which Trebatius answered, that codicils were most convenient, and necessary on account of the great and long journies, which the Romans were frequently obliged to take, so that, where a man could not make a testament, he might bequeath his effects by codicil. Afterwards, when Labeo, (a lawyer of great eminence,) disposed of his own property by codicil, it was no longer a doubt, but that codicils might be legally allowed.

Codicilli fieri possunt vel ante, vel post, testamentum, imo etiam ab intestato.

§ I. Non tantum autem testamento facto potest quis codicillos facere, sed et intestatus quis decedens fidei-committere codicillis potest. Sed, cum antè testamentum factum codicilli facti erant, Papinianus ait, non aliter vires habere, quam si speciali voluntate postea confirmentur. Sed Divi Severus et Antoninus rescripserunt, ex iis codicillis, qui testamentum præcedunt, posse fidei-commissum peti, si appareat eum, qui testamentum fecit, à voluntate, quam in codicillis expresserat, non recessisse.

§ 1. Not only one who hath already made his will, may make a codicil, but even an intestate may raise a trust by codicil: yet, when a codicil is antecedent to a testament, it cannot take effect according to Papinian, unless confirmed by the subsequent testament. But the emperors Severus and Antoninus have by rescript declared, that a thing, left in trust in a codicil preceding a testament, may be demanded by the fidei-commissary, if it appear, that the testator hath not receded from the intention, which he at first expressed in his codicil.

Codicillis hæreditas directo dari non potest.

§ II. Codicillis autem hæreditas neque dari, neque adimi, potest; ne confundatur jus testamentum et codicillorum: et ideo nec exhereditatio scribi. Directò autem hæreditas codicillis neque dari neque adimi potest: nam per fidei-commissum hæreditas codicillis jure relinquitur. Nec conditionem hæredi instituto codicillis adjicere,

§ 2. An inheritance can neither be given nor taken away by codicil, lest the different operations of testaments and codicils be confounded: of course, no heir can be disinherited by codicil. But although an inheritance can neither be given nor taken away by codicil, in direct terms, yet it may be legally left from the heir in a codicil, by means of a (trust or) fidei-commissum.

No man may impose a condition upon his heir by codicil, or substitute directly.

De numero et solemnitate.

TITULUS PRIMUS.

DE HÆREDITATIBUS, QUÆ AB INTESTATO DEFERUNTUR.

D. xxxviii. T. 16. C. vi. T. 55 et 58. Nov. 118.

Definitio intestati.

INTESTATUS decedit, qui aut omnino testamentum non fecit, aut non jure fecit; aut id, quod fecerat, ruptum irritumve factum est; aut si ex eo nemo hæres extiterit.

A man dies intestate, who hath either not made a testament; or not made one in due form of law; or if his testament, though rightly made, be cancelled, or broken; or if no one will become heir under it.

Primus ordo succedentium ab intestato.

§ I. Intestatorum autem hæreditates ex lege duodecim tabularum primum ad suos hæredes pertinent.

§ 1. The inheritances of intestates, by the law of the twelve tables belong, in the first place, to the sui hæredes, i. e. to the proper or domestic heirs of such intestates.

Qui sunt sui hæredes.

§ II. Sui autem hæredes existimantur, (ut supra diximus,) qui in potestate morientis fuerint; veluti filius filiave, nepos neptisve ex filio, pronepos, proneptisve ex nepote, ex filio nato prognatus prognatave: nec interest, utrum naturales sint liberi, an adoptivi. Quibus connu-

§ 2. And as we have observed before, those are sui hæredes or proper heirs, who at the death of the deceased, were under his power; as a son or a daughter, a grandson or a grand-daughter by a son, a great-grandson or great-grand-daughter by a grandson of a son, &c. Nei-merari necesse est etiam-eos, qui ex legitimis quidem nuptiis vel matrimonii non sunt progeniti, curiis tamen civitatum dati, secundum Divalium constitutionem, quæ super his positæ sunt, tenorem hæredum suorum jura nanciscuntur: nec non eos, quos nostræ amplexæ sunt constitutiones, per quas jussimus, si quis mulierem in suo contubernio copulaverit, non ab initio affectione maritali, eam tamen, cum quâ poterat habere conjugium, et ex eâ liberos sustulerit, postea verò, affectione procedente etiam nuptialia instrumenta cum ea fecerit, et filios vel filias habuerit, non solum eos liberos, qui post dotem editi sunt, justos et in potestate patris esse; sed etiam anteriores, qui et iis, qui postea nati sunt, occasionem legitimi nominis præstiterunt: quod obtinere censuimus, etsi non progeniti fuerint post dotale instrumentum confectum liberi, vel etiam nati ab hac luce fuerint subtrahi. Ita demum tamen nepos neptisve, pronepos proneptisve, suorum hæredum numero sunt, si præcedens persona desierit in potestate parentis esse, sive morte id acciderit, sive aliâ ratione, veluti emancipatione. Nam, si per id tempus, quo quis moritur, filius in potestate ejus sit, nepos ex eo suus hæres esse non potest: idque et in cæteris liberorum personis dictum intelligimus. Posthumi quoque, qui, si vivo pa-ther is it material, whether these children be natural or adopted. But, among natural children, we must reckon those, who, not born in lawful wedlock, are nevertheless, according to the tenor of the imperial constitutions, entitled to the rights of proper heirs, by being admitted Decurions. Those also are comprized within our own constitutions, which enact that, if any person shall keep a woman with whom he is not prohibited to marry, and have children by her, and shall afterwards, through affection, marry that woman, and have by her sons or daughters, not only these latter shall be legitimate and in the power of their father, but also the former, who gave occasion to the legitimacy of the children born afterwards. And this law shall obtain as to children born before marriage; although the children born subsequent to it, are dead, or none such are born. But a grandson or grand-daughter, a great grandson or great-grand-daughter, is not reckoned in the number of proper heirs, unless the person preceding them in degree hath ceased to be under paternal power, either by death or some other means, as by emancipation: for, if a son, when his father died, was under the power of his father, the grandson cannot be the proper heir of his grandfather; and by parity of reasoning, this rule is understood to take place in relation to all descendants in the right line. But all posthumous children, who would have been under the power of their father, if they had been born in his life-time, are esteemed sui hæredes, or proper heirs.

Quomodo sui hæredes fiunt.

§ III. Sui autem hæredes fiunt etiam ignorantes, et, licet furiosi, sint, hæredes possunt existere: quia, quibus ex causis ignorantibus nobis acquiritur, ex his causis et furiosis acquiri potest. Et statim à morte parentis quasi continuatur dominium; et ideo nec tutoris auctoritate opus est pupillis, cum etiam ignorantibus acquiratur suis hæredibus hæreditas: nec curatoris assensu acquiritur furioso, sed ipso jure.

§ 3. Persons may become proper heirs, without their knowledge, even though insane; for by whatever means inheritances may be acquired without our knowledge, by the same means they may be acquired by persons insane. The dominion of an inheritance is continued in the heir from the instant of the death of his ancestor; nor is the authority of a tutor necessary, because inheritances may be acquired by proper heirs, without their knowledge: neither does a disordered person inherit by assent of his curator, but by operation of law.

De filio, post mortem partis, ab hostibus reverso.

§ IV. Interdum autem, licet in potestate parentis mortis tempore suus hæres non fuerit, tamen suus hæres parenti efficitur: veluti si ab hostibus quis reversus fuerit post mortem patris sui: jus enim postliminii hoc facit.

§ 4. But sometimes a child becomes a proper heir, although he was not under power at the death of his parent; as when a person returns from captivity after the death of his father: the jus postliminii, or right of return, effects this.

De memoria patris damnata ob crimen perduellionis.

§ 5. On the contrary, it may happen, that a child, who, at the death of his parent, was under his power, shall not be his proper heir: as when a parent, after his decease, is adjudged to have been guilty of lese-majesty, whereby his memory is rendered infamous, and he can have no proper heir, all his possessions becoming forfeited to the treasury. But a son, in this case, may be said to have been the proper heir of his father, and afterwards to have ceased to be so.

De divisione hæreditatis inter suos hæredes.

§ VI. Cum filius filiave et ex altero filio nepos neptisve existunt, paritèr ad hæreditatem avi vocantur, nec qui gradu proximior est, ulteriorem excludit: æquum enim esse videtur, nepotes neptesve in patris sui locum succedere. Pari ratione et si nepos neptisve sit ex filio, et ex nepote pronepos proneptisve, simul vocantur. Et, quia placuit, nepotes neptesve, item pronepotes proneptesve, in parentis sui locum succedere, conveniens esse visum est, non in capita, sed in stirpes, hæreditatem dividi; ut filius partem dimidiam hæreditatis habeat, et ex altero filio duo pluresve nepotes alteram dimidiam. Item, si ex duobus filiis, nepotes neptesve existant, ex altero unus aut duo fortè, ex altero tres aut quatuor, ad unum aut duos dimidia pars pertineat, ad tres vel quatuor altera dimidia.

§ 6. A son, a daughter, and a grandson or grand-daughter by another son, are called equally to the inheritance; nor does the nearest exclude the more remote; for it seems just, that grandsons and grand-daughters should succeed in the place of their father. By like reason, a grandson or grand-daughter by a son, and a great-grandson or great-grand-daughter by a grandson, are all called together. And since grandsons and grand-daughters, great-grandsons and great-grand-daughters, succeed in place of their parent, it seemed convenient, that inheritances should not be divided into capita, but into stirpes: so that a son, should possess one half, and the grand-children, (however numerous) of another son, the other half of an inheritance. So, where there are grand-children by two sons, the one son leaving one or two children, and the other three or four, the inheritance must belong, half to the grand-child, or the two grand-children by the one son, and half to the three or four grand-children by the other son.

§ VII. Cum autem quæritur, an quis suus hæres existere possit, eo tempore quærendum est, quo certum est, aliquem sinè testamento decessisse; quod accidit et destituto testamento. Hac ratione, si filius exhæredatus fuerit et, extraneus hæres institutus, et, filio mortuo, postea certum fuerit, hæredem institutum ex testamento non fieri hæredem, aut quia noluit esse hæres, aut quia non potuit, nepos avo suus hæres existet: quia, quo tempore certum est, intestatum decessisse patrem-familias, solus invenitur nepos: et hoc certum est.

§ 7. When it is asked, is such a man a proper heir? we must inquire at what time it was certain, that the deceased died without a testament; which happens, if his testament be relinquished. Thus, if a son be disinherited and a stranger instituted heir, and, after the death of the son, it becomes certain, that the instituted heir was not in fact the heir, either because he was unwilling, or unable to accept the inheritance, in this case the grandson of the deceased becomes the proper heir of his grandfather: for at the time, when it was certain that the deceased died intestate, there was no other heir, but the grand-child; and this is evident.

§ VIII. Et, licèt post mortem avi natns sit, tamèn avo vivo conceptus, mortuo patre ejus, posteaque deserto avi testamento, suus hæres efficitur. Planè, si et conceptus et natus fuerit post mortem avi, mortuo patre suo, desertoque postea avi testamento, suus hæres avo non existet; quia nullo jure cognationis patrem sui patris attigit: sed nec ille est inter liberos avi, quem filius emancipatus adoptavit. Hi autem, cum non sint, sui (quantum ad hæreditatem,) liberi, neque bonorum possessionem petere

§ 8. And although a child be born after the death of his grandfather, yet, if he were conceived in the lifetime of his grandfather, he will, at the death of his father and after his grandfather's testament is deserted by the instituted heir, become the proper heir of his grandfather. But a child both conceived and born after the death of his grandfather, could not become the proper heir, although his father should die and the testament of his grandfather be deserted; because he was never allied to his grandfather by any tie of cognition : neither is the adopted son of an emancipated son, to be reckoned among the children of his adoptive father's father. So that the adopted children of an emancipated son, can neither become the proper heirs of their father's father in regard to the inheritance, nor demand the possession of goods as next of kin. Thus much concerning proper heirs.

De liberis emancipatis.

§ IX. Emancipati autem liberi jure civili nihil juris habent : nequè enim sui hæredes sunt, qui in potestate morientis esse desierunt, neque ullo alio jure per legem duodecim tabularum vocantur. Sed prætor, naturali æquitate motus, dat eis bonorem possessionem unde liberi, perindè ac si in potestate parentis tempore mortis fuissent ; sive soli sint, sive cum suis hæredibus concurrant. Itaque, duobus liberis existentibus, emancipato uno, et eo, qui tempore mortis in potestate fuerit, sanè quidem is, qui in potestate fuit, solus jure civili hæres est, et solus suus hæres ; sed, cum emancipatus, beneficio prætoris, in partem admittitur, evenit, ut suus hæres pro parte hæres fiat.

§ 9. Emancipated children by the civil law have no right to the inheritances of their parents : for those are not proper heirs, who have ceased to be under the power of their parent deceased, before his death, neither are they called to inherit by any other right according to the law of the twelve tables. But the prætor, induced by natural equity, grants them possession of goods, by the edict beginning, unde liberi, as fully, as if they had been under power at the death of their parent ; and this, whether they be sole, or mixed with others, who are proper heirs : therefore, when there are two sons, one emancipated, and the other under power at his father's death, the latter, by the civil law, is alone the heir, and alone the proper heir : but, when the emancipated son, by the indulgence of the prætor, is admitted to his share, then the proper heir becomes the heir only of his own moiety.

Si emancipatus se dederit in adoptionem.

§ X. At hi, qui emancipati à parente in adoptionem se dederunt, non admittuntur ad bona naturalis patris quasi liberi, si modò, cum is moreretur, in adoptivâ familiâ fuerint : nam vivo eo emancipati ab adoptivo patre perindè admittuntur ad bona naturalis patris, ac si emancipati ab ipso essent, nec unquam in adoptivi familiâ fuissent : et convenientè, quod adoptivum patrem pertinet, extraneorum loco esse incipiunt. Post mortem verò naturalis patris emancipati ab adoptivo patre, et, quantum ad hunc adoptivum patrem pertinet, æque extraneorum loco fiunt, et, quantum ad naturalis patris bona pertinet, nihilò magis liberorum gradum nanciscuntur. adoption, are not admitted, as children, to the possession of the effects of their natural father, if, at the time of his death, they were in the adoptive family. But, if in the lifetime of their natural father, they were emancipated by their adoptive father, they are then admitted (by the prætor) to take the goods of their natural father, as if they had been emancipated by him, and had never entered into the family of the adoptor : consequently, in regard to their adoptive father they are looked upon as mere strangers. But those who are emancipated by their adoptive father, after the death of their natural father, are nevertheless reputed strangers to their adoptive father ; and, in regard to the inheritance of their natural father, they are not at all the more intitled to re-assume the rank of children. These rules of law have been established, inasmuch as it was unjust, that it should be in the power of an adoptor to determine at his pleasure, to whom the inheritance of a natural father should appertain, whether to his children, or to his agnates.

Collatio filiorum naturalium et adoptivorum.

§ XI. Minus ergo juris habent adoptivi filii, quam naturales : namque naturales emancipati, beneficio prætoris gradum liberorum retinent, licèt jure civili perdant. Adoptivi verò emancipati et jure civili perdunt gradum liberorum, et à prætore non admittuntur ; et rectè. Naturalia enim jura civilis ratio perimere non potest ; nec, quia

§ 11. Adopted children have therefore fewer rights and privileges, than natural children ; who, even after emancipation, retain the rank of children by the indulgence of the prætor, although they lose it by the civil law : but adopted children, when emancipated, lose the rank of children by the civil law, and are denied admittance into the rank of children by the prætor; and properly: for civil policy cannot destroy natural rights; nor can natural children ever cease to be sons and daughters, grandsons and granddaughters although they may cease to be proper heirs: but adopted children, when emancipated, become instantly strangers; for the right and name of son or daughter, obtained by the civil right of adoption, may be destroyed by the civil right of emancipation.

De bonorum possessione contra tabulas.

§ XII. Eadem hæc observantur et in eâ bonorum possessione, quam contra tabulas testamenti parentis liberis præteritis, id est, neque hæredibus institutis, neque, ut oportet, exhæredatis, prætor pollicetur. Nam eos quidem, qui in potestate, mortis tempore fuerint, et emancipatos, vocat prætor ad eandem bonorum possessionem; eos verò, qui in adoptivâ familiâ fuerint per hoc tempus, quo naturalis parens moretur, repellit. Item adoptivos liberos, emancipatos ab adoptivo patre, sicut nec ab intestato, ita longè minùs contra tabulas testamenti, ad bona ejus admittit; quia desinunt in numero liberorum ejus esse.

§ 12. The same rules are observed as to that possession of goods, which the prætor contrary to the testament of the parent, grants to children, not mentioned therein: that is, who are neither instituted heirs, nor properly disinherited. For the prætor calls those, who were under power at the death of their parents, and those also, who are emancipated, to the same possession of goods; but he repels those, who were in an adoptive family at the decease of their natural parents. And, as the prætor admits not such adopted children, as have been emancipated by their adoptive father to succeed him ab intestato, much less does he admit such children to possess the goods of their adoptive father contrary to his testament; for by emancipation, they cease to be in the number of his children.

Unde cognati.

§ XIII. Admonendi tamen sumus, eos, qui in alienâ familia sunt, § 13. We must nevertheless observe, that, although those, who quive post mortem naturalis parentis ab adoptivo patre emancipati fuerint, intestato parente naturali mortuo, licet eâ parte edicti, qua liberi ad bonorum possessionem vocantur, non admittantur, aliâ tamen parte vocari, scilicet, quâ cognati defuncti vocantur. Ex quâ ita admittuntur, si neque sui hæredes liberi, neque emancipati obstant, neque agnatus quidem ullus interveniat. Antè enim prætor liberos vocat, tam suos hæredes quam emancipatos, deinde legitimos hæredes, tertio proximos cognatas.

were in an adoptive family, but have been emancipated by their adoptive father, after the decease of their natural father, dying intestate, are not admitted by that part of the edict, by which children are called to the possession of goods, yet they are admitted by another part, by which the cognates of the deceased are called to the possession of his effects. But, by this last-named part of the edict, the cognates are only called when there is no opposition from proper heirs, emancipated children, or agnates: for the prætor first calls the proper heirs with the emancipated children, then the agnates, and lastly the nearest cognates.

Emendatio juris antiqui. De adoptivis.

§ 14. Such were the rules that formerly obtained; but they have received some emendation from our constitution, relating to persons given in adoption by their natural parents: for we have remarked instances of sons, who by adoption have lost their succession to their natural parents, and who, by the ease with which adoption is dissolved by emancipation, have also lost the right of succeeding to their adoptive parents. We therefore, as usual correcting what is amiss, have enacted that, when a natural father hath given his son in adoption, the rights of the son shall be preserved intire, as though he had still remained under the power of his natural father, and there had been no adoption; except only, that the person adopted may succeed to his adoptor, if he die intestate. But, if the adoptor make a will and omit to name his adopted son, such son can neither by the civil nor the prætorian law obtain any part of the inheritance, whether he demand possession of the effects, contra tabulas, (contrary to the letter of the testament,) or allege that the testament is inofficious: for an adoptor is under no obligation to institute, or disinherit his adopted son, there being no natural tie between them. Nor can the adopted person, claim under the Sabinian senatus-consulto, by being one of three sons: for in this case he can neither obtain the fourth part of his adoptive father's effects, nor be intitled to any action upon that account. But persons adopted by their natural parents, (i. e. by a grand-father or great-grand-father, &c.) are excepted in our constitution: for, as such persons are united together by the concurrence both of natural and civil rights, we have thought proper to retain the old law in relation to those adoptions; in the same manner, as when the father of a family hath given himself in arrogation. But all this, may be collected from the tenor of the above-mentioned constitution.

De descentibus ex fœminis.

autem, qui ex filiabus nati sunt, et pronepotes, qui ex neptibus, cognatorum loco connumerans, post agnatorum lineam eos vocabat, tam in avi vel proavi materni, quam in avise vel proavise, sive paternæ sive maternæ, successionem. Divi autem principes non passi sunt talem contra naturam injuriam sine competentem emendationem relinquere : sed, cum nepotis et pronepotis nomen commune sit utrisque, tam qui ex masculis, quam qui ex feminis descendunt, ideò eundem gradum et ordinem successionis eis donaverunt. Sed, ut ampliùs aliquid sit eis, qui non solum naturæ, sed etiam veteris juris, suffragiis muniuntur, portionem nepotum vel nepotum, vel deinceps, (de quibus supra diximus) paulò minuendam esse existimaverunt ; ut minus tertiâ parte acciperent, quam mater eorum, vel avia, fuerat acceptura, vel pater eorum vel avus, paternus sive maternus, quando femina mortua sit, cujus de hæreditate agitur ; iisque, licet soli sint, addeuntibus, agnatos minimè vocabant. Et, quemadmodum lex duodecim tabularum, filio mortuo, nepotes, vel neptes, pronepotes vel proneptes, in locum patris sui ad successionem avi sui vocat ; ita et principalis dispositio in locum matris suæ vel avise eos, cum jam designatâ partis tertiæ diminutione, vocat. Sed nos, cum adhuc dubitatio maneret inter agnatos et memoratos nepotes, quartam partem substantiæ defuncti agnatis sibi vingreat-grand-children born of grand-daughters, to be cognates, and prohibiting them from succeeding to their grand-father and great-grand-father, maternal or paternal, until after the line of agnati was exhausted. But the emperors Valentinian, Theodosius and Arcadius, would not continue such a violence against nature ; and, inasmuch as the name of grand-child and great-grand-child, is common, as well to descendants by females, as by males, they granted an equal right of succession in either case. But, to the end, that those persons who have been favoured by nature, as well as by the suffrage of antiquity, might enjoy some peculiar privileges, they thought it right, that the portions of grand-children, great-grand-children, and other lineal descendants of a female, should be somewhat diminished, and therefore they have not permitted such persons to receive so much by a third part, as their mother or grand-mother would have received ; or their father or grand-father, paternal or maternal, at the decease of a female ; for we now treat of inheritances, derived from a female ; and, although there were only grand-children by a female to take an inheritance, yet the emperors did not call the agnates to the succession. And as, upon the decease of a son, the law of the twelve tables calls the grand-children, and great-grand-children, male and female to represent their father as to the succession of their grand-father, dicantibus ex cujusdam constitutionis auctoritate, memoratam quidem constitutionem à nostro codice segregavimus, neque inseri eam ex Theodosiano codice in eo concessimus. Nostrâ autem constitutione promulgatâ, toti juri ejus derogatum est : et sanximus, talibus nepotibus ex filiâ, vel pronepotibus ex nepte, vel deinceps superstitibus, agnatos nullam partem mortui successionis sibi vindicare ; ne hi, qui ex transversâ lineâ veniunt, potiores his habeantur, qui recto jure descendunt. Quam constitutionem nostram obtinere secundum sui vigorem et tempora et nunc sancimus : ita tamen ut, quemadmodum inter filios et nepotes ex filio antiquitas statuit, non in capita, sed in stirpes, dividi hæreditatem, similiter nos, inter filios et nepotes ex filiâ, distributionem fieri jubeamus, vel inter omnes nepotes et neptes, et inter pronepotes vel proneptes, et alias deinceps, personas ; ut utraque progenies matris vel patris, aviæ vel avi, portionem sine ullâ diminutione consequatur : ut, si fortè unus vel duo ex unâ parte, ex alterâ tres aut quatuor extent unus aut duo dimidiam, so the imperial ordinance calls them to succession in the place of their mother or grand-mother, with the before-regulated diminution of a third part of their share. But as there still remained matter of dispute between the agnati and the above named grand-children, the agnati claiming the fourth part of the estate of the deceased by virtue of a certain constitution, we have therefore not permitted it to be inserted into our code from that of Theodosius. And further we have altered the old law by enacting that agnates shall not be entitled to any part of the goods of the deceased, while grand-children born of a daughter, or great-grand-children born of a grand-daughter, or any other descendants from a female in the right line, are living ; lest those, who proceed from the transverse line, should be preferred to lineal descendants. And we now decree, that this our ordinance shall obtain according to its full tenor. But as the old law ordered, that every inheritance should be divided in stirpes and not in capita, between the son of the deceased and his grandsons by a son, so we also ordain, that similar distribution shall be made between sons and grandsons by a daughter, and between grandsons and grand-daughters, great-grandsons and great-grand-daughters, and all other descendants in a right line, so that the issue, either of a mother or a father, or of a grand-mother or a grand-father may obtain their portions without any diminution ; and if on the one part there should be one or two claimants, and on the other part three or four, that the greater number shall be intitled to one half, and the less number to the other half of the inheritance.

TITULUS SECUNDUS.

DE LEGITIMA AGNATORUM SUCCESSIONE.

D. xxxviii. T. 16. C. vi. T. 58.

Secundus ordo hæredum legitimorum.

SI nemo suus hæres, vel eorum, quos inter suos hæredes prætor vel constitutiones vocant, existat, qui successionem quoquo modo amplectatur, tunc ex lege duodecim tabularum ad agnatum proximum pertinet hæreditas.

When there is no proper heir nor any person, whom the prætor or the constitutions would call to inherit with proper heirs, then the inheritance by a law of the twelve tables, appertains to the nearest agnate.

De agnatis naturalibus.

§ I. Sunt autem agnati (ut primo quoque libro tradidimus) cognati per virilis sexus personas cognitione conjuncti, quasi à patre connati. Itaque ex eodem patre nati

§ 1. Agnates, as we have observed in the first book, are those, who are related or cognated by males, (quasi à patre cognati :) and therefore brothers, who are the sons of fratres, agnati sibi sunt; qui et consanguinei vocantur: nec requiritur, an etiam eandem matrem habuerint. Item patruus fratris filio, et invicem is illi, agnatus est. Eodem numero sunt fratres patruales, id est, qui ex duobus fratribus procreati sunt qui etiam consobrini vocantur. Quâ ratione etiam ad plures gradus agnationis pervenire poterimus. Ii etiam, qui post mortem patris nascuntur, jura consanguinitatis nasciuntur. Non tamen omnibus simul agnatis dat lex hæreditatem; sed iis, qui tunc proximare gradu sunt, cum certum esse cœperit, aliquem intestatum decessisse.

the same father, are agnates in regard to each other; they are also consanguinei, of the same blood; but it is not required, that they should have the same mother. An uncle is also agnate to his brother's son, and vice versâ the brother's son to his paternal uncle, and brothers patrui, that is the children of brothers, who are also called consobrini, cousins are likewise reckoned agnates. Thus we may enumerate many degrees of agnation; and even those, who are born, after the decease of their parents, obtain the rights of consanguinity: the law nevertheless does not grant the right of inheritance to all the agnati, but to those only who are in the nearest degree, when it becomes certain, that the deceased hath died intestate.

De adoptivis.

§ II. Per adoptionem quoque agnationis jus consistit; veluti inter filios naturales et eos, quos pater eorum adoptavit; nec dubium est, quin si improprie consanguinei appellentur. Item, si quis ex cæteris agnatis suis, veluti frater aut patruus, aut denique is, qui longiore gradu est, adoptaverit aliquem agnatus inter tuos esse non dubitatur.

§ 2. The right of agnation arises also through adoption; thus the natural and adopted sons of the same father are agnates; but such persons are without doubt improperly called consanguinei. Also, if a brother, a paternal uncle, or any other of your more remote agnates, should adopt, then the person so adopted, is undoubtedly to be reckoned among your agnati.

De masculis et fœminis.

Masculi autem ad earum hæreditates, (etiãsi longissimo gradu sint,) admittantur. Quâ de causâ fratris tui, aut patris tui filiæ, vel amitæ tuæ, hæreditas ad te pertinebat; tua verò ad illas non pertinebat. Quod ideo ita constitutum erat, quia commodius videbatur, ita jura constitui, ut plerumque hæreditates ad masculos confluerent. Sed, quia sanè iniquum erat, in universum eas quasi extraneas repelli, prætor eas ad bonorum possessionem admittit eâ parte, qua proximitatis nomine bonorum possessionem pollicetur: ex quâ parte ita scilicet admittuntur, si neque agnatus ullus, neque proximior cognatus, interveniat. Et hæc quidem lex duodecim tabularum nullo modo introduxit; sed, simplicitatem legibus amicam amplexa, simili modo omnes agnatos, sive masculos sive fœminas, cujuscunque gradus, ad similitudinem suorum, invicem ad successionem vocabat. Media autem jurisprudentia, quæ erat quidem lege duodecim tabularum junior, imperiali autem dispositione anterior, subtilitate quâdam excogitatâ, præfatam differentiam inducebat, et penitus eas à successione agnatorum repellabat, omni aliâ successione incognitâ donec prætores paulatim asperitatem juris civilis corrigentes, sive quod deerat, implentes humathat females should only inherit by consanguinity, if sisters; and not in a more remote degree; though males might be admitted in the most distant degree to inherit females: thus in case of death, the inheritance of your brother's daughter, or if the daughter of your paternal uncle or aunt, would appertain to you; but your inheritance would not appertain to them. And this was so constituted, because it seemed expedient for the benefit of society, that inheritances should for the most part fall into the possession of males. But, as it was unjust, that females should be thus almost wholly excluded as strangers, the prætor admitted them to the possession of goods in that part of his edict, in which he gives the possession of goods on account of proximity: yet they are only admitted upon condition, that there is no agnate or nearer cognate. But the law of the twelve tables did not introduce these dispositions; for that law, according to the plainness and simplicity which are agreeable to all laws, called the agnates of either sex, or any degree, to succession, in the same manner as it admitted proper heirs. But the middle law, which was posterior to the law of the twelve tables, and prior to the imperial constitutions, subtilly introduced the before-mentioned distinction, and entirely repelled females from the succession of agnates, no other method of succession being known, until the præ-no proposito alium ordinem suis edictis addiderunt; et cognationis linea, proximitatis nomine introducta, per bonorum possessionem eas adjuvabant, et pollicebantur his bonorum possessionem, quæ unde cognati appellatur. Nos verò, legem duodecim tabularum sequentes, et ejus vestigia hac in parte conservantes, laudamus quidem prætores suæ humanitatis, non tamèn eos in plenum huic causæ mederi invenimus. Quarè etenim, uno eodemque gradu naturali concurrente, et agnationis titulis tam in masculis quam in fœminis æqua lance constitutis, masculis quidem debatur ad successionem venire omnium agnatorum, ex agnatis autem mulieribus nulli penitus, nisi soli sorori, ad agnatorum successionem patebat aditus? Ideò nos, in plenum omnia reducentes, et ad jus duodecim tabularum eandem dispositionem exæquantes, nostrâ constitutione sancimus, omnes legitimas personas, id est, per virilem sexum descendentes (sivè masculini generis sivè fœminini sint) simili modo ad jura successionis legitimæ, ab intestato vocari, secundùm sui gradus prærogativam; nec ideò excludendas, quia consanguinitatis jura, sicut germanæ, non habent.

tors, correcting by degrees the asperity of the civil law, or supplying what was deficient, added in their edicts a new order of succession, being induced to it by a motive of humanity; and, by introducing the line of cognation on account of proximity, they thus assisted the females, and gave them the possession of goods, which is called unde cognati. But we, although strictly adhering to the law of the twelve tables in regard to females, must yet commend the humanity of the prætors, though they have not afforded a full remedy in the present case. But, since the same natural degree of relation, and the same title of agnation appertains as well to females as to males, what reason can be assigned, that males should be permitted to succeed all their agnati, and that no means of succession should be open to any female agnate, except a sister? We therefore, reducing all things to an equality, and making our disposition conformable to the laws of the twelve tables, have by our constitution ordained, that all legitimate persons, that is, descendants from males, whether male or female, shall be equally called to the rights of succession ab intestato according to the prerogative of their degree, and be by no means excluded although they possess not the rights of consanguinity in so near a degree as sisters.

De filiis sororum.

§ IV. Hoc etiam addendum nostræ constitutioni existimavimus, ut transferatur unus tantummodò gradus à cognationis in legitimam successionem; ut non solum fratris filius et filia (secundum quod jam definivimus) ad successionem patris sui vocentur, sed etiam germanæ consanguineæ vel sororis uterinæ filius et filia soli, et non incèps personæ, una cum his ad jura avunculi sui perveniant: et, mortuo eo, qui patruus quidem est sui fratris filiis, avunculus autem sororis suæ soboli, simili modo ab utroque latere succedant, tanquam si omnes ex masculis descendentes legitimo jure veniant; scilicet ubi frater et soror superstites non sunt; (his etenim personis præcedentibus et successionem admittentibus, cæteri gradus remanent penitus semoti;) videlicet hæreditate non in stirpes, sed in capita, dividendâ.

§ 4. We have also thought fit to add to our constitution, so that one degree only is transferred from the line of cognation to the line of legitimate succession, i. e. of agnation: and not only the son and daughter of a brother (according to our former definition of agnates) shall be called to the succession of their paternal uncle, but the son or daughter of a sister, who is either by the same father or by the same mother, may also be admitted with agnates to the succession of their maternal uncle; but no one of the descendants of the son or daughter of a sister is by any means to be admitted. And, when a person dies, who at his decease was both a paternal and maternal uncle, that is, who had nephews or nieces living both by a brother and by a sister, then such children succeed in the same manner, as if they were all descendants from males, when the deceased leaves no brother or sister: and they take the inheritance not per stirpes, or according to their respective stocks, but per capita, i. e. by poll: but, if there be brothers or sisters, and they accept the succession, all others of a more remote degree are excluded.

De proximis vel remotis.

§ V. Si plures sint gradus agnatorum, apertè lex duodecim tabularum proximum vocat: itaque, si (verbi gratiâ) sint defuncti frater, et alterius fratris filius, aut patruus, frater potior habetur. Et,

§ 5. When there are many degrees of agnates, the law of the twelve tables calls for the nearest; if, for example, there is a brother of the deceased, and a son of another brother, or a paternal uncle, the brother is preferred. But, although the law of the twelve tables calls the nearest agnate in the singular number, yet doubtless, if there be many, in the same degree, they ought all to be admitted. And, although properly by the nearest degree must be understood the nearest of many, yet, if there be but one degree of agnates, the inheritance must undoubtedly appertain to those, who are in that degree.

Quo tempore proximitas spectatur.

§ VI. Proximus autem, si quidem nullo testamento facto quisquam decesserit, per hoc tempus requiritur, quo mortuus est is, cujus de hæreditate quæritur; quod si facto testamento quisquam decesserit, per hoc tempus requiritur, quo certum esse cõperit, nullum ex testamento hæredem exiturum; tunc enim propriè quisque intestatus decessisse intelligitur: quod quidem aliquandò longo tempore declaratur; in quo spatio temporis sæpè accidit, ut, proximior mortuo, proximus esse incipiat, qui moriente testatore non erat proximus.

§ 6. When a man dies without a will, that person is esteemed his nearest of kin who was so at the time of the decease. But, when the deceased hath actually made a testament, then that person is esteemed his nearest of kin, who was so when it became certain, that there was no testamentary heir: for, until then, a man who hath made a testament, cannot be said to have died intestate: and this sometimes may not appear for a long time; during which the proximate kinsman dying, some one becomes the nearest of kin, who was not so at the death of the testator.

De successorio edicto.

§ VII. Placebat autem, in eo genere percipiendarum hæreditatum successionem non esse; id est, ut quamvis proximus, qui secundùm ea, quæ diximus, vocatur ad hæreditatem, aut spreverit hæreditatem, aut antequam adeat, decesserit, nihilò magis legitimo jure sequentes

§ 7. But it is settled, that there is no succession among agnates; so that, if the nearest agnate be called to an inheritance, and hath either refused the heirship, or been prevented by death from entering upon it, his own legitimate heir would not be admitted to succeed him. But admittantur. Quod iterum prætores imperfecto jure corrigentes, non in totum sine adminiculo relinquebant, sed ex cognatorum ordine eos vocabant, ut pote agnationis jure eis recluso. Sed nos, nihil perfectissimo juri deesse cupientes, nostrâ constitutione, quam de jure patronatûs humanitate suggerente protulimus, sancimus successionem in agnatorum hæreditatibus non esse eis denegandam; cum satis absurdum erat, quod cognatis à prætore apertum est, hoc agnatis esse reclusum; maximè cum in onere quidem tutelarum et primo gradu deficiente sequeris succedit; et, quod in onere obtinebat, non erat in lucro permissum.

this the prætors have in some measure corrected, and have not left the agnates of a deceased person wholly without assistance, but have ordered that they should be called to the inheritance as cognates, because they were debarred from the rights of agnation. But we, earnestly desirous to render our law as perfect and complete as possible, have ordained by our constitution, which, induced by humanity, we published concerning the right of patronage, "that legitimate succession should not be denied to agnates in the inheritances of agnates:" for it was sufficiently absurd, that a right, which by means of the prætor was open to cognates, should be shut up and denied to agnates: but it was more abundantly absurd, that, in tutelages, the second degree of agnates should succeed upon failure of the first; and that the same law, which obtained in that, which was onerous, should not also obtain in that, which was lucrative.

De legitima parentum successionem.

§ VIII. Ad legitimam successionem nihilominus vocatur etiam parens, qui contractâ fiduciâ filium, vel filiam, nepotem vel neptem, ac deinceps, emancipat. Quod ex nostrâ constitutione omnino inducitur, ut emancipationes liberorum semper videantur, quasi contractâ fiduciâ, fieri; cum apud veteres non aliter hoc obtinebat, nisi specia-

§ 8. A parent, who hath emancipated a son, a daughter, a grandson a grand-daughter, or other lineal descendant under a fiduciary contract, is admitted to their legitimate succession. But it is now effected by our constitution, that every emancipation shall for the future be regarded, as if it had been made under such a contract; although a-litè contractâ fiduciâ parens manumississet.

mong the ancients the parent was never called to the legitimate succession of his children, unless he had actually emancipated them under a fiduciary contract.

TITULUS TERTIUS.

DE SENATUS-CONSULTO TERTYLLIANO.

D. xxxviii. T. 17. C. vi. T. 56.

De lege duodecim tabularum et jure Prætorio.

LEX duodecim tabularum ita stricto jure utebatur, et præponebat masculorum progeniem; et eos, qui per fœminini sexûs necessitudinem sibi junguntur, adèò expellebat, ut ne quidem inter matrem et filium filiamve ultro citroque hæreditatis capiendæ jus daret; nisi quod prætores ex proximitate cognatorum eas personas ad successionem bonorum, possessione unde cognati accommodatâ, vocabant.

Such was the rigor of the law of the twelve tables, that it preferred the issue by males, and excluded those who were related by the female line, so that the right of succession was not permitted to take place reciprocally between a mother and her son, or a mother and her daughter. But the prætors, on account of the proximity of cognation, admitted those, who were related by the female line, to the succession, giving them the possession of goods, called unde cognati.

De constitutione Divi Claudii.

§ I. Sed hæ juris angustię postea emendatę sunt; et primus quidem Divus Claudius matri, ad solatium liberorum amissorum, legitimam eorum detulit hæreditatem.

§ 1. But these narrow limits of the law were afterwards enlarged by the emperor Claudius, who first gave the legal inheritance of deceased children to their mothers, in assuasion of their grief for so great a loss.

Ad Senatus-consultum Tertillianum. De jure liberorum.

§ II. Postea autem senatus-consulto Tertilliano, quod Divi Adriani temporibus factum est, plenissime de tristi successione matri, non etiam aviæ, deferenda cautum est; ut mater ingenua trium liberorum jus habens, libertina quatuor, ad bona filiorum filiarumve admittatur intestato mortuorum, licet in potestate parentis sit; ut scilicet, cum alieno juri subjecta est, jussu ejus adeat hæreditatem, cujus juri subjecta est.

§ 2. Afterwards by the Tertillian senatus consultum, made in the reign of the emperor Adrian, the fullest care was taken, that the succession of children should pass to their mother, though not to their grand-mother: so that a mother, born of free parents, and having the right of three children,—also a freed-woman, having the right of four children, may be admitted, although under power of a parent, to the goods of their intestate children. But, a mother under power cannot enter upon the inheritance of her children, but at the command of him, to whom she is subject.

Qui præferuntur matri, vel cum ea admittuntur.

§ III. Præferuntur autem matri, liberi defuncti, qui sui sunt, quive suorum loco sunt, sive primi gradus, sive ulterioris. Sed et filiæ suæ mortuæ filius vel filia præponitur, ex constitutionibus, matri defunctæ, id est, aviæ suæ. Pater verò utriusque, non etiam avus et proavus, matri anteponitur; scilicet cum inter eos solos de hæreditate agitur. Frater autem consanguineus tam filii, quam filiæ, excludebat matrem; soror autem consanguinea pariter cum matre admittebatur. Sed, si fuerant frater et soror consanguinei, et mater liberis onerata, frater quidem matrem excludebat; communis autem erat

§ 3. The children of a deceased son who are proper heirs, or in the place of proper heirs, either in the first or an inferior degree, are preferred to the mother. And the son, or daughter, of a deceased daughter is also by the constitutions preferred to the mother; i. e. to their grand-mother. Also the father of a son, or daughter, is preferred to the mother; not so the grand-father or great-grand-father, when the inheritance is contended for by these only without the father. Also the consanguine brother either of a son or a daughter excluded the mother; but a consanguine sister was admitted equally with her mother. If there had be a brother and a sister of the same blood with the deceased, the brother excluded his mother, although she had children : but the inheritance, in this case, was equally divided between brothers and sisters.

Jus novum de jure liberorum sublato.

§ IV. Sed nos constitutione, quam in codice, nostro nomine decorato, posuimus, matri subveniendum esse existimavimus, respicientes ad naturam, et puerperium, et periculum, et sæpè mortem ex hoc casu matribus illatam. Ideoque impium esse credidimus, casum fortuitum in ejus admitti detrimentum. Si enim ingenua ter, vel libertina quater, non pepererit, immeritò defraudabatur successione suorum liberorum. Quid enim peccavit, si non plures, sed paucos, peperit? Et dedimus jus legitimum plenum matribus, sive ingenuis sive libertinis, etsi non ter emixtæ fuerint vel quater, sed eum tantum vel eam, qui quæve morte intercepti sunt, ut sic vocentur in liberorum suorum legitimam successionem.

§ 4. But by a constitution, inserted in the code, and honoured with our name, we have thought fit, that mothers should be favoured in regard to the considering natural reason, the pains of child-birth, the danger, and death itself, which they often suffer; we therefore have esteemed it highly unjust, that the law should make that detrimental, which is in its nature merely fortuitous; for, if a married woman free-born, does not bring forth three children, or if a free-woman does not become the mother of four, ought they, for this reason only, to be deprived of succession to their children? for how can it be imputed to them, as a crime? We therefore, not regarding any fixed number of children, have given a full right to every mother, whether ingenuous or freed, of being called to the legitimate succession of her child or children deceased, whether male or female.

Quibus mater præponitur, et quibuscum admittitur.

§ V. Sed, cum antea constitutiones, jura legitimæ successionis perscrutantes, partim matrem adjuvabant, partim eam prægravabant, nec in solidum eam vocabant, sed,

§ 5. In examining the constitutions of former emperors, relating to the right of succession, we observed that they were partly favourable to mothers and partly grievous; not in quibusdam casibus tertiam ei partem abstrahentes, certis legitimis dabant personis, in aliis autem contrarium faciebant, nobis visum est, rectâ et simplici viâ matrem omnibus personis legitimis anteponi, et sinè ullâ diminutione filiorum suorum successionem accipere; exceptâ fratris et sororis personâ, (sivè consanguini sint, sivè sola cognationis jura habentes) ut quemadmodum eam toti alii ordini legitimo præposuimus, ita omnes fratres et sorores, (sivè legitimi sint, sive non,) ad capiendas hæreditates simul vocemus: ita tamen ut, siquidem solæ sorores, agnatæ vel cognatæ, et mater defuncti vel defunctæ supersint, dimidiam quidem mater alteram verò dimidiam partem omnes sorores habeant. Si verò matre superstite, et fratre vel fratribus solis, vel etiam cum sororibus, sivè legitima sivè sola cognationis jura habentibus, intestatus quis vel intestata moriatur, in capita ejus distribuatur hæreditas.

always calling them to the intire inheritance of their children, but in some cases depriving them of a third which was given to certain legitimate persons: and in other cases, allowing a third. It hath therefore seemed right to us, that mothers should receive the succession of their children without any diminution, and that they should be exclusively preferred before all legitimate persons, except the brothers and sisters of the deceased, whether consanguine, or cognate: but, as we have preferred the mother to all other legitimate persons, we are willing to call all brothers and sisters, legitimate or otherwise, to the inheritance together with the mother; yet in such manner, that if only the sisters agnate or cognate, and the mother of the deceased survive, the mother shall have one half of the effects, and the sisters the other. But, if a mother survive, and also a brother or brothers, or brothers and sisters, whether legitimate or cognate, then the inheritance of the intestate son or daughter must be distributed in capita; i. e. into equal shares.

De tutore liberis petendo.

§ VI. Sed, quemadmodum nos matribus prospeximus, ita eas oportet suæ soboli consulere; scituris eis quod, si tutores liberis non petierint, vel in locum remoti vel excusati intra annum petere neglexerint, ab eorum impuberum moriendren, or to require a new tutor in the place of a former, who hath either been removed or excused, she will be deservedly repelled from the succession of such children, if they die within puberty.

Do vulgo quæsitis.

§ 7. Although a son or daughter be of spurious birth, yet the mother, by the Tertyllian senatus-consultum, may be admitted to succeed to the goods of either.

TITULUS QUARTUS.

DE SENATUS-CONSULTO ORFICIANO.

D. xxxviii. T. 17. C. vi. T. 57.

Origo et summa senatus-consulti.

PER contrarium autem liberi ad bona matrum intestatarum admittuntur ex senatus-consulto Orficiano, quod, Orficio et Rufo consulibus, effectum est Divi Marci temporibus; et data est tam filio quam filiæ, legitima hæreditas, etiamsi alieno juri subjecti sint; et præferuntur consanguineis et agnatis defunctæ matris.

On the contrary children are admitted to the goods of their intestate mothers, by the Orfician senatus-consultum, which was enacted in the consulate of Orficius and Rufus, in the reign of the emperor Marcus Antoninus; and, by this decree, the legal inheritance is given both to sons and daughters, although under power; and they are preferred to the consanguine brothers, and to the agnates of their deceased mother.

De nepote et nepte.

§ I. Sed, cum ex hoc senatus-consulto nepotes et neptes ad aviæ successionem legitimo jure non vo-

§ 1. But, since grand-sons and grand-daughters were not called by the senatus-consultum to the legitimate succession of their grandmother, the omission was afterwards supplied, by the imperial constitutions; so that grand-sons and grand-daughters were called to inherit, as well as sons and daughters.

De capitis diminutione.

§ II. Sciendum autem est, hujusmodi successiones, quæ ex Tertulliano et Orficiano senatus-consultis deferuntur, capitis diminutione non perimi, propter illam regulam, qua novæ hæreditates legitimæ capitis diminutione non pereunt; sed illæ solæ, quæ ex lege duodecim tabularum deferuntur.

§ 2. But it must be observed, that those successions, which proceed from the Tertullian and Orfician senatus-consulla, are not extinguished by diminution. For it is established rule, that legitimate inheritances of late creation, are not destroyed by diminution; which affects those only that are founded on the law of the twelve tables.

De vulgo quæsitis.

§ III. Novissimè sciendum est, etiam illos liberos, qui vulò quæsitæ sunt, ad matris hæreditatem ex senatus-consulto admitti.

§ 3. It is lastly to be noted, that even spurious children are admitted by the Orfician senatus-consultum to the inheritance of their mother.

De jure accrescendi inter legitimos hæredes.

§ VI. Si ex pluribus legitimis hæredibus quidam omiserint hæreditatem, vel morte, vel aliâ causa, impediti fuerint, quominus adeant, reliquis, qui adierint, accrescit illorum portio; et, licèt ante decesserint, ad hæredes tamen eorum pertinet.

§ 4. When there are many legitimate (legal) heirs, and some renounce the inheritance, or are prevented by death, or any other cause, then the portions of such persons fall by right of accretion to those, who accept the inheritance; and, although the acceptors happen to die even before the refusal or the failure of their coheirs, yet the portions of such coheirs, will appertain to the heirs of the acceptors.

TITULUS QUINTUS.

DE SUCCESSIONE COGNATORUM.

Tertius ordo succedentium ab intestato.

POST suos hæredes, eosque, quos inter suos hæredes prætor et constitutiones vocant, et post legitimos, (quorum numero sunt agnati, et hi, quos in locum agnatorum tam supradicta senatus-consulta, quam nostra erexit constitutio,) proximos cognatos prætor vocat.

After the proper heirs and those, whom the prætor and the constitutions call to inherit with the proper heirs, and after the legitimate heirs (among whom are the agnate, and those, whom the above mentioned senatus-consulta and our constitution have numbered with the agnati) the prætor calls the nearest cognates.

Qui vocantur in hoc ordine.

§ I. Quâ parte naturalis cognatio spectatur. Nam agnati capite diminuti, quique ex his progeniti sunt, ex lege duodecim tabularum inter legitimos non habentur, sed à prætore tertio ordine vocantur, exceptis solis tantummodò fratre et sorore emancipatis non etiam liberis eorum; quos lex Anastasiana cum fratribus integri juris constitutis vocat quidem ad legitimam fratris hæreditatem, sive sororis; non æquis tamen partibus sed cum aliquâ diminutione, quam facile est ex ipsius constitutionis verbis intelligere. Aliis vero agnatis inferioris gradus, licet capitis diminutionem passi non sunt, tamen antepōnit eos, et procul dubio cognatis.

De agnatis capite minutis.

§ 1. By the law of the twelve tables, neither the agnates, who have suffered diminution, nor their issue, are esteemed legitimate heirs; but they are called by the prætor in the third order of succession: but we must except a brother and sister, (although) emancipated, but not their children; for the constitution of Anastasius calls an emancipated brother or sister to the succession of a brother or sister, together with those, who having not been emancipated, are integri juris: but it does not call them to an equal share of the succession, as may easily be collected from the words of the constitution: which prefers an emancipated brother or sister to other agnates of inferior degree, although unemancipated; and consequently to all cognates.

De conjunctis per fœminas.

§ II. Eos etiam, qui per fœminini sexûs personas ex transverso cognitione junguntur, tertio gradu proximitatis nomine, præter ad suc-cessionem vocat.

§ 2. Collateral relations by the female line, are called by the præ-tor in the third order of succession, according to their proximity.

De liberis datis in adoptionem.

§ III. Liberi quoque, qui in adoptivâ familiâ sunt, ad naturalium parentum hæreditatem hoc eodem gradu vocantur.

§ 3. Children, who are in an adoptive family, are likewise called in the third order of succession to the inheritance of their natural parents.

De vulgo quæsitis.

§ IV. Vulgò quæsitis nullos habere agnatos, manifestum est; cum agnatio à patre sit, cognatio à ma-tre: hi autem nullum patrem habere intelligantur. Eâdem ratione, ne inter se quidem possunt videri consanguinei esse; quia consanguini-tatis jus, species est agnationis.
Tantum ergò cognati sunt sibi, sicut et matri cognati sunt. Itaque omnibus istis ex eâ parte competit bonorum possessio, quâ proximata-tis nomine cognati vocantur.

§ 4. It is manifest, that spurious children have no agnates; inasmuch as agnation proceeds from the father, cognition from the mother; and such children are looked upon as having no father. And, for the same reason, consanguinity cannot be said to subsist between the bastard children of the same woman; because consanguinity is a species of agnation. They can therefore only be allied to each other as they are related to their mother, that is, by cognition; and it is for this reason that all such children are called to the possession of goods by that part of the prætorian edict, by which cognates are called by the right of their proximity.

Ex quo gradu vel agnati vel cognati succedunt.

§ V. Hoc loco et illud necessariò admonendi sumus agnationis quidem jure admitti aliquem ad hæreditatem, etsi decimo gradu sit;
sivè de lege duodecim tabularum

§ 5. Here it will be proper to observe, that any person by right of agnation may be admitted to inherit, although he be in the tenth degree; this is allowed both by the quæremus, sive de edicto, quo prætor legitimis hæredibus daturum se bonorum possessionem pollicetur. Proximitatis verò nomine iis solis prætor promittit bonorum possessionem, qui usque ad sextum gradum cognationis sunt, et ex septimo à sobrino sobrinâque nato natæve.

law of the twelve tables, and the edict, by which the prætor promises, that he will give the possession of goods to the legitimate heirs. But the prætor promises the possession of goods to cognates, only as far as the sixth degree of cognition according to their right of proximity; and in the seventh degree, to those cognates only, who are the descendants of a cousin german.

TITULUS SEXTUS.

DE GRADIBUS COGNATIONUM.

D. xxxviii. T. 10.

Continuatio, et cognationis divisio.

HOC loco necessarium est exponere, quemadmodum gradus cognationis numerentur. Quare in primis admonendi sumus, cognationem aliam supra numerari, aliam infra, aliam ex transverso, quæ etiam à latere dicitur. Superior cognatio est parentum: inferior liberorum: ex transverso fratrum sororumve, et eorum, qui quæve ex his generantur; et convenienter patrui, amitæ, avunculi, materteræ. Et superior quidem et inferior cognatio à primo gradu incipit: at ea, quæ ex transverso numeratur, à secundo.

It is here necessary to explain how degrees of cognition are to be computed; and first we must observe, that there is one species of cognition which relates to ascendants, another to descendants, and a third to collaterals. The first and superior cognition is that relation, which a man bears to his parents; the second, or inferior, is that, which he bears to his children; the third is that relation which he bears to his brothers and sisters, and their issue; and also to his uncles and aunts, whether paternal or maternal. The superior and inferior cognition commence at the first degree; but the transverse or collateral cognition commences at the second.

De primo, secundo, et tertio gradu.

§ I. Primo gradu est supra pater, mater: infra filius, filia. Secundo gradu supra avus, avia: infra nepos, neptis: ex transverso frater, soror. Tertio gradu supra proavus, proavia: infra pronepos, proneptis: ex transverso fratris sororisque filius, filia: et convenienter patruus, amita, avunculus, matertera. Patruus est patris frater, qui Græcis πατραδελφ O appellatur. Avunculus est frater matris, qui græce μητραδελφ O dicitur: et uterque promiscuè δευ O appellatur. Amita est patris soror, quæ græce πατραδελφη appellatur; matertera vero matris soror, quæ græce μητραδελφη dicitur: et utraque promiscuè δευ O appellatur.

§ 1. A father, or a mother, is in the first degree in the right line ascending: and a son, or a daughter, is also in the first degree in the right line descending. A grand-father, or a grand-mother, is in the second degree in the right line ascending: and a grand-son or grand-daughter, is in the second degree in the right line descending: and a brother or a sister, is also in the second degree in the collateral line. A great-grand-father, or a great-grand-mother, is in the third degree in the right line ascending: and a great-grand-son, or great-grand-daughter, is in the third degree in the right line descending: and the son or daughter of a brother or sister is also in the third degree in the collateral line; and by a parity of reasoning an uncle, or an aunt, whether paternal or maternal, is also in the third degree. A paternal uncle, called patruus, is a father's brother; a maternal uncle, called avunculus, is a mother's brother; a paternal aunt, called amita, is a father's sister; and a maternal aunt, called matertera, is a mother's sister. And each of these persons is called in Greek δευ O or δευ O promiscuously.

Quartus gradus.

§ II. Quarto gradu supra abavus abavia: infra abnepos, abneptis: ex transverso fratris sororisque nepos neptisve: et convenienter patruus magnus, amita magna, id est, avi frater et soror: item avunculus mag-

§ 2. A great-great-grand-father, or a great-great-grand-mother, is in the fourth degree in the right line ascending; and a great-great-grand-son, or a great-great-grand-daughter, is in the fourth degree in nus et matertera magna, id est, aviæ frater et soror: consobrinus, consobrina, id est, qui quæve ex sororibus aut fratribus procreantur. Sed quidam rectè consobrinos eos propriè dici putant, qui ex duabus sororibus progenerantur, quasi consororinos: eos verò, qui ex duobus fratribus progenerantur, propriè fratres patruelles vocari: si autem ex duobus fratribus filiæ nascuntur, sorores patruelles appellari. At eos, qui ex fratre et sorore progenerantur, amitinos propriè dici putant. Amitæ tuæ filiis consobrinum te appellant, tu illes amitinos.

the right line descending. Also, in the transverse or collateral line, the grandson, or the grand-daughter, of a brother or a sister, is in the fourth degree; so is a great uncle, or great aunt, paternal or maternal and cousins german, (consobrini). But some have been rightly of opinion, that the children of sisters are properly consobrini, quasi consororini; that the children of brothers are properly brothers patruel, if males; and sisters patruel, if females; and that, when there are children of a brother, and children of a sister, they are properly amitini; but the sons of your aunt, by the father's side call you consobrinus and you call them amitini.

Quintus gradus.

§ III. Quinto gradu supra atavus, atavia: infra atnepos, atnepitis: ex transverso, fratris sororisque pronèpos, proneptis: et convenienter propatruus, præamita, id est, proavi frater et soror: et proavunculus et promatertera, id est, proaviæ frater et soror: item fratris patruelis, vel sororis patruelis, consobrini et consobrinæ, amitini et amitinae filius, filia: propior sobri-no, propior sobrina; hi sunt patrui magni, amitæ magnæ, avunculi magni, materteræ magnæ filius, filia.

§ 3. A great-grand-father's grand-father, or a great-grand-father's grand-mother, is in the fifth degree in the line ascending, and a great-grandson, or a great-grand-daughter, of a grandson or a grand-daughter is in the fifth degree in the line descending. In the transverse or collateral line, a great-grandson, or great-grand-daughter, of a brother or sister, is also in the fifth degree; and consequently so is a great-grand-father's brother or sister, or a great-grand-mother's brother or sister. The son or daughter also of a cousin german is in the fifth degree: and so is the son or daughter of a great uncle or great aunt, paternal or maternal; and such son, or daughter is called propior sobri-no and propior sobrina.

Sextus gradus.

§ IX. Sexto gradu supra tritavus tritavia: infra trinepos, trineptis: ex transverso fratris sororisque abnepos abneptis: et convenienter abpatruus abamita, id est, abavi frater et soror: abavunculus, abmatertera, id est, abaviæ frater et soror: item propatruus, proamita proavunculus, promatertera filius, filia: item propius sobrino sobrinave filius, filia: item consobrini consobrinæ nepos, neptis: item sobrini, sobrinæ; id est, qui quæve ex fratribus vel sororibus patruelibus, vel consobrinis vel amitinis, progenierantur.

§ 4. A great-grand-father's great-grand-father, or a great-grand-father's great-grand-mother, is in the sixth degree in the line ascending; and the great-grandson, or great-grand-daughter of a great-grandson, or a great-grand-daughter, is likewise in the sixth degree in the line descending. And, in the transverse or collateral line, a great-great-grandson, or a great-great-grand-daughter, of a brother or sister, is also in the sixth degree: and consequently a great-great-grand-father's brother or sister, and a great-great-grand-mother's brother or sister, is in the sixth degree. And the son or daughter of a great-great-uncle, or great-great-aunt, paternal or maternal, is also in the sixth degree; and so also is the son or daughter of the son or daughter of a great-uncle or great-aunt, paternal or maternal. The grandson also, or the grand-daughter of a cousin german is in the sixth degree; and, in the same degrees between themselves, we reckon the sobrini and the sobrinæ; that is, the sons and daughters of cousins german in general, whether such cousins german are so related by two brothers, or by two sisters, or by a brother and a sister.

De reliquis gradibus.

§ 5. It suffices to have shewn thus far, how degrees of cognition are enumerated: and, from the examples given, the more remote degrees may be computed; for every person generated always adds one degree ; so that it is much easier to determine, in what degree any person is related to another, than to denote such person by a proper term of cognition.

De gradibus agnationis.

§ VI. Agnationis quoque gradus eodem modo numerantur.

§ 6. The degrees of agnation are reckoned in the same manner.

De gradum discriptione.

§ VII. Sed, cum magis veritas oculatâ fide, quam per aures animis hominum infigatur, idè necessarium duximus, post narrationem graduum, eos etiam præsentî libro inscribi, quatenus possint et auribus et oculorum inspectione adolescentes perfectissimam graduum doctrinam adipisci.

§ 7. But as truth is fixed in the mind much better by the eye, than by the ear, we have thought it necessary to subjoin, to the account already given, a tablet with the degrees of cognition inscribed upon it ; that the student, both by hearing and seeing, may attain a perfect knowledge of them.

TITULUS SEPTIMUS.

DE SERVILI COGNATIONE.

D. xxxviii. T. 2. C. vi. T. 4.

ILLUD certum est, ad serviles cognationes illam partem edicti, quâ proximitatis nomine bonorum possessio promittitur, non pertinere : nam nec ullâ antiquâ lege talis cognatio computabatur. Sed nostrâ constitutione, quam pro jure patronatûs fecimus, (quod jus usque ad nostra tempora satis obscurum atque nube plenum, et undique confusum fuerat,) et hoc humanitate

It is certain, that the part of the edict, in which the possession of goods is promised, according to the right of proximity, does not relate to servile cognition ; which hath not been regarded by any ancient law. But, by our own constitution, concerning the right of patronage, which right was heretofore obscure and every way confused, we have ordained (humanity so suggesting) suggerente concessimus, ut, si quis, in servili constitutus consortio, liberum vel liberos habuerit, sive ex liberâ sive ex servilis conditionis muliere, vel contra, serva mulier ex libero vel servo habuerit liberos cujuscunque sexûs, et, ad libertatem his pervenientibus, ii, qui ex servili ventre nati sunt, libertatem meruerint, vel, dum mulieres liberæ erant, ipsi in servitute eos habuerint, et postea ad libertatem pervenerint, ut hi omnes ad successionem patris vel matris veniant, patronatûs jure in hac parte sopito. Hos etenim liberos non solum in suorum parentum successionem, sed etiam alterum in alterius successionem mutuam, vocavimus; ex illâ lege specialitèr eos vocantes, sive soli inveniantur, qui in servitute nati et postea manumissi sunt; sive unâ cum aliis, qui post libertatem parentum concepti sunt; sive ex eodem patre, sive ex eadem matre, sive ex aliis nuptiis; ad similitudinem eorum, qui ex justis nuptiis procreati sunt.

that, if a slave shall have a child, or children, either by a free-woman, or by a bond-woman, with whom he lives in contubernio, and, on the contrary, that, if a bond-woman shall have a child, or children, of either sex by a free-man, or by a slave, with whom she so lives, and such father and mother are afterwards enfranchised, the children shall succeed to their father or mother, without regarding the right of patronage. We have not only called these children to succeed to their parents, but also mutually to each other, whether they are sole in succession, as having all been born in servitude and afterwards manumitted, or whether they succeed with others, who were conceived after the enfranchisement of their parents; and whether they are all by the same father and mother, or by a different father, or mother; and, that children born in slavery, but manumitted, should succeed in the same manner, as the issue of parents legally married.

Collatio ordinum et graduum.

§ 1. From what hath been said, it appears that those, who are in an equal degree of cognition, are not always called equally to the succession; and farther, that even the nearest of kin, is not constantly to be preferred. For, inasmuch as the first place is given to proper heirs, and to those who are numbered with proper heirs, it is apparent, that the great-grand-son, or great-greatrem esse, quam fratrem, aut patrem, aut matrem defuncti: cum alioqui pater quidem et mater (ut supra quoque tradidimus) primum gradum cognationis obtineat, frater verò secundum, pronepos autem tertio gradu sit cognationis, et abnepos quarto: nec interest, in potestate morientis fuerit, an non, quod vel emancipatus, vel ex emancipato, aut femineo sexu, propagatus est. Amotis quoque suis hæredibus, et quos inter suos hæredes vocari diximus, agnatus, qui integrum jus habet agnationis, etiamsi longissimo gradu sit, plerumque potior habetur, quam proximior cognatus: nam patruī nepos vel pronepos avunculo vel materteræ præfertur. Toties igitur dicimus; aut potiozem haberi eum, qui proximiozem gradum cognationis obtinet, aut paritèr vocari eos, qui cognati sunt; quoties neque suorum hæredum, quique inter suos hæredes sunt, neque agnationis jure aliquis præferri debeat, secundum ea, quæ tradidimus: exceptis fratre et sorore emancipatis, qui ad successionem fratrum vel sororum vocantur; qui, etsi capite diminuti sunt, tamen præferuntur cæteris ulteriozis gradus agnatis.

grand-son, is preferred to the brother or even the father or mother of the deceased: although a father and mother, (as we have before observed,) obtain the first degree of relation, a brother the second, a great-grand-son the third, and a great-grand-son the fourth; neither does it make any difference, whether such grand-children were under the power of the deceased, at the time of his death, or out of his power; either by being themselves emancipated, or by being the children of those who were so; neither can it be objected, that they are descended by the female line. But, when there are no proper heirs, nor any of those who are permitted to rank with them, then an agnate, who hath the full right of agnation in him, although he be in the most distant degree, is generally preferred to a cognate, who is in the nearest degree; thus the grand-son or great-grand-son of a paternal uncle is preferred to a maternal uncle or aunt. Hence, when there are no proper heirs, nor any, who are numbered with them, nor any, who ought to be preferred by the right of agnation, (as we have before noted,) then the nearest in degree of cognition, is called to the succession; and if there be many in the same degree, they are all called equally. But a brother and sister, although emancipated, are yet called to the succession of brothers and sisters; for although they have suffered diminution, they are nevertheless preferred to all agnates of a more remote degree.

TITULUS OCTAVUS.

DE SUCCESSIONE LIBERTORUM.

D. xxxviii. T. 2.

Qui succedunt. De lege duodecim tabularum.

NUNC de libertorum bonis videamus. Olim itaque licebat liberto patronum suum impunè testamento præterire: nam ita demum lex duodecim tabularum ad hæreditatem liberti vocabat patronum, si intestatus mortuus esset libertus, hærede suo nullo relicto. Itaque intestato mortuo liberto, si is suum hæredem reliquisset, patrono nihil in bonis ejus juris erat. Et, siquidem ex naturalibus liberis aliquem suum hæredem reliquisset, nulla videbatur querela; si verò adoptivus filius fuisset, apertè iniquum erat, nihil juris patrono superesse.

Let us now treat of the succession of freed-men. A freed-man might formerly; with impunity, omit in his testament any mention of his patron: for the law of the twelve tables called the patron to the inheritance, only when the freed-man died intestate without proper heirs; therefore, though he had died intestate, yet, if he had left a proper heir, the patron would have received no benefit: and indeed, when, the natural and legitimate children, of the deceased became his heirs, there seemed no cause of complaint; but, when the freed-man left only, an adopted son, it was manifestly injurious that the patron should have no claim.

De jure prætorio.

§ I. Qua de causâ, postea, prætoris edicto hæc juris iniquitas emendata est. Sive enim faciebat, testamentum libertus, jubebatur ita testari, ut patrono partem dimidiam bonorum suorum relinqueret; et, si aut nihil aut minus parte dimidiâ reliquerat, debatur patrono contra tabulas testamenti, partis dimidiæ bonorum possessio: sive intestatus moriebatur, suo hærede relicto filio adoptivo, dabatur æquè patrono

§ 1. The law was: therefore; afterwards amended by the edict of the prætor: for every freed-man who made his testament, was commanded so to dispose of his effects, as to leave a moiety to his patron: and, if the testator left nothing, or less than a moiety, then the possession of half was given to the patron contra tabulas, i. e. contrary to the disposition of the testament. And, if a freed-man died intestate, contra hunc suum hæredem partis dimidiæ bonorum possessio. Prodesse autem liberto solebant, ad excludendum patronum, naturales liberi, non solum duos in potestate mortis tempore habeat, sed etiam emancipati, et in adoptionem dati, si modo ex aliquâ parte scripti hæredes erant, aut præteriti contra tabulas bonorum possessionem ex edicto prætorio petierant. Nam exhæredati nullo modo repellebant patronum.

tate, leaving an adopted son his heir, the possession of a moiety was given to the patron notwithstanding yet, not only the natural and lawful children of a freed-man, whom he had under his power at the time of his death, excluded the patron, but those children also, who were emancipated, and given in adoption, if they were written heirs for any part, or even although they were omitted, if they had requested the possession Contra Tabulas, by virtue of the prætorian edict. But disinherited children by no means repelled the patron.

De lege Papia.

§ II. Postea verò lege Papia adaucta sunt jura patronorum, qui locupletiores libertos habebant. Cautum enim est, ut ex bonis ejus, qui sestertium centum millium patrimonium reliquerat, et pauciores quam tres liberos habebat, sive is testamento facto, sive intestatus mortuus erat, virilis pars patrono deberetur. Itaque, cum unum quidem filium filiamve hæredem reliquerat libertus, perindè pars dimidia debebatur patrono, ac si is sine ullo filio filiâve intestatus decessisset : cum verò duos duasve hæredes reliquerat, tertia pars debebatur patrono : si tres reliquerat, repellebatur patronus.

§. 2. But afterwards the rights of patrons, who had wealthy freed-men were enlarged by the Papian law : which provides that he shall have a man's share out of the effects of his freed-man, whether dying testate or intestate, who hath left a patrimony of an hundred thousand sestertii and fewer than three children : so that, when a freed-man hath left only one son or daughter, a moiety is due to the patron, as if the deceased had died testate without either son or daughter. But, when there are two heirs, male or female, a third part only is due to the patron : and, when there are three, the patron is wholly excluded.

De constitutione Justiniani.

§ 3. But our constitution, published in a compendious form, in the Greek language, for the benefit of composuimus,) ita hujusmodi causam definivit; ut, siquidem libertus vel liberta minores centenariis sint, id est, minus centum aureis habeant substantiam, (sic enim legis Papiæ summam interpretati sumus, ut pro mille sestertiis unus aureus computetur,) nullum locum habeat patronus in eorum successione, si tamen testamentum fecerint; sin autem intestati decesserint, nullo liberorum relicto, tunc patronatûs jus, quod erat ex lege duodecim tabularum, integrum reservavit. Cum verò majores centenariis sint, si hæredes vel bonorum possessores liberos habeant, sivè unum, sivè plures, cujuscumque sexûs vel gradûs, ad eos successiones parentum deduximus, patronis omnibus modis cum suâ progenie semotis. Sin autem sinè liberis decesserint, siquidem intestati, ad omnem hæreditatem patronos patronasque vocavimus. Si verò testamentum quidem fecerint, patronos autem aut patronas præterierint, cum nullos liberos haberent, vel habentes eos exhæredaverint, vel mater sivè avus maternus eos præterierint, ita quod non possint argui inofficiosa eorum testamenta, tunc ex nostrâ constitutione per bonorum possessionem contra tabulas, non dimidiam, ut antea, sed tertiam partem bonorum liberti consequantur; vel quod deest eis, ex constitutione nostrâ repleatur, si quando minus tertiâ parte bonorum suorum libertus vel liberta eis reliquerit: ita sinè onere, ut nec liberis liberti libertæve ex eâ parte all nations,) ordained, that, if a free-man, or free-woman, die possessed of less than an hundred aurei, (for thus have we interpreted the sum mentioned in the Papian law, counting one aureus for a thousand sestertii,) the patron shall not be intitled to any share in a testate succession. But, where a free-man, or woman, dies intestate, and without children, we have reserved the right of patronage intire, as it formerly was, according to the law of the twelve tables. But, if a freed person die worth more than an hundred aurei, and leave one child, or many, of either sex or any degree, as the heirs and possessors of his goods, we have permitted, that such child or children shall succeed their parent to the intire exclusion of the patron and his heirs: and if any free-persons die without children and intestate, we have called their patrons or patronesses to their whole inheritances. And if any freed-person, worth more than an hundred aurei, hath made a testament, omitted his patron, and left no children, or hath disinherited them; or if a mother, or maternal grand-father, being freed-persons, have omitted to mention their children in their wills, so that such wills cannot be proved to be inofficious, then, by virtue of our constitution, the patron shall succeed, not to a moiety as formerly but to the third part of the estate of the deceased, by possession contra tabulas: and, when freed-persons, leave less than the third part of their legata vel fideicommissa præstentur, sed ad cohæredes eorum hoc onus redundet: multis aliis casibus à nobis in præfatâ constitutione congregatis, quos necessarios esse ad hujusmodi dispositionem juris perspeximus: ut tam patroni patronæque quam liberi eorum, nec non qui ex transverso latere veniunt usque ad quintum gradum, ad successionem libertorum libertarumve vocentur, sicut ex eâ constitutione intelligendum est. Et, si ejusdem patroni vel patronæ, vel duorum duarumque pluriumve, liberi sint, qui proximior est, ad liberti vel libertæ vocetur successionem; et in capita, non in stirpes, dividatur successio; eodem modo et in iis, qui ex transverso latere veniunt, servando. Penè enim consonantia jura ingenuitatis et libertinitatis in successionebus fecimus.

effects to their patrons, our constitution ordains, that the deficiency shall be supplied; nor shall this third part, be subject to trusts, or legacies, even for the benefit of the children of the deceased; for the co-heirs only of the patron shall bear this burden. In the before-mentioned constitution, we have collected many more cases, necessary in relation to the right of patronage; that patrons and patronesses, their children and collateral relations, as far as the fifth degree, might be called to the succession of their freed-men and freed-women; as will appear more fully from the ordinance itself. And, if there be many children of one, two or more patron or patroness, the nearest in degree, is called to the succession of his freed-man or freed-woman; and, when there are many in equal degree, the estate must be divided in capita and not in stirpes: the same order is decreed to be observed among the collaterals of patrons and patronesses: for we have rendered the laws of succession almost the same both as to ingenui and libertini.

Quibus libertinis succeditur.

§ IV. Sed hæc de iis libertinis hodie dicenda sunt, qui in civitatem Romanam pervenerunt, cum nec sint alii liberti, simul et Dedititii et Latinis sublatis, cum Latinorum successiones nullæ penitus erant; quia, licet ut liberi vitam suam peragebant, attamen ipso ultimo spiritu simul animam atque libertatem

§ 4. What we have said relates to modern freed-men who are all citizens of Rome; for there is now, no other, the Dedititii and Latini being abolished: the latter of whom never enjoyed any right of succession; for although they led the lives of freed-men, yet, with their last breath, they lost both their lives and amittebant : et, quasi servorum, ita bona eorum jure quodammodo peculii ex lege Junia Norbana manumissores detinebant. Postea verò senatus-consulto Largiano cautum fuerat, ut liberi manumissoris, non nominatim exhæredati facti, extraneis hæredibus eorum in bonis Latinorum præponerentur. Quibus etiam supervenit Divi Trajani edictum, quod eundem hominem, si invito vel ignorante patrono, ad civitatem Romanam venire ex beneficio principis festinarat, faciebat quidem vivum civem, Latinum verò morientem. Sed nostrâ constitutione, propter hujusmodi conditionum vices et alias difficultates, cum ipsis Latinis etiam legem Juniam, et senatus-consultum Largianum, et edictum Divi Trajani, in perpetuum deleri censuimus, et omnes liberi civitate Romanâ fruantur; et mirabili modo quibusdam adjectionibus ipsas vias, quæ in Latinitatem ducebant ad civitatem Romanam capiendam transposuimus.

liberties : for their possessions, like the goods of slaves, were detained by their manumittor, who possessed them, as a peculium, by virtue of the law Junia Norbana. It was afterwards provided by the senatus-consultum Largianum, that the children of a manumittor, not disinherited by name, should be preferred to any strangers, whom a manumittor might constitute his heirs : then followed the edict of Trajan, by which if a slave either against the will or without the knowledge of his patron should obtain the freedom of Rome by favour of the emperor, such slave should continue free, while living, but, at his death, should be regarded only as a Latin. But we, being averse to these changes of condition, and dissatisfied with the difficulties attending them, have thought proper by our constitution, for ever to abolish, together with the Latins, the law Junia, the senatus-consultum Largianum, and the edict of Trajan ; so that all freed-men may become freed-men of Rome. And we have happily contrived by some additions, that the manner of conferring the freedom of Latins should now become the manner of conferring the freedom of Rome.

An assignari possit, et quis assignationis effectus.

IN summâ, (quod ad bona libertorum attinet,) admonendi sumus, censuisse senatum, ut quamvis ad omnes patroni liberos, qui ejusdem gradus sunt, æqualitè bona libertorum pertineant: tamen licere parenti, uni ex liberis assignare libertum, ut post mortem ejus solus is patronus habeatur, cui assignatus est: et cæteri liberi qui ipsi quoque ad eadem bona, nullâ assignatione interveniente, paritèr admitterentur, nihil juris in his bonis habeant; sed ita demùm pristinum jus recipiant, si is, cui assignatus est, decesserit, nullis liberis relictis.

Respecting the possession of freed-men, we must remember the decree of the senate; whereby, although the goods of freed-men belong equally to all the children of the patron, who are in the same degree, yet it is lawful for a parent to assign a freed-man to any one of his children, so that, after the death of the parent, the child, to whom the freed-man was assigned, is solely to be esteemed his patron: and the other children, who would have been equally admitted had not this been the case are wholly excluded; but, if the assignee should die without issue, the excluded children regain their former right.

à. nostrâ constitutione hodie rectè hæres instituitur, quasi et jure civili non incognitus. Aliquandò tamen, neque emendandi neque impugnandi veteris juris, sed majis confirmandi gratiâ, prætor pollicetur bonorum possessionem: nam illis quoque, qui, rectè testamento facto, hæredes instituti sunt, dat secundum tabulas bonorum possessionem. Item ab intestato suos hæredes, et agnatos, ad bonorum possessionem vocat: sed et remotâ quoque bonorum possessione ad eos pertinet hæreditas jure civili. Quos autem solus prætor vocat ad hæreditatem, hæredes quidem ispo jure non fiunt: nam prætor hæredem facere non potest: per legem enim tantum, vel similem juris constitutionem, hæredes fiunt, vel per senatus-consulta et constitutiones principales: sed, cum eis prætor dat bonorum possessionem, loco hæredum constituuntur, et vocantur bonorum possessores. Adhuc autem et alios complures gradus prætor fecit in bonorum possessionibus dandis, dum id agebat, ne quis sinè successore moreretur. Nam, angustissimis finibus constitutum per legem duodecim tabularum, jus percipiendarum hæreditatum prætor ex bono et æquo dilatavit.

goods when he had received the assistance of the prætor. Such stranger may at this time, by our constitution, be legally instituted heir as a person not unknown to the civil law. But the prætor sometimes bestows the possession of goods, intending neither to amend nor impugn the old law, but to confirm it: for he gives possession secundum tabulas to those, who are appointed heirs by regular testament. He also calls proper heirs and agnates to the possession of the goods of intestates; and yet the inheritance would be their own by the civil law, although the prætor did not interpose his authority. But those, whom the prætor calls to an inheritance merely by virtue of his office, do not become legal heirs; inasmuch as the prætor cannot make an heir; for heirs are made only by law, or by what has the effect of a law, as a decree of the senate, or an imperial constitution. But, when the prætor gives any persons the possession of goods, they stand in the place of heirs, and are called the possessors of the goods. He hath also devised many other orders of persons, to whom the possession of goods can be granted, so that no man may die without a successor: and, by the rules of justice and equity, he hath enlarged the right of taking inheritances, which was bounded within very narrow limits by the law of the twelve tables.

Sunt autem decem personæ hæ; pater, mater, avus, avia, tam paterni quam materni; item filius, filia; nepos, neptis, tam ex filio, quam ex filia; frater sororve, consanguinei vel uterini. Quarto, cognatis proximis. Quinto tanquam ex familia. Sexto, patrono patronæque, liberisque eorum et parentibus. Septimo, viro et uxori. Octavo, cognatis manumissoris.

§ 1. The possessions of goods or prætorian testamentary successions, are these. First, that which is given to children, not mentioned in the testament; this is called possession contrary to the testament. The second, that which the prætor promises to all written heirs, and is therefore called possession according to the testament. These being fixed he goes to intestacies; and first he gives the possession called unde liberi, to the proper heirs, or to those, who by the prætorian edict are numbered among the proper heirs: secondly, to the legitimate (legal) heirs: thirdly, to ten persons, in preference to a stranger, who was the manumittor, viz. to a father, a mother, or a grand-father or grand-mother, paternal or maternal; to a son, a daughter, or to a grand-son or grand-daughter, as well by a daughter as by a son; to a brother or sister, either consanguine or uterine: fourthly, to the nearest: cognates: fifthly, to those who are, as it were, of the family: sixthly, to the patron or patroness, and to their children, and their parents: seventhly, to an husband and wife: eighthly, to the cognates of a manumittor or patron.

Jus novum.

§ II. Sed eas quidem prætoria introduxit jurisdictio: à nobis tamen nihil incuriosum prætermisum est; sed, nostris constitutionibus omnia corrigentes, contra tabu-

§ 2. The prætor's authority hath introduced these successions; as to ourselves, having passed over nothing negligently, we have admitted by our constitutions the possession las quidem et secundum tabulas bonorum possessiones admissithus; utpete necessarias constitutas: nec non ab intestato, unde liberi, et unde legitimi, bonorum possessiones. Quæ autem in prætoris edicto quinto loco posita fuerat, id est, unde decem personæ, eam pio proposito et compendioso sermone supervacuum ostendimus. Cum enim præfata bonorum possessio decem personas præponebat extraneo manumissori nostra constitutio, quam de emancipatione liberorum fecimus, omnibus parentibus eisdemque manumissionibus, contracta fiducia, manumissionem facere dedit; ut ipsa manumissio eorum hoc in se habeat privilegium, et supervacua fiat supradicta bonorum possessio. Sublatâ igitur prædictâ quintâ bonorum possessione in gradum ejus sextam antea bonorum possessionem induximus, et quintam fecimus, quam prætor proximis cognatis pollicetur. Cumque antea fuerat septimo loco bonorum possessio, tanquam ex familia, et octavo, unde patroni patronæque, liberi et parentes eorum, utramque per constitutionem nostram, quam de jure patronatus fecimus, penitus evacuavimus. Cum enim, ad similitudinem successionis ingenuorum, libertinorum successiones posuerimus, quas usque ad quintum gradum tantummodò coarctavimus, ut sit aliqua inter ingenuos et libertinos differentia, sufficit eis tam contra tabulas bonorum possessio, quam unde legitimi, et unde cognati, ex quibus possunt of goods contra tabulas and secundum tabulas, as necessary; and also the possessions ab intestato, called unde liberi and unde legitimi; but we have briefly shewn, that the possession, called unde decem personæ, which was ranked by the prætor's edict in the fifth order, was unnecessary: for, whereas that possession preferred ten kinds of persons to a stranger, being the manumittor, our constitution on that subject, hath permitted all parents to manumit their children, under the presumption of a fiduciary contract; so that the possession unde decem personæ is now useless. The afore-mentioned fifth possession being thus abrogated, we have now made that the fifth, which was formerly the sixth, by which the prætor gives the succession to the nearest cognates. And, whereas formerly the possession tanquam ex familia, was in the seventh place, and the possession unde patroni patronæque, liberi et parentes eorum, was in the eighth, we have now annulled them both by our ordinance concerning the right of patronage. And having brought the successions of the libertini to a similitude with those of the ingenui, (except, that we have limited the former to the fifth degree, so that there may still remain some difference between them) we think, that the possessions contra tabulas, unde legitimi, and unde cognati may suffice, by which all persons may vindicate their rights; the niceties and inextricable errors of sua jura vindicare, omni scrupulositate et inextricabili errore istarum duarum bonorum possessionum resoluta. Aliam vero bonorum possessionem, quæ unde vir et uxor appellatur, et nono loco inter veteres bonorum possessiones posita fuerat, et in suo vigore servavimus, et altiore loco, id est, sexto, eam posuimus: decima quoque veteri bonorum possessione, quæ erat unde cognati manumissoris, propter causas enumeratas merito sublata, ut sex tantummodò bonorum possessiones ordinariæ permaneant, suo vigore pollentes.

those two kinds of possessions, tamquam ex familia and unde patroni, being removed. The other possession of goods, called vir et uxor, which held the ninth place among the ancient possessions, we have preserved in full force and have placed in an higher, to wit, the sixth degree. The tenth of the ancient possessions, called unde cognati manumissoris, being deservedly abolished for causes already enumerated, there now remain in force only six ordinary possessions of goods.

Species extraordinaria.

§ III. Septima eas secuta, quam optimâ ratione prætores introduxerunt: novissimè enim promittitur edicto iis etiam bonorum possessio, quibus, ut detur, lege vel senatus-consulto vel constitutione comprehensum est: quam neque bonorum possessionibus, quæ ab intestato veniunt, neque iis, quæ ex testamento sunt, prætor stabili jure connumeraverit; sed quasi ultimum et extraordinarium auxilium (prout res exigit) accommodavit, scilicet iis, qui ex legibus, senatus-consultis, constitutionibusve principum, ex novo jure, vel ex testamento, vel ab intestato veniunt.

§ 3. To these a seventh possession hath been added, which the prætors have very properly introduced: for, by a late edict, this possession is promised to all those, to whom it is appointed by any law, senatus-consultum, or constitution: and the prætor hath not positively numbered this possession of goods either with the possessions of the goods of intestate or testate persons, but hath given it, according to the exigence of the case, as the last and extraordinary resource of those, who are called to the successions of testates or intestates, by any particular law, decree of the senate, or new constitution.

De successorio edicto.

§ IV. Cum igitur plures species successionem prætor introduxisset,

§ 4. The prætor, having introduced in their order many kinds of easque per ordinem dispossuisset, et in unaquâque specie successionis sæpè plures extent dispari gradu personæ, ne actiones creditorum differentur, sed haberent, quos convenirent, et ne facilè in possessionem bonorum defuncti mitterentur, et eo modo sibi consulere, idè petendæ bonorum possessioni certum tempus præfinivit. Liberis itaque et parentibus, tam naturalibus quam adoptivis, in petendâ bonorum possessione anni spatium, cæteris autem (agnatis vel cognatis) centum dierum, dedit.

successions, and as persons of different degrees are often found in one species of succession, he thought fit to limit a certain time for demanding the possession of goods, that the actions of creditors may not be delayed for want of a proper person against whom to bring them, and that the creditors may not possess themselves of the effects of the deceased too easily, and consult solely their own advantage: therefore to parents and children, whether natural or adopted, he hath allowed one year, within which, they may either accept or refuse the possession. To all other persons, agnates or cognates, he allows only an hundred days.

De jure accrescendi et iterum de successorio edicto.

§ V. Et si intra hoc tempus aliquis bonorum possessionem non petierit, ejusdem gradus personis accrescit; vel, si nullus sit, deinceps cæteris bonorum possessionem perinde ex successorio edicto pollicetur, ac si is, qui præcedebat, ex eo numero non esset. Si quis itaque delatam sibi bonorum possessionem repudiaverit, non, quousque tempus bonorum possessioni præfinitum excesserit, expectatur; sed statim cæteri ex eodem edicto admittuntur.

§ 5. And, if a person intitled, do not claim possession within the time limited, his right of possession accrues first to those in the same degree with himself; and, in default of those, the prætor by successory edict gives the possession to the next degree, as if he, who preceded, had no right. If a man refuse the possession of goods, when it is open to him, there is no necessity to wait, until the time limited is expired, but the next in succession, may be instantly admitted under that edict.

Explicatio dicti temporis.

§ VI. In petendâ autem bonorum possessione dies utiles singuli considerantur.

§ 6. In applications for the possession of goods, we count all the days, which are utiles; i. e. those days, on which the party, having knowledge that the inheritance is open to him, might apply to the judge.

Quomodo peti debet.

§ VII. Sed benè anteriores principes et huic causæ providerunt, ne quis pro petendâ bonorum possessione curet; sed, quocunque modo admittentis eam, indicium ostenderit, intra statuta tamen tempora, plenum habeat earum beneficium.

§ 7. Former emperors, have wisely provided, that no person need demand the possession of goods in solemn form: for, if a man has in any manner signified his consent to accept the prætorian succession within the prescribed time, he shall enjoy the benefit of it.

TITULUS UNDECIMUS.

DE ACQUISITIONE PER ARROGATIONEM.

Continuatio.

EST et alterius generis per universitatem successio; quæ neque lege duodecim tabularum, neque prætoris edicto, sed eo jure, quod consensu receptum est, introducta est.

There is also an universal succession of another kind, introduced neither by the laws of the twelve tables, nor by the edict of the prætor, but by the law founded on general consent and usage.

Quæ hoc modo acquiruntur. Jus vetus.

§ 1. For example, if the father of a family gave himself in arrogation, his property corporeal or incorporeal, and the debts due to him, were formerly acquired in full right by the arrogator; those things only excepted, which perished by diminution or change of state; as the duties of freed-men to their patrons and the rights of agnation. But although use and usufruct, were heretofore numbered among those rights which perished by diminution, yet our constitution hath prohibited them from being taken away by the less diminution.

Jus novum.

§ II. Nunc autem nos eandem acquisitionem, quæ per arrogationem fiebat, coarctavimus ad similitudinem naturalium parentum. Nihil enim aliud, nisi tantummodò ususfructus, tam naturalibus parentibus quam adoptivis, per filios-familias acquiritur in iis rebus, quæ extrinsecûs filiis obveniunt, dominio eis integro servato. Mortuo autem filio arrogato in adoptivâ familiâ, etiam dominium rerum ejus ad arrogatorem pertransit; nisi supersint aliæ personæ, quæ ex constitutione nostrâ patrem in iis, quæ acquiri non possunt, antecedant.

§ 2. But we have now limited the acquisitions from arrogation, by those of natural parentage: for nothing is now acquired either by natural or adoptive parents, but the bare usufruct of those things, which their children possess extrinsically in their own right: the property still remaining intire (in the adopted or natural child.) But, if an arrogated son die under power of his arrogator, then even the property of the effects of such son will pass to the arrogator in default of those persons, whom we have by our constitution preferred to the father in the succession of those things, which could not be acquired for him.

Effectus hujus acquisitionis.

§ III. Sed ex diverso, pro eo quod is debuit, qui se in adoptionem dedit, ipso quidem jure arrogator non tenetur, sed nomine filii convenitur; et, si noluerit eum defendere, permittitur creditoribus, per competentes nostros magistratûs, bona, quæ ejus cum usufructu futurâ fuissent, si se alieno juri non subjecisset, possidere, et legitimo modo ea disponere.

§ 3. On the other hand an arrogator is not directly bound to satisfy the debts of his adopted son; but he may be sued in his son's name; and, if he refuse to defend his son, then the creditors, by order of the proper magistrates, may seize upon and legally sell all those goods, of which the usufruct, as well as the property, would have been in the debtor, if he had not made himself subject to the power of another.

TITULUS DUODECIMUS.

DE EO, CUI LIBERTATIS CAUSA BONA ADDI-CUNTUR.

Continuatio.

Accessit novus casus successionis ex constitutione Divi Marci. Nam, si ii, qui libertatem acceperunt a domino in testamento, ex quo non aditur hæreditas, velint bona sibi addici libertatum conservandarum causâ, audiuntur.

A new species of succession hath taken its rise from the constitution of Marcus Aurelius. For, if those slaves, to whom freedom hath been bequeathed, are desirous, for the sake of obtaining it, that the inheritance, which hath not been accepted by the written heir, should be adjudged for their benefit, they shall obtain their request.

Rescriptum D. Marci.

§ I. Et ita Divi Marci rescripto ad Pompilius Rufus continetur: verba rescripti ita se habent. Si Virginio Valens, qui testamento suo libertatem quibusdam adscripsit, nomine successore ab intestato existente, in ea causa bona ejus esse ceperunt, ut vœntre debeant, is, cujus de ea re notio est, aditus rationem desiderii tui habebit, ut libertatum, tam earum, quæ directo, quam earum quæ per speciem fideicommissi relictæ sunt, tuendarum gratia addicantur tibi, si idonee creditoribus caveris de solido, quod cuique debetur, solvendo. Et ii quidem, quibus directâ libertas data est, perinde liberi erunt, ac si hæreditas adita esset: ii autem, quos hæres manumittere rogatus est, a te libertatem consequentur; ita autem ut si non alia conditione velis tibi bona addici,

§ 1. And to the same effect is the rescript of the emperor Marcus to Pompilius Rufus; the words of which are "If the estate of Virginio Valens, who by testament hath bequeathed to certain persons their freedom, must necessarily be sold, and there is no successor ab intestato, then the magistrate who has the cognizance of these affairs, shall upon application hear the merits of your cause, that, for the sake of preserving the liberty of those, to whom it was given either directly or in trust, the estate of the deceased may be adjudged to you, on condition, that you give good security to satisfy the creditors. And all those, to whom freedom was directly given, shall then become free, as if the inheritance had been entered quam ut ii etiam, qui directo libertatem acceperunt, tui liberti fiant: nam huic etiam voluntati tuæ, si ii, quorum de statu agitur, consentiant, auctoritatem nostram accommodamus. Et, ne hujus rescriptionis nostræ emolumentum alia ratione irritum fiat, si fiscus bona agnoscere voluerit, et ii, qui bonis nostris attendunt, sciant, commodo pecuniario præferendam esse libertatis causam, et ita bona cogenda, ut libertas eis salva sit, qui eam adipisci potuerunt, ac si hæreditas ex testamento adita esset.

"upon by the written heir; but "those whom the heir was ordered to manumit, shall obtain their "freedom from you only. And,
 "if you are not willing, that the "goods of the deceased should be "adjudged to you on any other condition, than that even they, who "received their liberty directly by "testament, shall also become your "freed-men, we then order, that "your will shall be complied with,
 "if the persons agree to it, who are "to receive their freedom. And,
 "lest the use and emolument of this "our rescript should be frustrated
 "by any other means, be it known "to the officers of our revenue,
 "that, whenever our exchequer
 "lays claim to the estate of a deceased person, the cause of liberty is to be preferred to any pecuniary advantage; and the estate shall be so seized, as to preserve the freedom of those, who "could otherwise have obtained it:
 "and this in as full a manner, as if "the inheritance had been entered "upon by the testamentary heir."

Utilitas rescripti.

§ II. Hoc rescripto subventum est et libertatibus et defunctis, ne bona eorum à creditoribus possideantur et vaneant. Certè, si fuerint hac de causâ bona addicta, cessat bonorum venditio; existit enim de-

§ 2. This rescript is calculated in favour of liberty, and also for the benefit of deceased persons, lest their effects should be seized and sold by their creditors: for it is certain, that, when goods are adjudged to a functi defensor, et quidem idoneus, qui de solido creditoribus cavet.

particular man for the preservation of liberty, a sale by creditors can never take effect: for he to whom the goods are adjudged, is the protector of the deceased, and must be a person, who can give security to the creditors.

Ubi locum habeat.

§ III. In primis hoc rescriptum toties locum habet, quoties testamento libertates datae sunt. Quid ergo, si quis intestatus decedens codicillis libertates dederit, neque adita sit ab intestato hæreditas? Favor constitutionis debet locum habere: certè, si testatus decederit et codicillis dederit libertatem, competere eam, nemini dubium est.

§ 3. This rescript takes place, whenever freedom is conferred by testament. But what if a master die intestate, having bequeathed freedom to his slaves by codicil, and his inheritance be not entered upon? We answer, that the benefit of the rescript shall extend to this case; most certainly, if a master die testate, and by codicil bequeath freedom, the rescript shall be in force.

§ IV. Tunc enim constitutioni locum esse verba ostendunt, cum nemo successor ab intestato existat: ergo, quamdiu incertum erit, utrum existat, an non, cessabit constitutio. Si verò certum esse cæperit neminem existere; tunc erit constitutioni locus.

§ 4. The words of the rescript shew, that it is in force, when there is no successor ab intestato. Therefore while it remains doubtful, whether there be or be not a successor, the constitution shall not take place; but when it is certain that no one will enter upon the succession, it shall then have its effect.

§ V. Si is, qui in integrum restitui potest, abstinuerit hæreditate, an, quamvis potest in integrum restitui, potest admitti constitutio, et bonorum addictio fieri? Quid ergo, si post addictionem, libertatum, conservandarum causâ factam, in integrum sit restitutus? Utique

§ 5. But, if one who has a right to be restored in integrum (as a minor) should delay to take upon him the inheritance, shall the constitution then take place, and an adjudication of the goods pass (to a stranger or one of the slaves?) And again, after an adjudication has been made for the sake of liberty, shall the heir be restored in integrum? We answer, that freedom once obtained, shall not afterwards be revoked.

Si libertates datæ non sunt.

§ 6. This constitution was made for the protection of liberty: and therefore, when freedom is not given, the constitution has no effect. Suppose then, a master hath given freedom to his slaves either inter vivos, or mortis causâ and to prevent the creditors from complaining of fraud, they should petition, that the estate of the deceased may be adjudged to them; are they to be heard? We think they ought, although the letter of the constitution is deficient.

De speciebus additis a Justiniano.

§ VII. Sed cum multas divisiones ejusmodi constitutioni deesse perspeximus, lata est à nobis plenissima constitutio, in quâ multæ species collatæ sunt, quibus jus hujusmodi successionis plenissimum est effectum; quas ex ipsius lectione constitutionis potest quis cognoscere.

§ 7. But perceiving that the rescript was deficient in many respects, we enacted a very full constitution, containing many cases, which amply explain the rights of succession; which any person who reads that constitution, may understand.

TITULUS DECIMUS-TERTIUS.

DE SUCESSIONIBUS SUBLATIS, QUÆ FIEBANT PER BONORUM VENDITIONES, ET EX SENA-TUS-CONSULTO CLAUDIANO.

C. vii. T. 24.

ERANT ante prædictam successionem olim et aliæ per universitatem successiones; qualis fuerat bonorum emptio, quæ de bonis debitoris vendendis per multas ambages fuerat introducta; et tunc locum habebat, quando judicia ordinaria in usu fuerant; sed, cum extraordinariis judiciis posteritas usa est, ideò cum ipsis ordinariis judiciis etiam bonorum venditiones expiraverunt: et tantummodò creditoribus datur officio judicis bona possidere, et, prout utile eis visum est, ea disponere: quod ex latioribus digestorum libris perfectius apparebit. Erat et ex senatus-consulto Claudiano miserabilis per universitatem acquisitio, cum libera mulier, servili amore bacchata, ipsam libertatem per senatus-consultum amittebat, et cum, libertate substantiam. Quod indignum nostris temporibus esse existimantes, et à nostrâ civitate deleri, et non inseri nostris digestis concessimus.

There were many other kinds of universal succession before that, which we treated of in the foregoing title; as the bonorum emptio; which was introduced with many intricacies for the sale of debtor's estates, and continued as long as the ordinary judgments were in practice; but, when the extraordinary judgments were used, the emptio bonorum and the ordinary judgments ceased together. Creditors can now possess themselves of the goods of their debtors and dispose of them as they think proper, by the decree of a judge. These points are treated of more at large in the books of our digests. There was also, by virtue of the Claudian decree, another universal acquisition called miserabilis: for example, if a free-woman had debased herself by cohabiting with a slave, she lost her freedom by the before named decree, and, together with her freedom, her estate and substance. But, this was, in our opinion, unworthy of our reign, and ought to be expunged; hence, we have not permitted it to be inserted in the digests.

TITULUS DECIMUS-QUARTUS.

DE OBLIGATIONIBUS.

D. xliv. T. 7. C. iv. T. 10.

Continuatio et definitio.

NUNC transeatnus ad obligationes. Obligatio est juris vinculum, quo necessitate astringimur alicujus rei solvendæ secundum nostræ civitatis jura.

Let us now pass to obligations. An obligation is the chain of the law, by which we are necessarily bound to make some payment, according to the laws of our country.

Divisio prior.

§ I. Omnium autem obligationum summa divisio in duo genera deducitur; namque aut civiles sunt aut prætoris. Civiles sunt, quæ aut legibus constitutæ, aut certo jure civili comprobatæ sunt. Prætoris sunt, quas prætor ex sua jurisdictione constituit; quæ etiam honorariæ vocantur.

§ 1. Obligations are primarily divided into two kinds, civil and prætorian. Civil obligations, are such as are constituted by the laws, or by any species of the civil law. Prætorian obligations are such as the prætor hath appointed by his authority; and are also called honorary.

Divisio posterior.

§ II. Sequens divisio in quantuor species dividitur. Aut enim ex contractu sunt, aut quasi ex contractu, aut ex maleficio, aut quasi ex maleficio. Prius est, ut de iis quæ ex contractu sunt, dispiciamus. Harum æque quantor sunt species. Aut enim re contrahuntur, aut verbis, aut literis, aut consensu: de quibus singulis dispiciamus.

§ 2. The second or subsequent division of obligations is four fold; by contract, by quasi-contract; by malefeasance, and by quasi-malefeasance. Let us first treat of those which arise from contract; which are also four fold: for obligations are contracted by the thing itself, by parol, by writing, or by consent of parties. Let us take a view of each of these.

TITULUS DECIMUS-QUINTUS.

QUIBUS MODIS RE CONTRAHITUR OBLIGATIO.

D. xii. T. 1. D. xiii. T. 6. 7. C. iv. T. 1. 23. 24. 34.

De mutuo.

RE contrahitur obligatio, veluti mutui datione. Mutui autem datio in iis rebus consistit, quæ pondere, numero, mensurâve, constant; veluti vino, oleo, frumento, pecuniâ numeratâ, ære, argento, auro, quas res, aut numerando, aut metiendo, aut appendendo, in hoc damus, ut accipientium fiant. Et, quoniam nobis non eadem res sed aliæ ejusdem naturæ et qualitatis redduntur, inde etiam mutuum appellatum est; quia ita à me tibi datur, ut ex meo tuum fiat: et ex eo contractu nascitur actio, quæ vocatur certi condictio.

An obligation may be founded on the thing itself; as by the delivery of a loan or mutuum: and this may be of any thing, having weight, number, or measure, as wine, oil, corn, coin, brass, silver, or gold; which being thus delivered, become the property of the receiver: and since the identical things lent cannot, but others of the same nature must be returned in lieu of them, this loan is therefore called a mutuum; for in this case I so give, that what is mine may become yours: From this contract arises the action, certi condictio.

De indebito soluto.

§ I. Is quoque, qui non debitum, accepit ab eo, qui per errorem solvit, re obligatur; daturque agenti contra eum propter repetitionem condictitia actio: nam perinde ei condici potest, si apparet, eum dare oportere, ac si mutuum accepisset. Unde pupillus, si ei sinè tutoris auctoritate indebitum per errorem datum est, non tenebitur indebiti conditione, non magis quam mutui datione. Sed hæc species obligationis non videtur ex contractu consistere; cum is, qui solvendi

§ I. He also to whom another hath paid by mistake what was not due, is bound by the thing received, so that an action of condictio lies for the recovery at the suit of him, who paid or delivered it erroneously. And this action may be brought si apparet, eum dare oportere; as if the receiver had accepted it as a mutuum. Hence a pupil, to whom a payment hath been erroneously made without the authority of his tutor, is not subject to the condictio indebiti, any more than to the certi animo dat, magis voluerit negotium distrahere, quam contrahere.

condictio. And yet this species of obligation does not seem founded in contract; since he, who pays in contemplation of debt, appears more willing to dissolve, than to make a contract.

De commodato.

§ II. Item is, cui res aliqua utenda datur, id est, commodatur, re obligatur, et tenetur commodati actione. Sed is ab eo, qui mutuum accepit, longè distat: namque non ita res datur, ut ejus fiat; et ob id de eâ re ipsa restituendâ tenetur. Et is quidem, qui mutuum accepit, si quolibet fortuito casu amiserit, quod accepit, veluti incendio, ruina, naufragio, aut latronum hostiumve incursu, nihilominus obligatus manet. At is, qui utendum accepit, sanè quidem exactam diligentiam custodiendæ rei præstare tenetur: nec sufficit ei, tantam diligentiam adhibuisse, quantam suis rebus adhibere solitus est, si modò alius diligentior poterat eam rem custodire. Sed propter majorem vim, majoresve casus, non tenetur, si modò non ipsius culpâ is casus intervenerit: alioquì si id, quod tibi commodatum est domi, peregrè tecum ferre malueris, et vel incursu hostium prædonumve, vel naufragio, amiseris, dubium non est, quin de restituendâ eâ re tenearis. Commodata autem res tunc propriè intelligitur, si nullâ mercede acceptâ vel constitutâ, res tibi utenda data est: alioqui, mercede interveniente, locatus tibi usus rei vide-

§ 2. He also, to whom the use of any particular thing is granted or commodated, is bound by the delivery of the thing, and is subject to the action commodataria. But such person widely differs from him, who hath received a mutuum: for a commodatum, or thing lent, is not delivered, to the intent that it should become the property of the receiver; and therefore he is bound to restore the identical thing received. There is also another difference; for he who hath accepted a mutuum, is not freed from his obligation, if by any accident, as the fall of an edifice, fire, shipwreck, thieves, or the incursions of an enemy, he hath lost what he received: but he, who hath received a commodatum, or a thing lent for his use only, is indeed commanded to employ his utmost diligence in keeping and preserving it; and it will not suffice, that he hath taken the same care of it, which he was accustomed to take of his own property, if it appear, that a more diligent man might have preserved it; yet, if the loss was occasioned by superior force, or some extraordinary accident, and not by any fault, he is then not obliged to make it good; but if a man choose to travel abroad with that which hath been lent him at home, and should lose it by shipwreck, or the incursion of enemies, or robbers, it is not doubted but he is bound to make restitution, or pay an equivalent. A thing is properly said to be lent or commodated, when one man permits another to enjoy the use of it, and receives nothing by way of hire: otherwise the thing is let, and not lent; for a commodatum, or loan, must be gratuitous.

De deposito.

§ III. Præterea et is, apud quem res aliqua deponitur, re obligatur, teneturque actione depositi; quia et ipse de eâ re, quam accepit, restituendâ tenetur. Sed is ex eo solo tenetur, si quid dolo commiserit: culpæ autem nomine, id est, desidîæ ac negligentîæ, non tenetur. Itaque securus est, qui parùm diligentèr custoditam rem furto amiserit: quia, qui negligentî amico rem custodiendam tradit, non ei, sed suæ facilitati, id imputare debet.

§ 3. A person intrusted with a deposit, is bound by the delivery of the thing, and is subject to an action of deposit, because he is under an obligation of making restitution of that very thing, which he received. But a depositary is only thus answerable on account of fraud; for where a fault only can be proved against him, such as negligence, he is under no obligation; and he is therefore secure, if the thing deposited be stolen from him, even although it were carelessly kept. For he, who commits his goods to the care of a negligent friend, should impute the loss, not to his friend, but to his own want of caution.

De pignore.

§ IV. Creditor quoque, qui pignus accepit, re obligatur; quia et ipse, de eâ re, quam accepit, restituendâ, tenetur actione pigneratitiâ. Sed, quia pignus utriusque gratiâ datur, et debitoris, quo magis pecunia ei credatur, et creditoris, quo

§ 4. A creditor also who hath received a pledge, is bound by the delivery of it; for he is obliged to restore the very thing, which he hath received, by the action called pigneratitia. But, inasmuch as a pledge is given for the mutual sermagis ei in tuto sit creditum, placuit sufficere si, ad eam rem custodiendam, exactam diligentiam adhibeat; quam si præstiterit, et aliquo fortuito causa rem amiserit, securum esse, nec impediri creditum petere.

vice of both debtor and creditor, (of the debtor, that he may borrow more readily, and of the creditor, that repayment may be better secured,) it will suffice, if the creditor shall appear to have used an exact diligence in keeping the thing pledged: for if so, and the pledge be lost by mere accident, the creditor is secure, and is not prohibited from suing his debt.

TITULUS DECIMUS-SEXTUS.

DE VERBORUM OBLIGATIONIBUS.

D. xlv. T. 1. C. viii. T. 38.

Summa.

VIRBIS obligatio contrahitur ex interrogatione et responsione, cum quid dari fieri nobis stipulamur; ex quâ duæ proficiscuntur actiones, tam conductio certi, si certa sit stipulatio, quam ex stipulatu, si incerta sit: quæ hoc nomine inde utitur, quod stipulum apud veteres firmum appellabatur, forte à stipite decedens.

A verbal obligation is made by question and answer, when we stipulate, that any thing shall be given or done; hence arise two actions, viz. the condictio certi, when the stipulation is certain; and the condictio ex stipulatu, when it is uncertain. This obligation is called a stipulation, because whatever was firm, was termed stipulum, by the ancients; probably from stirpes, the trunk of a tree.

De virbis stipulationum.

§ I. In hac re olivum talia verba tradita fuerunt; Spondes? Spondeo. Premittis? Premitto. Fidepromittis? Fidepromitto. Fidejubes? Fidejubeo. Dabis? Dabo. Facies? Faciam. Utrum autem Latine an Græcè, vel qualibet aliâ,

§ 1. The following words were formerly used in all verbal obligations.

Do you under- Spondes? Spondeo.

Do you promise? Premittis? Premitto.

linguâ stipulatio concipiatur, nihil interest; scilicet, si uterque stipulantium intellectum ejus linguæ habeat: nec necesse est eâdem linguâ utrumque uti, sed sufficit congruenter ad interrogata respondere. Quinetiam duo Græci Latinâ linguâ contrahere obligationem possunt. Sed hæc solemnia verba olim quidem in usu fuerunt; postea autem Leonina constitutio lata est, quæ, solemnitat verborum sublata, sensum et consonantem intellectum ab urâque, parte solùm desiderat, quibuscunque tandem verbis expressum est.

Do you faithfully promise? Fide-promittis? Fide-promitto.

Do you pledge yourself? Fide-jubes? Fide-jubeo.

Will you deliver? Dabis? Dabo.

Will you perform? Facies? Faciam.

And it is not material whether the stipulation be conceived in Latin, Greek, or any other language, if the parties understand it: nor is it necessary that the same language should be used by each person; for it is sufficient, if a pertinent answer be made to each question. So two Greeks may contract in Latin. Anciently indeed it was necessary to use those solemn words before recited; but the constitution of the emperor Leo was afterwards enacted, which takes away this verbal solemnity, and requires only the apprehension and consent of each party, expressed in any form of words.

Quibus modis stipulatio fit. De stipulatione pura vel in diem.

§ II. Omnis stipulatio aut in diem, aut sub conditione fit. Purè, veluti quinque AUREOS dare spondes? idque confestim peti potest. In diem, cum adjecto die, quo pecunia solvatur, stipulatio fit; veluti, decem AUREOS primis calendis Martiis dare spondes? id autem, quod in diem stipulamur, statim quidem debetur; sed peti prius, quam dies venerit, non potest; ac ne eo quidem ipso die, in quem stipulatio facta est, peti potest; quia totus is dies arbitrio solventis tribui debet; neque enim cer-

§ 2. Every stipulation is made to be performed simply, or at a day certain, or conditionally. Simply, when a man says do you promise to pay five aurei? and, in this case, the money may be instantly demanded. At a day certain, as when the day is mentioned on which the money is to be paid; thus, do you promise to pay me five aurei on the first of March? but that which we stipulate to pay at a day certain, though it become immediately due, cannot be demanded before the day comes; nor can it even then be sued; for the whole day must be allowed for payment; because it can never be certain, that there hath been a failure of payment on the day promised, until that day be expired.

De die adjecto perimendæ obligationes causa.

§ III. At, si ita stipuleris, decem aureos annuos, quoad vivam, dare spondes? et purè facta obligatio intelligitur, et perpetuatur: quia ad tempus non potest deberi; sed hæres petendo pacti exceptione submovebitur.

§ 3. But, if a man thus stipulates; viz. do you promise to give me ten aurei annually, as long as I live? the obligation is understand to be made simply, and becomes perpetuated; for it cannot remain due for a given time only: but should the heir demand payment, he shall be barred by an exception of agreement.

De conditione.

§ IV. Sub conditione stipulatio fit, cum in aliquem casum differtur obligatio, ut, si aliquid factum fuerit, vel non fuerit, committatur stipulatio; veluti, si Titius consul fuerit factus, quinque aureos dare spondes? Si quis ita stipuletur, si in capitolium non ascendero, dare spondes? perindè erit, ac si stipulatus esset, cum moreretur, sibi dari. Ex conditionali stipulatione tantum spes est debitum iri; eamque ipsam spem in hæredem transmittimus, si prius, quam conditio extet, mors nobis contigerit.

§ 4. A stipulation is conditional, when an obligation is referred to an accident, and depends upon some thing to happen or not to happen, before the stipulation can take effect: for instance, do you promise to pay me five aurei, if Titius be made consul? or do you promise to pay me five aurei, if I do not ascend the capitol? which last stipulation is in effect the same, as if he had stipulated, that five aurei should be paid to him at the time of his death. It is to be observed, that, in every conditional stipulation, there is only a hope, that the thing stipulated will become due; and this hope a man transmits to his heirs, if he die before the event of the condition.

De loco.

§ V. Loca etiam inseri stipulationi solent; veluti, Carthagini dare spondes? quæ stipulatio, licet purè fieri videatur, tamèn re ipsa habet tempus adjectum, quo promissor utatur ad pecuniam Carthagini dandam. Et ideò, si quis Romæ ita stipuletur, hodie Carthagini dare spondes? inutilis erit stipulatio, cum impossibilis sit repromissio.

§ 5. Even places are often inserted in a stipulation; as, do you promise to give me such a particular thing at Carthage? and this stipulation, although it appear to be made simply, yet in reality carries with it a space of time, which the obligor may make use of to enable himself to pay the money promised at Carthage. And therefore, if a man at Rome should stipulate in these words, do you promise to pay me a sum of money this day at Carthage? the stipulation would be null, because the performance of it would be impossible.

De conditione ad tempus præsens vel præteritum relata.

§ VI. Conditiones, quæ ad præsens vel præteritum tempus referuntur, aut statim infirmant obligationem, aut omninò non differunt; veluti, si Titius consul fuit, vel, si Mævius vivit, dare spondes? nam, si ea ita non sunt, nihil valet stipulatio: sin autem ita se habent, statim valet. Quæ enim per rerum naturam sunt certa, non morantur obligationem, licet apud nos incerta sint.

§ 6. Conditions, which relate to the time present or past, either instantly annul or enforce an obligation. Thus, do you promise if Titius hath been a consul? or if Mævius be now living? if these are not facts, the stipulation is void; if they are, it is good and may be enforced; for events, which in themselves are certain, delay not the performance of an obligation, although to us they are not certain.

Quæ in stipulatum deducuntur.

§ VII. Non solùm res in stipulatum deduci possunt, sed etiam facta; ut si stipulemur aliquid fieri, vel non fieri. Et in hujusmodi stipulationibus optimum erit poenam subicere, ne quantitas stipulationis in incerto sit, ac necesse sit

§ 7. Not only things, but acts, may be the subject of stipulation; as when we stipulate, that something shall, or shall not be done. And, in these stipulations, it will be right to subjoin a penalty, lest the value of the stipulation should be in-actori probare, quod ejus intersit. Itaque, si quis, ut fiat aliquid, stipuletur, ita adjici pœna bebet, si ita factum non erit, pœnæ nomine decem aureos dare spondes; Sed si, quædam fieri, quædam non fieri, unâ eâdemque conceptione stipuletur quis, clausula hujusmodi erit adjicienda; si adversus ea factum erit, sive quid ita factum non fuerit, tunc pœnæ nomine decem aureos dare spondes?

certain, and the demandant should therefore be forced to prove how far he is interested in it. Therefore, if a man stipulate, that something shall be done, a penalty ought to be thus added; do you not promise to pay me ten aurei, as a penalty, if the act stipulated is not performed; But, if it be agreed in the same obligation, that some things shall be done, and that others shall not be done, then ought some such clause, as the following, to be added; do you promise to pay me ten aurei, as a penalty, if any thing be done contrary to agreement; or if any thing be not done according to our agreement?

TUTULUS DECIMUS-SEPTIMUS.

DE DUOBUS REIS STIPULANDI ET PROMITTENDI.

D. xlv. T. 2. C. viii. T. 40. Nov. 99.

Quibus modis duo rei fieri possunt.

ET stipulandi et promittendi duo pluresve rei fieri possunt. Stipulandi ita, si post omnium interrogationem promissor respondeat, Spondeo; ut puta, cum duobus separatim stipulantibus ita promissor respondeat, utrique vestrum dare spondeo. Nam, si prius Titio sponderit, deindè alio interrogante spondeat, alia atque alia erit obligatio, nec creduntur duo rei stipulan-

Two or more persons may stipulate, and two or more may become obligors. The stipulating parties are bound, if, after all questions have been asked, the obligor answer, I promise; as when, for example, the obligor thus answers two persons separately stipulating, I promise to pay each of you. For, if he first promise Titius, and afterwards promise another, who inter-di esse. Duo pluresve rei promittendi ita fiunt, Mævi, decem aureos dare spondes ? et, Sei, eosdem decem aureos dare spondes ? si respondeant singuli separatim, Spondeo.

rogates him there will then be two obligations, and not two stipulators to one obligation. Two or more become obligors, if after, they have been thus interrogated, Mævius do you promise to pay us ten aurei ? and, Seius, do you promise to pay us the same ten aurei ? they each of them answer separately, I do promise.

De effectu hujusmodi stipulationum.

§ I. Ex hujusmodi obligationibus et stipulationibus solidum singulis debetur, et promittentes singuli in solidum tenentur. In utraque tamen obligatione una res vertitur ; et vel alter debitum accipiendo, vel alter solvendo, omnium perimit obligationem, et omnes liberat.

§ 1. By these stipulations and obligations the whole sum stipulated becomes due to each stipulator ; and each obligor is bound for the whole. But as one and the same thing is due by each obligation, any one stipulator by receiving the debt, and any obligor by paying it, discharges the obligation of the rest, and frees all parties.

De stipulatione pura ; et de die et conditione.

§ II. Ex duobus reis promittendi, alius purè, alius in diem, vel sub conditione, obligari potest ; nec impedimento erit dies aut conditio, quo minùs ab eo, qui pure obligatus est, petatur.

§ 2. Where there are two obligors, the one may bind himself purely and simply, and the other may oblige himself only to make payment on a day certain, or upon condition : but neither the day certain, nor the condition, will secure the person, who is simply bound, from being sued for the payment of the whole.

TITULUS DECIMUS-OCTAVUS.

DE STIPULATIONIBUS SERVORUM.

D. xlv. T. 3.

An servus stipulari possit.

SERVUS ex personâ domini jus stipulandi habet; sed et hæreditas in plerisque personæ defuncti vicem sustinet: ideòque, quod servus hæreditarius antè aditam hæreditatem stipulatur, acquirit hæreditati; ac per hoc etiam hæredi postea facto acquiritur.

A slave obtains the liberty of stipulating from the person of his master; but in many instances the inheritance represents the person of a master deceased: and therefore whatever an hereditary slave stipulates for, before the inheritance is entered upon, he acquires it for the inheritance; and of course for him, who afterwards becomes the heir.

Cui acquirat De persona, cui stipulatur. De stipulatione impersonali.

§ I. Sive autem domino, sive sibi, sive, conservo, suo, sive impersonaliter, servus stipuletur, domino acquirit. Idem juris est et in liberis, qui in potestate patris sunt, ex quibus causis acquirere possunt.

§ 1. A slave, let him stipulate how he will, for his master, for himself, for a fellow slave, or generally without naming any person, always acquires for his master. And the same obtains among children, who are under the power of their father, in regard to those things, which they can acquire for him.

De stipulatione facti.

§ II. Sed, cum factum in stipulatione continebitur, omnimodò persona stipulantis continetur; veluti, si servus stipuletur, ut sibi ire, agere, liceat; ipse enim tantum prohiberi non debet, non etiam dominus ejus.

§ 2. But, when a fact or thing to be done is contained in a stipulation, the person of the stipulator is solely regarded; so that, if even a slave stipulate, that he should be permitted to pass through a field, and to drive beasts or a carriage through it, it is not the master, but the slave only, who is to be permitted to pass.

De servo communi.

§ III. Servus communis stipulando unicuique dominorum, pro portione domini, acquirit; nisi jussu unius eorum, aut nominatim alicui eorum, stipulatus est; tunc enim soli ei acquiritur. Quod servus communis stipulatur, si alteri ex dominis acquiri non potest, solidum alteri acquiritur; veluti si res, quam dari stipulatus est, unius domini sit.

§ 3. If a slave, who is in common to several masters, stipulate, he acquires a share for each master according to the proportion, which each has in the property of him. But if such slave should stipulate at the command of any particular master, or in his name, the thing stipulated will be acquired solely for that master. And whatever a slave in common to two masters stipulates for, if part cannot be acquired for one master, the whole shall be acquired for the other; as when the thing stipulated already belongs to one of the two.

TITULUS DECIMUS-NONUS.

DE DIVISIONE STIPULATIONUM.

Divisio.

STIPULATIONUM aliæ sunt judiciales, aliæ prætoriæ, aliæ conventionales aliæ communes, tam prætoriæ quam judiciales.

Some stipulations are judicial, others prætorian, others conventional, and others common; that is, hath prætorian and judicial.

De judicialibus stipulationibus.

§ I. Judiciales sunt duntaxat, quæ à mero judicis officio proficiuntur; veluti de dolo cautio, vel de persequendo servo, qui in fugâ est, restituendove pretio.

§ 1. The judicial are those, which proceed merely from the office of the judge; as when security is ordered to be given against fraud, or for pursuing a slave, who hath fled, or for paying the price of him.

Do prætoriis.

§ II. Prætoriae sunt, quæ à mero prætoris officio proficiscuntur; veluti damni infecti vel legatorum. Prætorias autem stipulationes sic audiri oportet, ut in iis etiam contineantur Ædilitiæ; nam et hæ à jurisdictione prætoris veniunt.

§ 2. Prætorian stipulations are those which proceed from the mere office of the prætor; as when security is ordered pro damno infecto; for damage likely to happen; or for the payment of legacies. Under prætorian stipulations are comprehended the Edilitian; for these proceed from the jurisdiction of the prætor.

De conventionalibus.

§ III. Conventionales sunt, quæ ex conventionione utriusque partis concipiuntur; hoc est, neque jussu judicis, neque jussu prætoris, sed ex conventionione contrahentium; quarum totidem sunt genera, quot, (penè dixerim,) rerum contrahendarum.

§ 3. Conventional stipulations are those, which are made by the agreement of parties; that is, neither by order of a judge or prætor, but by the consent of the persons contracting; and of these stipulations there are as many kinds, as of things to be contracted for.

De communibus.

§ IV. Communes sunt, veluti ram salvam fore pupillo, (nam et prætor jubet rem salvam fore pupillo caveri, et interdum judex, si aliter hæc res expediri non potest,) vel de rato stipulatio.

§ 4. Common stipulations are those, which are ordered for the security of the effects of the pupil, (for the prætor ordains a caution to be given on this account, and sometimes a judge decrees it, when there is an absolute necessity,) or for the ratification of a thing done in another's name.

TITULUS VIGESSIMUS.

DE INUTILIBUS STIPULATIONIBUS.

C. viii. T. 39.

De his, quæ sunt in commercio.

OMNIS res, quæ dominio nostro subieitur, in stipulationem deduci potest, sive ea mobilis sit, sive soli.

Every thing, of which we have the property, may be brought into stipulation, whether it be moveable or immoveable.

De his, quæ non existunt.

§ I. At si quis rem, quæ in rerum naturâ non est, aut esse non potest, dari stipulatus fuerit, veluti Stichum, qui mortuus sit, quem vivere credebat, aut Hippocentaurum, qui esse non possit, inutilis erit stipulatio.

§ 1. But, if a man hath stipulated that a thing shall be given, which does not, or cannot exist, as that Stichus, the slave, who is dead, but is thought to be living, or that a Centaur, who cannot exist, should be given to him, the stipulation is of no force.

De his, quæ non sunt in commercio.

§ II. Idem juris est, si rem sacram aut religiosam, quam humani juris esse credebat, vel publicam, quæ usibus populi perpetuò exposita sit, ut forum, vel theatrum, vel liberum hominem, quem servum esse credebat, vel cujus commercium non habuerit, vel rem suam dari, quis stipuletur: nec in pendenti erit stipulatio ob id, quod publica res in privatam deduci, et ex libero servus fieri potest, et commercium adipisci stipulator potest; sed protinùs inutilis est. Item contrà, licet initio utilitèr res in stipulatum deducta sit, si tamen postea in aliquam eorum causam, de qui-

§ 2. And the law is the same, if a thing sacred, which was deemed otherwise, is brought into stipulation; or some thing of constant public use, as a forum or a theatre; or a free person, thought to be bond or what cannot be acquired; or some thing which is already his own: nor shall any such stipulation continue in suspense, because a thing public may become private, a freeman may turn slave, a stipulator may become capable of acquiring, or because what now belongs to the stipulator may cease to be his; but every such stipulation shall be instantly void. And, on the contrary, bus supra dictum est, sinè facto prommissoris devenerit, extinguitur stipulatio. At nec statim ab initio talis stipulatio valebit, Lucium Titium, cum servus erit, dare spondes? et similia: quæ enim natura sui dominio nostro exempta sunt, in obligationem deduci nullo modo possunt.

although a thing may properly be brought into stipulation at first, yet, if it afterwards fall under the class of any of the things before mentioned without the fault of the obligor, the stipulation is extinguished. And such a stipulation as the following shall never be valid: do you promise to give me Lucius Titius when he shall become a slave? for those things, which in their natures are exempt from our dominion, are by no means to be brought into obligation.

De facto vel datione alterius.

§ III. Si quis alium datarum facturumve quid promiserit, non obligabitur; veluti si spondeat, Titium quinque aureos datarum; quod si effecturum se, ut Titius daret, spoponderit, obligatur.

§ 3. If a man promise, that another shall give or do something, such promissor shall not be bound; as if a man should promise, that Titius shall pay five aurei: but, if he promise, that he will cause Titius to pay five aurei, his promise shall be binding.

De eo, in quem confertur obligatio, vel solutio.

§ IV. Si quis alii, quam ei, cuius juri subjectus est, stipuletur, nihil agit. Planè solutio etiam in extraneam personam conferri potest; veluti, si quis ita stipuletur, mihi aut Seio dare spondes? ut obligatio quidem stipulatori acquiritur, solvi tamen Seio, etiam invito eo, rectè possit, ut liberatio ipso jure contingat; sed ille adversus Seium habeat mandati actionem. Quod si quis sibi et alii, cujus juri subjectus non sit, dari decem aureos stipulatus est, valet quidem stipulatio. Sed, utrum totum de-

§ 4. If a man stipulate for any other, than for him, to whom he is subject, it is void: yet a payment of a thing promised may be made to a stranger; as if a man should stipulate, do you promise to make payment to me, or to Seius? for, when the obligation is to the stipulator, the payment may well be made to Seius, though against his will; and this is allowed in favor of the debtor, that he may be legally freed from his debt: and the stipulator, if there be occasion, may have an action of mandate against Seius. If a man should beatur stipulatori, quod in stipulationem deductum est, an vero pars dimidia, dubitatum est. Sed, placuit, non plus, quam dimidiam partem, ei acquiri. Ei verò, qui juri tuo subjectus est, si stipulatus sis, tibi acquiris; quia vox tua tanquam filii intelligitur in his rebus, quæ tibi acquiri possunt.

stipulate, that ten aurei shall be paid to him and to another, not under his power, the stipulation would be good: yet it hath been a doubt, whether in this case, the whole sum would be due to the stipulator, or only a moiety; and it hath been resolved, a moiety only. But, if you stipulate for another, who is subject to your power, you acquire for yourself: for your own words are reputed your son's, and your son's words are reputed yours, as so to all those things, which you may acquire.

De interrogatione et responsione.

§ V. Præterea inutilis est stipulatio, si quis ad ea, quæ interrogatus fuerit, non respondeat; veluti si quis decem aureos à te dari sibi stipuletur, tu quinque promittas, vel contra: aut si ille purè stipuletur, tu sub conditione promittas, vel contra: si modo scilicet id exprimas; id est, si cui sub conditione vel in diem stipulanti tu respondeas, præsenti die spondeo: nam, si hoc solum respondeas, Promitto, breviter videris in eandem diem vel conditionem spopondisse: neque enim necesse est in respondendo, eadem omnia repeti, quæ stipulator expresserit.

§ 5. A stipulation is void, if the party interrogated do not answer pertinently to the demand made; as when a person stipulates, that ten aurei shall be paid him, and you answer five; or, vice versa, if he stipulate for five, and you answer, I promise ten. A stipulation is also void, if a man stipulates simply, and you promise conditionally; or the contrary; that is, if, when a man is stipulating conditionally or at a day certain, you answer him thus; I promise you payment on this present day. But, if you answer only, I promise, you seem briefly to agree to his day or condition. For it is not necessary, that in the answer every word should be repeated, which the stipulator expressed.

De his, qui sunt, vel habent, in potestate.

§ VI. Item inutilis est stipulatio, si vel ab eo stipuleris, qui tuo juri subjectus est, vel si is à te stipuletur. Sed servus quidem non

§ 6. A stipulation is also void, if made with one who is under your power, or if he stipulate with you. For a slave is incapable not only of entering into an obligation with his master, but of binding himself to any other person. But the son of a family can enter into an obligation with any person, (but his father.)

De muto et surdo.

§ VII. Mutum neque stipulari neque promittere posse, palam est; quod et in surdo receptum est: quia et is, qui stipulatur, verba promittentis, et is, qui promittit, verba stipulantis, audire debet. Unde apparet, non de eo nos loqui, qui tardius exaudit, sed de eo, qui omnino non audit.

§ 7. It is evident, that a dumb man can neither stipulate, nor promise: and so of deaf persons; for he, who stipulates, ought to hear the words of the obligor; and he, who promises, the words of the stipulator. But we speak not of him, who hears with difficulty, but of him, who has no hearing.

De furioso.

§ VIII. Furiosus nullum negotium gerere potest, quia non intelligit, quod agit.

§ 8. A madman can transact no business, because he understands not what he does.

De impubere.

§ IX. Pupillus omne negotium recte gerit; ita tamen ut, ubi tutoris auctoritas necessaria sit, adhibeatur tutor; veluti, si ipse obligetur; nam alium sibi obligare etiam sine tutoris auctoritate potest. Sed, quod diximus de pupillis, utique de his verum est, qui jam habent aliquem intellectum. Nam infans, et qui infantie proximus est, non multum à furioso distat; quia hujusmodi ætatis pupilli, nullum habent intellectum. Sed in proximis infantie, propter utilitatem eorum, benignior juris interpretatio facta est, ut idem juris habeant, quod pubertati proximi. Sed, qui in po-

§ 9. A pupil may transact any business, if his tutor consent, where his authority is necessary; as it is, when the pupil would bind himself: but a pupil can stipulate or cause others to be bound to him, without the authority of his tutor. This must be understood of pupils who have some understanding; for an infant, or one next to an infant, differs but little from a person out of his senses: for pupils of such an age have no understanding: but the law is construed more favourably to those, who are but little removed from infancy, whenever their interest is concerned; for they are then allowed the same rights, as infants near the age of puberty. But a son, under power of his father, and within the age of puberty, cannot bind himself, even although his father consent

De conditione impossibili.

§ X. Si impossibilis conditio stipulationibus adjiciatur, nihil valet stipulatio. Impossibilis autem conditio habetur, cui natura impedimento est, quominus existat; veluti si quis ita dixerit, si digito cætum attigero, dare spondes? at, si ita stipuletur, si digito cætum non attigero dare spondes? pure facta obligatio intelligitur, ideoque statim peti potest.

§ 10. If an impossible condition be added to the obligation, the stipulation is null; and that condition is reckoned impossible, of which nature forbids the event: as, if a man should say, do you promise, if I touch the heavens with my finger? but suppose a stipulation to be thus made; do you promise, if I do not touch the sky with my finger? such a stipulation would be understood to cause a simple obligation, the performance of which might be instantly demanded.

De absentia.

§ XI. Item verborum obligatio, inter absentes concepta, inutilis est. Sed, cum hoc materium litium contentiosis hominibus præstabat, fortè post tempus tales allegationes opponentibus, et non præsentibus fuisse vel se vel adversarios suos contententibus, ideo nostra constitutio propter celeritatem dirimendarum litium introducta est, quam ad Cæsarienses advocatos scripsimus; per quam disposuimus, tales scripturas, quæ presto esse partes indicant, omnino esse credendas, nisi is, qui talibus utitur improbis allegationibus, manifestissimis probationibus, vel per scripturam, vel per testes idoneos, approbaverit, toto eo die,

§ 11. A verbal obligation, made between absent persons, is also void. But, when this doctrine afforded matter of strife to contentious men, alleging after some time elapsed, that either they or the other parties were not present, we issued our constitution, addressed as a rescript to the advocates of Cæsarea, which effectually provided for the speedy determination of such suits: and by this we have ordained, that full credit shall be given to those written acts, or instruments, which declare, that the contracting parties were present; unless the party, who alleges absence, makes it evident by the most manifest proofs either in writing or by witnesses, that either he, or his adversary, was in some other place, during the whole day, in which the instrument was made.

De stipulatione post mortem, vel pridie quam alter contrahentium moriatur.

§ XII. Post mortem suam dari sibi nemo stipulari poterat, non magis quam post mortem ejus, à quo stipulabatur. Ac nec is, qui in aliqujus potestate est, post mortem ejus stipulari poterat; quia patris vel domini voce loqui videretur. Sed et, si quis ita stipuletur, pridie quam moriar, vel, pridie quam morieris, dare spondes? inutilis erat stipulatio. Sed, cum, ut jam dictum est, ex consensu contrahentium stipulationes valeant, placuit nobis, etiam in hunc juris articulum necessariam inducere emendationem, ut, sive post mortem, sive pridie quam moriatur stipulator, sive promissor, stipulatio concepta sit, stipulatio valeat.

§ 12. A man could formerly no more stipulate, that a thing should be given him after his own death, than after the death of the obligor. Neither could any person under the power of another stipulate, that any thing should be given him after his death, because such person would appear to speak the words of his father or master. And, if a man had stipulated in this manner: do you promise to give the day before I die? or the day before you die? the stipulation was also invalid. But since all stipulations, as we have already said, take their force from the consent of the contracting parties, we have thought it proper to introduce a necessary emendation in this respect, so that, whether it be stipulated, that a thing shall be given after, or immediately before, the death either of the stipulator or the obligor, the stipulation shall be good.

De stipulatione præpostera.

§ XIII. Item, si quis ita stipulatus erat, si navis cras ex Asia venerit, hodie dare spondes? inutilis erat stipulatio, quia præposterè concepta est. Sed, cum Leo inclytæ recordationis in dotibus eandem stipulationem, quæ præpostera nun-

§ 13. Also, if a man had thus stipulated, do you promise me money to-day, if a certain ship should arrive to-morrow from Asia? it would have been invalid, because preposterously conceived. But, since the emperor Leo, of renowned cupatur, non esse rejiciendam existimaverit, nobis placuit et huic perfectum robur accommodare, ut non solum in dotibus, sed etiam in omnibus, valeat hujusmodi conceptio stipulationis.

memory, was of opinion, that such stipulations ought not to be rejected as to marriage portions, it hath pleased us also to give a fuller force to this doctrine by ordaining, that every stipulation of like import shall hold good not only in marriage portions, but likewise in all other contracts.

De stipulatione collata in tempus mortis.

§ XIV. Ita autem stipulatio concepta, veluti si Titius dicat, cum moriar, dare spondes? vel cum morieris? et apud veteros utilis erat, et nunc valet.

§ 14. If a stipulation had been thus conceived; do you promise, when I am about to die? or when you are about to die? it was good by the ancient law, and is so now.

§ XV. Item post mortem alterius rectè stipulamur.

§ 15. We may also legally stipulate, (that a thing shall be given,) after the death of a third person.

De promissione scripta in instrumento.

§ XVI. Si scriptum in instrumento fuerit, promississe aliquem, perindè habetur, atque si interrogatione præcedente responsum sit.

§ 16. If it be written in an act or instrument, properly attested, that a man hath entered into an obligation by promise, it will be presumed, that the promise was in answer to a precedent interrogation.

De pluribus rebus in stipulationem deductis.

§ XVII. Quoties plures res una stipulatione comprehenduntur, siquidem promissor simpliciter respondeat dare spondeo, propter omnes tenetur. Si verò unam ex his, vel quasdam, datarum se spoponderit, obligatio in iis, pro quibus spoponderit, contrahitur: ex pluribus enim stipulationibus una vel

§ 17. When many things are comprehended in one stipulation, a man binds himself to all, if he answer simply I promise. But, if he promise to give one, or some of the things stipulated, an obligation is contracted only in respect to those. For, of many stipulations, it may happen that only one, or some of them may be made perfect by a separate answer; and strictly we ought to stipulate for everything severally, and to answer severally.

De pœna adjecta stipulationi, alii dari.

§ XVIII. Alteri stipulari (ut supra dictum est) nemo potest. Inventæ enim sunt hujusmodi stipulationes vel obligationes ad hoc, ut unusquisque acquirat sibi, quod sua interest; cæterum, si alii detur, nihil interest stipulatoris. Planè, si quis velit hoc facere, pœnam stipulari conveniet, ut, nisi ita factum sit, ut est comprehensum, committatur pœnæ stipulatio etiam ei, cujus nihil interest. Pœnam enim cum stipulatur quis, non illud inspicitur, quod intersit ejus, sed quæ sit quantitas in conditione stipulationis. Ergo, si quis ita stipuletur, Titio dari, nihil agit; sed, si adjecerit pœnam, nisi dederis, tot aureos dare spondes? tunc committitur stipulatio.

§ 18. No man can stipulate for another, as we have already observed; for stipulations and obligations have been invented, that every person may acquire for his own advantage; and, if this be given to another, the stipulator has no interest. But, if a man would effectually stipulate for another, he should bind the obligor to perform the covenants under a penalty, payable to him, who otherwise would receive no advantage from the obligation: for, when a penalty is stipulated, the interest of the stipulator is not so much regarded, as the quantum of penalty. Therefore, if a man should stipulate, that a certain thing shall be given to Titius it will not avail; but, if he add a penalty as, do you promise to give me so many aurei, if you do not give the thing stipulated to Titius? the penalty stipulated is put in jeopardy.

Si intersit ejus, qui alii stipulatur.

§ XIX. Sed et, si quis stipuletur alii, cum ejus interesset, placuit stipulationem valere. Nam, si is, qui pupilli tutelam administrare coeperat, cesserit administrationem contutori suo, et stipuletur rem pupilli salvam fore, quoniam interest stipulatoris fieri, quod stipulatus

§ 19. But, if any man should stipulate for the benefit not merely of another, but of himself also, it is valid. Thus if he, who hath begun to administer the tutelage of a pupil, should afterwards give up the administration to his co-tutor, and stipulate for the security of the estate est; cum obligatus futurus sit pupillo, si malè res gesserit, tenet obligatio. Ergo et, si quis procuratori suo dari stipulatus sit, habebit vires stipulatio. Et, si creditori suo quis stipulatus sit quod sua interest, ne fortè vel pœna committatur, vel prœdia distrahantur, quæ pignori data erant, valet stipulatio.

of his pupil, in this case, (inasmuch as such a stipulation is for the interest of the stipulator, who is liable for damages to the pupil, if the co-tutor should make default,) the obligation would bind. So if a man stipulate, that a thing shall be given to his proctor, it will bind. A stipulation made by a debtor for the use of his creditor is good, because it is the interest of the debtor, either that the penalty, upon which he borrowed, should not be exacted from him, or that his goods, which are pledged should not be sold.

De pœna adjecta promissioni facti alieni.

§ XX. Vice versâ, qui alium futurum promisit, videtur in eâ esse causâ, ut non teneatur, nisi pœnam ipse promiserit.

§ 20. On the contrary, he, who undertakes for the performance of another, is not bound unless he promises under a penalty.

De re stipulantis futura.

§ XXI. Item nemo rem suam futuram, in eum casum, quo sua sit, utilitèr stipulatur.

§ 21. No man can legally stipulate, that a thing shall be given him, when it shall become his own.

De dissensu.

§ XXII. Si de aliâ re stipulator senserit, de aliâ promissor, perinde nulla contrahitur obligatio, ac si ad interrogatum, responsum non esset; veluti si hominem Stichum à te quis stipulatus fuerit, tu de Pamphilo senseris, quem Stichum vocari credideris.

§ 22. If the stipulator allude to one thing, and the obligor to another, no more obligation is contracted, than if no answer had been made to the interrogation; and this would be the case, if a man should stipulate, that Stichus should be given to him, and the obligor should intend to give Pamphilus, upon a persuasion, that Pamphilus is called Stichus.

TITULUS VIGESIMUS-PRIMUS.*DE FIDEJUSSORIBUS.

D. xlv. T. 1. C. viii. T. 41. Nov. 4.

Cur accipiuntur fidejussores.

PRO eo, qui promittit, solent Sometimes others bind themselves alii obligari, qui fidejussores appel- for the promissor. Such sureties lantur; quos homines accipere so- are called fide-jussors, and are gene-lent, dum curant, ut diligentius sibi cautum sit.

rally required by creditors for their greater security.

In quibus obligationibus.

§ I. In omnibus autem obligationibus assumi possunt; id est, sive re sive verbis sive literis, sive consensu, contractæ fuerint: ac nec illud quidem interest, utrum civilis, an naturalis sit obligatio, cui adjicitur fidejussor; adeo quidem, ut pro servo quoque obligetur, sive extraneus sit, qui fidejussorem à servo accipiat, sive ipse dominus, in id, quod sibi naturaliter debetur.

§ 1. Fide-jussors may be received in all obligations, whether contracted by the delivery of the thing itself, by words, by writing, or the mere consent of parties: nor is it material, whether the obligation be civil or natural; for a man may intervene, and oblige himself, as a fide-jussor or surety, even on the behalf of a slave; and this may be done, whether the person, who accepts the fide-jussor, by a stranger or the master of the slave, when the thing due is a natural debt or obligation.

De hærede.

§ II. Fidejussor non tantum ipse obligatur, sed etiam hæredem relinquit obligatum.

§ 2. A fide-jussor is not only bound himself, but by his death transmits the obligation to his heir.

Si fidejussor præcedat vel sequatur obligationem.

§ III. Fidejussor et præcedere obligationem et sequi potest.

§ 3. A fide-jussor may be accepted, either before or after an obligation is entered into.

De pluribus fidejussoribus.

§ IV. Si plures sint fidejussores, quotquot erunt numero, singuli in solidum tenentur; itaque liberum est creditori, à quo velit, solidum petere. Sed ex epistolâ Divi Hadriani compellitur creditor à singulis, qui modo solvendo sunt litis contestatæ tempore, partes petere; ideòque, si quis ex fidejussoribus eo tempore solvendo

§ 4. Where there are fide-jussors, however numerous, each is bound for the whole debt; and the creditor may choose, from whom he will demand it. But, by a rescript of the emperor Adrian, a creditor may be obliged to demand separately from every fide-jussor, who is solvent at the time of the suit, his share of the debt pro ratâ; and, if any of non sit, hoc cæteros onerat. Sed, si ab uno fidejussore creditor totum consecutus fuerit, hujus solius detrimentum erit, si is, pro quo fidejussit, solvendo non sit: et sibi imputare debet, cum potuerit juvari ex epistolâ Divi Hadriani, et desiderare, ut pro parte in se detur actio.

the fide-jussors, at the time of the suit, is not solvent, the burden falls upon the rest. But, if a creditor obtain his whole demand from one of the fide-jussors, the whole loss shall be his, if the principal be insolvent: for such fide-jussor must blame himself, since under the rescript of the emperor Adrian, he might have prayed, that no action should be given against him, for more than his share of the debt, as surety.

In quam summam obligatuor fide-jussor.

§ V. Fidejussores ita obligari non possunt, ut plus debeant, quam debet is, pro quo obligantur: nam eorum obligatio accessio est principalis obligationis; nec plus in accessione potest esse, quam in principali re; at ex diverso, ut minus debeant, obligari possunt. Itaque, si reus decem aureos promiserit, fidejussor in quinque rectè obligatur; contra verò obligari non potest. Item, si ille purè promiserit, fidejussor sub conditione promittere potest; contra verò non potest. Non solum autem in quantitate, sed etiam in tempore, minus aut plus intelligitur: plus enim est statim aliquid dare, minus est post tempus dare.

§ 5. Fide-jussors ought not to be bound in a greater sum, than the debtor owes; for their obligation is an accession to the principal obligation; and an accessory debt cannot be greater than the principal, though it may be less. Therefore, if the principal obligor promises ten aurei, the fide-jussor may be bound in five; but the fide-jussor cannot be bound in ten, when the principal obligor is bound only in five. Also, when the obligor promises simply, the surety may promise conditionally; but, if the surety is bound simply, when the principal is bound conditionally, the obligation is void. And the terms greater and less take place, not only in quantity but also in time; for an obligation to deliver a thing instantly is greater, than to deliver it after a time.

De actione fidejussoris.

§ VI. Si quid autem fidejussor pro reo solverit, ejus recuperandi causâ habent cum eo mandati iudicium.

§ 6. If a fide-jussor hath been obliged to pay money for his principal, he may have an action of mandate to recover the sum paid.

Si fidejussor græce accipiatur.

§ VII. Græce etiam fidejussor ita accipitur τη ἐμῇ πίστει πιστεῖναι, λέγω. Sed et si dixerit, δεδω, σὺν δὲ βελομαι, sed et, φημι, pro eo erit, ac si dixerit, λέγω.

§ 7. A fide-jussor may thus bind himself even in greek; I answer or speak solemnly upon my faith. But, the expressions, I am willing, or I promise, would answer the same purpose.

Si scriptum sit, aliquem fidejussisse.

§ VIII. In stipulationibus fidejussorum sciendum est, hoc generalitèr accipi, ut, quodcunque scriptum sit quasi actum, videatur etiam actum. Ideòque constat, si quis scripserit se fidejussisse, videri omnia solemnità acta.

§ 8. It is a general rule in all fide-jussorial stipulations, that whatever is alleged in writing to have been done, is presumed to have been actually done: therefore, if a man in writing confesses, that he hath become a fide-jussor, it is also presumed, that the necessary forms were observed.

OLIM scripturâ fiebat obligatio, quæ nominibus fieri dicebatur; quæ nomina hodie non sunt in usu. Planè, si quis debere se scripserit, quod sibi numeratum non est, de pecuniâ minimè numeratâ, post multum temporis, exceptionem op-

A species of written obligation anciently prevailed, by registering the names of the contractors; these were called nomina, but are not now in use. But, if a man confesses in writing, that he owes, what in reality he never received, he can-ponere non potest: hoc enim sæpissimè constitutum est. Sic fit, ut et hodie, dum queri non potest, scripturâ obligetur; et ex eâ nascatur condictio, cessante scilicèt verborum obligatione. Multum autem tempus in hac exceptione antea quidem ex principalibus constitutionibus usque ad quinquennium procedebat: sed, ne creditores diutius possint suis pecuniis forsitan defraudari, per constitutionem nostram tempus coarctum est, ut, ultra biennii metas, hujusmodi exceptio minimè extendatur.

not plead as an exception after a long period, that the money was never advanced: and this limitation of time has frequently been prescribed by the constitutions. Hence, at this day, a man is bound by his written note, if he cannot legally bring an exception; and from this written contract arises an action called a condictio, when no verbal obligation can be proved. Formerly the imperial constitutions allowed a space of time, not less than five years, in which any man might bring an exception, pecuniæ non numeratæ, i. e. of money not advanced. But for the safety of creditors we have abridged this time, and ordained, that such an exception shall not lie after two years.

DE OBLIGATIONIBUS EX CONSENSU.

Continuatio.

CONSENSU fiunt obligationes in emptionibus, venditionibus, locationibus, conductionibus, societatibus, mandatis: ideò autem istis modis obligatio dicitur consensu contrahi, quia neque scripturâ, neque præsentia, omnimodo opus est: ac nec dari quicquam necesse est, ut substantiam capiat obligatio; sed sufficit, eos, qui negotia gerunt, consentire: unde inter absentes quoque talia negotia contrahuntur, Obligations or contracts are made by consent in buying, selling, letting, hiring, partnerships and mandates. An obligation, thus entered into is said to be contracted by consent; because neither writing nor the presence of parties is absolutely requisite. Nor is delivery necessary to make the contract take effect; for it suffices, that the parties consent; hence these contracts may be entered into by absent parties, by letters, veluti per epistolam vel per nuntium. Item in his contractibus alter alteri obligatur in id, quod alterum alteri ex bono et æquo præstare oportet; cum alioqui in verborum obligationibus alius stipuletur, alius promittat.

or messengers; and they are bound to each other mutually to do what is just and right; but generally in verbal contracts one party stipulates and the other promises.

TUTULUS VIGESIMUS-QUARTUS.

DE EMPTIONE ET VENDITIONE.

D. xviii. & xix. T. 1. C. iv. T. 38. & 40.

De emptione pura. De pretii conventionē, arrhis, et scriptura.

EMPTIO et venditio contrahitur, simul atque de pretio conveniunt, quamvis nondum pretium numeratum sit, ac ne arrha quidem data fuerit: nam, quod arrhæ nomine datur, argumentum est emptionis et venditionis contractæ. Sed hoc quidem de emptionibus et venditionibus, quæ sinè scripturâ consistunt, obtinere oportet; nam nihil à nobis in hujusmodi emptionibus et venditionibus innovatum est. In iis autem, quæ scripturâ conficiuntur, non aliter perfectam esse venditionem et emptionem constituimus, nisi et instrumenta emptionis fuerint conscripta, vel manu propriâ contrahentium, vel ab alio quidem scripta, à contrahentibus autem subscripta; et si per tabellionem fiunt, nisi et completiones acceperint, et fuerint partibus abso-

The contract of buying and selling is perfected as soon as the price is agreed upon, although it be not paid, nor even an earnest given; for earnest, does not constitute a contract, but serves only as proof of it. And this is the law respecting bargains and sales, not in writing; for herein we have made no innovation. But where there is a written contract, we have ordained, that a bargain and sale shall not become absolute, unless the instruments of sale are written by the contracting parties, or at least signed by them, if written by others; and if drawn by a public notary, unless executed and delivered complete in all their parts; for, if any thing be omitted, there is locus penitentiae—room to retract; and either the buyer or seller may re-luta. Donec enim aliquid deest ex his, et pœnitentiæ locus est, et potest emptor vel venditor sinè pœnâ recedere ab emptione et venditione. Ita tamen impunè recedere concedimus, nisi jam arrharum nomine aliquid fuerit datum; hoc enim subsequuto, sive in scriptis, sive sinè scriptis, venditio celebrata est, is, qui recusat adimplere contractum, si quidem est emptor, perdit quod dedit; si verò venditor, duplum restituere compellitur; licet super arrhis nihil expressum sit. Pretium autem constitui oportet; nam nulla emptio sinè pretio esse potest.

cede without penalty, if no earnest has been given. But, if it has, then the buyer, whether the contract was written or unwritten, if he refuse to fulfil it, loses his earnest, and the seller, if he refuse, is compellable to restore double the value of the earnest, although no agreement of this kind was expressly made. But the price should be fixed; for, until then, there can be no purchase.

De pretio certo, vel incerto, vel in arbitrium alienum collato.

§ I. Sed et certum esse pretium debet: alioqui, si inter alioquos, ita convenerit, ut, quanti Titius rem æstimaverit, tanti sit empti, inter veteres satis abundèque hoc dubitabatur, constaretne venditio, an non. Sed nostra decisio ita hoc constituit, ut, quoties sic composita sit venditio, quanti ille æstimaverit, sub hac conditione staret contractus, ut siquidem ille, qui nominatus est pretium definierit, tunc omnimodo secundum ejus æstimationem et pretium persolvatur, et res tradatur, et venditio ad effectum perducatur; emptore quidem ex empto actione, venditore ex vendito agente. Sin autem ille, qui nominatus est, vel noluerit, vel non potuerit, pretium definire, tunc pro nihilo esse venditionem, quasi nullo pretio statuto. Quod jus, cum

§ 1. The price, ought to be certain. And formerly, when it was covenanted, that a thing should be sold, at whatever price Titius should value it, the ancient lawyers much doubted, whether such a sale was good. But we have ordained, that when the sale is so made as that the price shall be fixed by a third person, it shall be valid under that condition; so that, if the nominee, or arbitrator, determine the price, it ought to be paid accordingly, the thing sold, delivered, and the sale perfected; otherwise the buyer may have an action ex empto, for the thing bought; and the seller an action ex vendito, for the thing sold. But, if the arbitrator either refuse, or is unable to determine the price, the sale is null. And, as we have so enacted in relation to sales, it is not et in conductionibus trahere.

In quibus pretium consistat. Differentia emptionis et permutationis.

§ II. Item pretium in numeratâ pecuniâ consistere debet; nam in cæteris rebus, an pretium esse posset, valdè quærebatur; veluti, an homo, aut fundus, aut toga, alterius rei pretium esse possit. Et Sabinus et Cassius etiam in aliâ re putabant pretium posse consistere; undè illud, quod vulgò dicebatur, permutatione rerum emptionem et venditionem contrahi; eamque speciem emptionis et venditionis vetustissimam esse. Argumentoque utebantur Græco poetâ Homero, qui aliquam partem exercitûs Achivorum vinum sibi comparasse ait, permutatis quibusdam rebus, his verbis.

Ναες δ' ἐκ Ἀθηναίων παρέσσαν οἶνον ἀγασσαι.
Ἐνθεν αὖρ δινίζοντο παρηγομῶντες
Ἀχαιοί,
Ἄλλοι μὲν χαλκῷ, ἄλλοι δ' αἰθωνὶ οἰδηρῷ
Ἄλλοι δὲ ρινοῖς, ἄλλοι δ' αὐτοῖσι βοέσσιν, Ἄλλοι δ' ἀνδραποδέσσει.

Hoc est.

- Naves autem et Lemno appulerunt vinum vehentes: Illinc vinum emebant Achivi commantes caput,
Alii quidem ære, alii autem ferro nigro,
Alii pellibus, alii ipsis bobus,
Alii etiam mancipiis.

Iliad VII.

§ 2. The price of an article bought, should be cash, or money told; for it hath been much doubted, whether the price of goods can be said to be paid, if any thing be given for them but money; as, whether a slave, a piece of ground, or a robe, can be paid as the price of a thing. The lawyers Sabinus and Cassius thought, that a price might consist of any thing, and from hence it has been commonly said, that emptio venditio, or buying and selling, is contracted by (barter) commutation; and that this species of buying and selling is the most ancient. The advocates for this side of the question quote Homer, who relates in the following lines, that a part of the Grecian army bought wine by giving other things in exchange for it.

*Wine the rest purchas'd at their proper cost,
And well the plenteous freight supplied the host:
Each in exchange proportion'd treasures gave,
Some brass or iron, some an ox or slave.*
Pope.

But the lawyers of a different sect maintained that commutation was one thing, and emptio-venditio another; for otherwise said they, in Diversæ scholæ auctores contra sentiebant; aliudque esse existimabant permutationem rerum, aliud emptionem et venditionem; alioqui non posse rem expediri, permutatis rebus, quæ videatur res vænisse, et quæ pretii nomine data esse; nam, utramque videri et vænisse et pretii nomine datam esse, rationem non pati. Sed Proculi sententia, dicentis, permutationem propriam esse speciem contractûs à venditione separatam, meritò prævaluit; cum et aliis Homericis versibus adjuvabatur, et validioribus rationibus argumentabatur: quod et anteriores Divi Principes admiserunt, et in nostris Digestis latius significatur.

the commutation of any two things it can never appear, which has been sold, and which has been given, as the price of the thing sold; and it is contrary to reason, that each should appear to have been sold, and that each also should appear to have been given, as the price of the other. The opinion of Proculus, who maintained, that commutation is a species of contract, separate from vendition, hath deservedly prevailed: for he is supported by other verses from Homer, and has enforced his opinion with strong arguments; and this is the doctrine, which our predecessors, the emperors Dioclesian and Maximian, have admitted, as appears more at large in our Digests.

De periculo et commodo rei venditæ.

§ III. Cum autem emptio et venditio contracta sit, (quod effici diximus simul atque de pretio convenit, cum sinè scripturâ res agitur,) periculum rei venditæ statim ad emptorem pertinet, tametsi adhuc ea res emptori tradita non sit. Itaque, si homo mortuus sit, vel aliquâ parte corporis læsus fuerit, aut ædes totæ, vel aliquâ ex parte, incendio consumptæ fuerint, aut fundus vi fluminis totus vel aliquâ ex parte ablatus sit, sive etiam inundatione aquæ, aut arboribus turbine dejectis, longè minor aut deterior esse cœperit, emptoris damnum est; cui necesse est, licet rem non fuerit nactus, pretium solvere. Quicquid enim sinè dolo et culpâ venditoris accidit, in eo ven-

§ 3. When emption and vendition are once contracted, (which is so soon as the price is agreed on, when the covenant is not in writing,) the buyer becomes liable to the risque of the thing sold, although it be not yet delivered. Therefore, if a slave should die, or be hurt, or if a building, or part of it should be consumed by fire, or if lands sold, or any part of them, should be washed away by a torrent, or damaged by an inundation, or by a storm, which may destroy the trees, the loss must be sustained by the buyer, who must pay the price agreed on, although he never had possession of the thing; for whatever the accident be, if it happen neither by the fraud, nor fault of the seller, he is secure.

ditor securus est; sed et, si post emptionem fundo aliquid per alluvionem accesserit, ad emptoris commodum pertinet; nam et commodum ejus esse debet, cujus periculum est. Quod si fugerit homo, qui vœniit, aut, surreptus fuerit, ita ut neque dolus, neque culpa venditoris intervenerit, animadvertendum erit, an custodiam ejus usque ad traditionem venditor susceperit; sanè enim si susceperit, ad ipsius periculum is casus pertinet; si non susceperit, securus est. Idem et in cæteris animalibus cæterisque rebus intelligimus. Utique tamen vindicationem rei et conditionem exhibere debebit emptori; quia sanè, qui nondum rem emptori tradidit, adhuc ipse dominus est. Idem etiam est de furti et de damni injuriæ actione.

On the other hand, if, after sale, the lands should be increased by alluvion, this increase becomes the gain of the buyer; for it is just, that he should receive the profit, who must have sustained the loss. But, if a slave who is sold, should run away or be stolen, and no fraud or negligence can be imputed to the seller, it must be inquired, whether the seller undertook the safe custody of the slave, until delivery should be made; if he did, he is answerable, if not, he is secure. The same law takes place in regard to all other animals and things. But, the seller should make over his right of vindication and condition to the buyer; for he, who has not delivered the thing sold, is still considered as the proprietor of it. Actions also of theft, or damage done, must be transferred by the seller to the buyer, (when the thing sold is stolen, or damaged before delivery.)

De emptione conditionali.

§ 4. A sale may be contracted conditionally, as well as purely: as when the seller agrees; if within a certain time you shall approve of the slave Stichus, he shall be your's for so many aurei.

De emptione rei, quæ non est in commercio.

§ V. Loca sacra, vel religiosa, item publica, (veluti forum, basilicam,) frustra quis sciens emit; quæ tamen, si pro profanis vel privatis deceptus à venditore quis emerit, habebit actionem ex empto, quod non habere ei liceat, ut consequatur,

§ 5. Whoever knowingly purchases a sacred, religious, or public place, such as a Forum, or Court of justice, it is void. But, if he purchased them as profane or private, being imposed upon by the seller, then such purchaser, not being able to obtain possession, may have an action ex empto against the seller, and recover damage for the deceit. The law is the same, if any person should mistakenly buy a freeman instead of a slave.

DE LOCATIONE ET CONDUCTIONE.

D. xix. T. 2. C. iv. T. 65. C. ii. T. 70.

Collata emptionis, et locationis. De mercedis conventionione.

LOCATIO et conductione proxima est emptioni et venditioni, iisdemque juris regulis consistit. Nam ut emptio et venditio ita contrahitur, si de pretio convenerit, sic et locatio et conductio ita contrahi intelligitur, si merces constituta sit: et competit locatori quidem locati actio, conductori verò conducti.

Location and conduction, i. e. letting and hiring, are nearly allied to emption and vendition, i. e. buying and selling; and are governed by the same rules; for as the latter takes place so soon as the price is agreed upon, so the former are contracted, when the hire is once fixed by the parties. The locator, or person who lets, is intitled if aggrieved, to an actio locati, and the conductor or hirer may have his actio conducti, against the locator.

De mercede collata in arbitrium alienum.

§ I. Et, quæ supra diximus, si alieno arbitrio pretium permissum fuerit, eadem et de locatione et de conductione dicta esse intelligimus si alieno arbitrio merces permissa fuerit. Quâ de causâ, si fulloni poliendo curandave, aut sarcinatori sarcienda, vestimenta quis dederit, nullâ statim mercede constitutâ, sed

§ 1. What has been said before respecting sales, when the price is referred to a third person, may also be understood of location and conduction, when the hire is left to arbitration. Therefore, if a man send his clothes to a fuller to be scoured, or a tailor to be mended, and do not previously agree upon postea tantum daturus, quantum inter eos convenerit, non propriè locatio et conductio contrahi intelligitur; sed eo nomine actio præscriptis verbis datur.

any price, in this case location and conduction are not understood to be properly contracted; but an action on the case may be brought by either party, præscriptis verbis, i. e. in words adapted to the circumstances.

In quibus rebus merces consistat.

§ II. Præterea, sicut vulgo quærebatur, an permutatis rebus emptio et venditio contraheretur, ita quæri solebat de locatione et conductione, si fortè rem aliquam utendam sivè fruendam tibi aliquis dederit, et invicè à te utendam sivè fruendam aliam rem acceperit. Et placuit, non esse locationem et conductionem, sed proprium genus contractûs; veluti, si, cum unum bovem quis haberet, et vicinus ejus item unum, placuerit inter eos, ut per decem dies invicè boves commodarent, ut opus facerent, et apud alterum alterius bos perierit; neque locati, neque conducti, neque commodati competit actio: quia non fuit commodatum gratuitum: verùm præscriptis verbis agendum est.

§ 2. As it was formerly a question whether emption and vendition could be contracted by exchange, so it hath also been doubted, whether location and conduction takes place when one man lends another a particular thing for his use; and receives in return some other thing, of which he is also permitted to have the use; and it has been determined, that this exchange does not constitute location and conduction, but a distinct species of contract: for example, if two neighbors have each of them an ox, and each agrees to lend his ox to the other alternately for ten days to labour, and the ox of the one should die in possession of the other, in this case, he, who has lost his ox, can neither bring the action locati nor conducti, nor even the action commodati; for the ox was not lent gratuitously: but he may sue præscriptis verbis; i. e. by an action upon the case.

Sed talis contractus quia inter veteres dubitabatur, et à quibusdam locatio, à quibusdam venditio existimabatur, lex Zenoniana lata est, quæ emphyteuseos contractûs propriam statuit naturam, neque ad locationem, neque ad venditionem inclinantem, sed suis pactionibus faciendam; et, si quidem aliquid pactum fuerit, hoc ita obtinere, ac si naturalis esset contractus: sin autem nihil de periculo rei fuerit pactum, tunc, si quidem totius rei interitus accesserit, ad dominum super hoc redundare periculum; sin autem particularis, ad emphyteuticarium hujusmodi damnum venire; quo jure utimur.

been demised for ever, upon condition, that if a certain yearly rent, be paid to the proprietor, it shall not be in his power to take these lands from the tenant or his heirs, or from any other person, to whom such tenant or his heirs shall have sold or granted or given them as a marriage portion, or otherwise. But when this contract, concerning which the ancient lawyers had great doubts, was by some regarded as an emption and vendition, and by others as a location and conduction, the Zenonian law was enacted, which settled the proper nature of an emphyteusis, making it to be neither the one nor the other, but a contract supported by its own peculiar covenants; and ordaining, that whatever is agreed upon by the parties shall take place, as a contract: and when there is no covenant, which declares, upon whom the loss of the lands shall fall, that then, if the whole estate happen to be destroyed by a torrent, an earthquake, or any other means, the proprietor must be the sufferer; but, if a part only be destroyed, that the loss shall then be borne by the tenant; and this is the law in use.

De forma alicui facienda ab artifice.

§ IV. Item quæritur, si cum aurifice Titius convenerit, ut is ex auro suo certi ponderis certæque formæ annulos ei faceret, et acciperet, (verbi gratiâ,) decem aureos, utrum emptio et venditio, an locatio et conductio contrahi videatur? Cassius ait, materiæ quidem emp-

§ 4. Also, if Titius, should promise a goldsmith ten aurei to make a certain number of rings, of a particular size and weight, and find the gold; it hath been a question, whether such a contract would be a buying and selling, or a letting and hireing. Cassius was of opinion that it would be a buying and selling in regard to the matter, and a letting and hireing in regard to the work; but it is now settled, that it would only amount to emption and vendition. But, if Titius should give his own gold, and agree to pay only for the workmanship, this would certainly be a location and conduction.

Quid præstare debet conductor.

§ V. Conductor omnia secundum legem conductionis facere debet; et, si quid in lege prætermisum fuerat, id ex bono et æquo præstare. Qui pro usu aut vestimentorum, aut argenti, aut jumentorum, mercedem aut dedit aut promisit, ab eo custodia talis desideratur, qualem diligentissimus pater familias suis rebus adhibet; quam si præstiterit, et aliquo casu fortuito eam rem amiserit, de restituenda ea re non tenebitur.

§ 5. The hirer is not only obliged to observe strictly the covenants of the conduction, but is also bound to perform whatever hath been omitted to be inserted, but ought reasonably to be done. And whoever hath given or promised hire for the use of clothes, silver, horses, &c. is bound to take the same care of them, as the most diligent master of a family would take of his own property. But, if the hirer do this, and yet lose the things hired by some fortuitous event, he shall not be answerable for the loss.

De morte conductoris.

§ VI. Mortuo conductore intra tempora conductionis, hæres ejus eodem jure in conductione succedit.

§ 6. If the hirer die before the time of hireing be expired, his heir succeeds to his right, and is intitled to the thing hired, for the remainder of the term.

TITULUS VIGESIMUS-SEXTUS.

DE SOCIETATE.

D. xvii. T. 2. C. iv. T. 37.

Divisio a materia.

SOCIETATEM coire solemus aut totorum bonorum, quam Græci specialiter κοινωνία appellant; aut unius alicujus negotiationis, veluti mancipiorum vendendorum emendorumque, aut olei, aut vini, aut frumenti emendi vendendique.

It is common for persons to enter either into a general partnership, or what the Greeks call a communion of goods; or into a particular partnership, respecting some single species of commerce, as that of buying and selling slaves, oil, wine, or corn.

De partibus lucri et damni.

§ I. Et quidem, si nihil de partibus lucri et damni nominatim convenerit, æquales scilicet partes et in lucro et in damno spectantur; quod si expressæ fuerint partes, hæc servari debent. Nec enim unquam dubium fuit, quin valeat conventio, si duo inter se pacti sint, ut ad unum quidem duæ partes et lucri et damni pertineant, ad alterum tertia.

§ 1. If no express agreement be made by the partners concerning their share of profit and loss; the loss and the profit must be equally divided. But, if an express agreement be made, it must be observed; for it was never yet doubted, but that the covenant would be binding, if two persons should agree, that two shares of the profit and loss should belong to one partner, and that only the third part of both should belong to the other.

De partibus inæqualibus.

§ II. De illâ sanè conventionē quæsitum est, si Titius et Seius inter se pacti sint, ut ad Titium lucri duæ partes pertineant, damni tertia, ad Seium duæ partes damni, lucri tertia, an rata debeat haberi conventio? Quintus Mutius contra naturam societatis talem pactionem esse existimavit, et ob id non esse

§ 2. But it has been questioned, if Titius and Seius should covenant that Titius should receive two parts of the profit, and bear but a third of the loss, and that Seius should bear two parts of the loss, and receive but a third of the profit, whether such an agreement would be binding? Quintus Mutius deemed such ratam habendam : Servius Sulpitius (cujus sententia prævaluit) contra sensit; quia sæpè quorundam ita pretiosa est opera in societate, ut, eos justum sit conditione meliore in societatem admitti. Nam et ita posse coiri societatem non dubitatur, ut alter pecuniam conferat, alter non conferat, et tamen lucrum inter eos commune sit; quia sæpè opera alicujus pro pecunia valet. Et adeò contra Quinti Mutii sententiam obtinuit, ut illud quoque constiterit posse convenire, ut quis lucri partem ferat, de damno non teneatur; quod et ipsum Servius convenienter sibi fieri existimavit. Quod tamen ita intelligi oportet, ut, si in aliâ re lucrum, in aliâ damnum illatum sit, compensatione factâ, solum quod superest, intelligatur lucro esse.

a covenant contrary to the nature of partnership, and therefore ought not to be ratified; but Servius Sulpitius, whose opinion hath prevailed, thought otherwise; because the labour of some is so valuable, that they ought to be admitted into partnership upon advantageous conditions; for no man doubts, but that a partnership may be, wherein one only finds money; inasmuch as it often happens, that the work, and labour of the other, is of equal value. And also, contrary to the opinion of Mutius, it hath obtained as law, that a partner may by agreement take a share of the profit, and not be accountable for any part of the loss; for Servius thought, that, this likewise might be done equitably: but it must be so understood, that, if profit accrue from one species of things, and loss from another, only what remains, after the loss is compensated, shall be considered as profit.

De partibus expressis in una causa.

§ III. Illud expeditum est, si in unâ causâ pars fuerit expressa, (veluti in solo lucro, vel in solo damno,) in alterâ vero omniâ, in eo quoque, quod prætermisum est, eandem partem servari.

§ 3. It is also a settled point, that, if partners expressly mention their shares in one respect only, either solely as to gain, or solely as to loss, their shares of that which is omitted, shall be regulated by what is expressed.

Quibus modis societas solvitur. De renunciatione.

§ IV. Manet autem societas eo usque, donec in eodem consensu perseveraverint: at, cum aliquis renunciaverit societati, solvitur societas. Sed planè si quis callidè in

§ 4. A partnership lasts so long as the partners persevere in their consent so to continue; and, if one of them renounce, the partnership, is dissolved. But, if a man renounce hoc renunciaverit societati, ut obveniens aliquod lucrum solus habeat, veluti, si totorum bonorum socius, cum ab aliquo hæres esset relictus, in hoc renunciaverit societati, ut hæreditatem solus lucri faceret, cogitur hoc lucrum communicare. Si quid verò aliud lucri faciat, quod non captaverit, ad ipsum solum pertinet. Ei verò, cui renunciatum est, quicquid omnino post renunciatem societatem acquiritur, soli conceditur.

with a fraudulent intent, and that he may enjoy the sole benefit of some future fortune, which he expects, his renunciation will not avail: for, if a partner in common, on being appointed heir, should renounce his partnership, that he may possess the inheritance exclusively, he would nevertheless be compelled to divide equally with his former partners; yet, if an inheritance, which he did not expect, should by accident fall to him after renunciation, the whole would be his own: but those, from whom a partner hath separated himself by renouncing, possess solely for themselves whatever they acquire, after the renunciation of that partner.

De morte.

§ V. Solvitur adhuc societas etiam morte socii; quia, qui societatem contrahit, certam personam sibi eligit. Sed et, si consensu plurium societas contracta sit, morte unius socii solvitur, etsi plures supersint; nisi in coeundâ societate aliter convenerit.

§ 5. A partnership is also dissolved by the death of one of the partners; for he, who enters into partnership, always chooses some known person to be his partner. And if a partnership be entered into by the consent of many, it is dissolved by the death of one, although the rest survive; unless the original contract be otherwise.

De fine negotii.

§ VI. Item, si alicujus rei contracta societas sit, et finis negotio impositus est, finitur societas.

§ 6. Also, if a partnership be entered into on account of some particular commerce, when that ceases, the partnership is ended.

De publicatione.

§ VII. Publicatione quoque distrahi societatem, manifestum est, scilicet si universa bona socii publi-

the. partners; for when another takes his place, he is considered as dead.

De cessione bonorum.

§ VIII. Item, si quis ex sociis mole debiti prægravatus bonis suis cesserit, et ideo propter publica et privata debita substantia ejus vaneat, solvitur societas. Sed hoc causa, si adhuc consentiant in societatem, nova videtur incipere societas.

§ 8. Also, when a man in partnership, being pressed by debts, makes a cession of his goods, and they are sold to satisfy either public or private demands, the partnership is dissolved. But, if the rest should still desire to remain partners, the first partnership would not continue, but a new one would commence.

De dolo et culpa a socia præstandis.

§ IX. Socius socio utrum eo nomine tantum teneatur pro socio-actione, si quid dolo commiserit, sicut is, qui deponi apud se passus est, an etiam culpæ, id est, desidie atque negligentie nomine, quesitum est? Prævaluit tamen, etiam culpæ nomine teneri eum. Culpa autem non ad exactissimam diligentiam dirigenda est; sufficit enim talem diligentiam communibus rebus adhibere socium, qualem suis rebus adhibere solet. Nam, qui parum diligentem socium sibi assumit, de se queri, sibi que hoc imputare, debet.

§ 9. It has been a question, whether a partner, like a depositor, is accountable for fraud only, or also for negligence? And it now prevails, that he is answerable for all the damages, which happen through his fault. But though he fail in having used the most exact diligence, such a failure, is not regarded as culpa or a fault: for a partner is not liable to answer damages, if it appear that he has used the same care and diligence in respect of the partnership property as he has usually observed in keeping his own. Whoever chooses a negligent man for his partner, must lay the blame upon himself only, and impute his misfortune to his own ill choice.

TITULUS VIGESIMUS-SEPTIMUS.

DE MANDATO.

D. xvii. T. 1. C. iv. T. 35.

Divisio a fine.

MANDATUM contrahitur quinque modis, sive suâ tantum gratiâ aliquis tibi mandet, sive suâ et tuâ, sive alienâ tantum, sive suâ et alienâ, sive tuâ et alienâ. At, si tuâ tantum gratiâ tibi mandatum sit, supervacuum est mandatum; et ob id nulla ex eo obligatio, nec mandati inter vos actio nascitur.

A mandate is of five kinds; either when it is given solely for the benefit of the mandator; or jointly for his benefit, and that of the mandatary; or solely for the benefit of a third person; or jointly for the benefit of the mandator and a third person; or jointly for the benefit of the mandatary and a third person. But, if a mandate be given solely for the sake of the mandatary, the mandate is useless; for no obligation can arise from it, nor of course any action.

Si mandantis gratia mandetur.

§ I. Mandantis tantum gratiâ intervenit mandatum, veluti si quis tibi mandet, ut negotia ejus geres, vel ut fundum ie emereres, vel ut pro eo sponderes.

§ 1. A mandate is given solely for the benefit of the mandator, when he requires the mandatary to transact his business, to buy lands, or to become his surety.

Si mandantis et mandatarii.

§ II. Tuâ gratiâ et mandantis; veluti si mandet tibi, ut pecuniam sub usuris crederes ei, qui in rem ipsius mutuaretur; aut si, volente te agere cum eo ex fidejussoriâ causâ, mandet tibi, ut, cum reo agas periculo mandantis; vel ut ipsius

§ 2. A mandate is given partly for the benefit of the mandator, and partly for your benefit (the mandatary,) if the mandator require you to lend money upon interest to one who would borrow it for his use; or if, when you are upon the point periculo stipuleris ab eo, quem tibi deleget in id, quod tibi debuerat.

of suing a man on account of a fidejussory caution, or suretyship, he should authorise you at his own risque to sue the principal debtor; or if he should empower you at his own hazard to stipulate for the sum, which he owes you, from some other person, whom he appoints.

Si aliena gratia.

§ III. Alienâ tantum causâ intervenit mandatum; veluti si tibi aliquis mandet, ut Titii negotia gereres, vel ut Titio fundum emereres, vel ut pro Titio sponderes.

§ 3. A mandate is for the sole interest of a third person, when the mandator requires the mandatary to perform some office, to buy lands, or to become bail for that person.

Si mandantis et aliena.

§ IV. Suâ et alienâ; veluti si de communibus suis et Titii negotiis gerendis tibi mandet, vel ut sibi et Titio fundum emereres, vel ut pro eo et Titio sponderes.

§ 4. A mandate is for the joint benefit of the mandator, and a third person, when the mandator requires the mandatary to transact their common business, to buy lands for them both, or to be bound for them.

Si mandatarii et aliena.

§ V. Tuâ et alienâ; veluti si tibi mandet, ut Titio sub usuris crederes; quia, si sinè usuris pecuniam crederes, alienâ tantum gratiâ intercedit mandatum.

§ 5. A mandate is in favour of the mandatary and a third person, when the mandator requires you to lend money to Titius, upon interest; but, if without interest, it can only be in favour of him, to whom it is lent.

Si mandatarii.

§ VI. Tuâ tantum gratiâ intervenit mandatum; veluti si tibi mandet, ut pecunias tuas in emptiones potius prædiorum colloques, quam fœneres; vel ex diverso, ut pecunias tuas fœneres potius, quam in emptiones prædiorum colloques. Cu-

§ 6. A mandate is given solely for your own benefit, if the mandator require you rather to make a purchase of lands, than to lend upon interest; or, on the contrary, rather to lend your money upon interest, than to buy lands. But as jus generis mandatum magis consilium, quam mandatum est, et ob id non est obligatorium; quia nemo ex consilio mandati obligatur, etiam si non expediat ei, cui mandabatur, cum liberum cuique sit apud se explorare, an sibi expediat consilium. Itaque, si otiosam pecuniam domi te habentem hortatus fuerit aliquis, ut rem aliquam emereres, vel eam crederes, quamvis non expediat eam tibi emisse, vel credidisse, non tamen tibi mandati tenetur. Et adeò hæc ita sunt, ut quæsitum sit, an mandati teneatur, qui mandavit tibi, ut pecuniam Titio scenerares. Sed obtinuit Sabini sententia, obligatorium esse in hoc casu mandatum; quia non aliter Titio credidisses, quam si tibi mandatum esset.

this seems rather to be good advice than a mandate, it is not obligatory; for no action of mandate can be brought against a man on account of advice, although it has not proved beneficial to him, to whom it was given; inasmuch as every one is at full liberty to consult his own reason, whether advice given be expedient or not. Therefore, if you should be advised to employ your money, which now lies dead, either by lending it at interest, or in making a purchase, and you shall become a loser by following this advice, the adviser would not be liable to an action. And this is so true, that it has even been a question, whether an action of mandate will lie against him, who hath required you by mandate to lend money to Titius, who is insolvent. But the opinion of Sabinus hath obtained, and a mandate in this case is now judged to be obligatory; for you would never have trusted Titius, but in obedience to the mandate.

De mandato contra bonos mores.

§ VII. Illud quoque mandatum non est obligatorium, quod contra bonos mores est; veluti si Titius de furto, aut de damno faciendo, aut de injuriâ faciendâ mandet tibi; licet enim pœnam istius facti nomine præstiteris, non tamen ullam habes adversus Titium actionem.

§ 7. A mandate contrary to good manners is not obligatory; as if Titius should command you to commit theft, or to do injury to a third person; for, although you should be punished in consequence, you will not be intitled to any action against Titius.

De executione mandati.

§ VIII. Is, qui exequitur mandatum, non debet excedere fines mandati; ut ecce, si quis usque ad

§ 8. He, who executes a mandate ought not to exceed the bounds of it; for example, if a mandator should centum aureos mandaverit tibi, ut fundum emerēs, vel ut pro Titio sponderes, neque pluris emere debes, neque in ampliorem pecuniam fidejuberē; alioqui non habebis cum eo mandati actionem: adeò quidem, ut Sabino et Cassio placuerit, etiamsiusque ad centum aureos cum eo agere volueris, inutiliter te acturum. Sed diversæ scholæ auctores rectè usque ad centum aureos te acturum existimant; quæ sententia sanè benignior est. Quod si minoris emeris, habebis scilicet cum eo mandati actionem; quoniam, qui mandat, ut sibi centum aureorum fundus emeretur, is utique mandasse intelligitur, ut minoris, si possit, emeretur.

require you to purchase lands, or to be bound for Titius, to the amount of an hundred aurei; you ought not to buy the lands at an higher price, or be bound for a greater sum; otherwise, you will not be intitled to an action for the excess. And Cassius and Sabinus were even of opinion, that, although you should bring an action of mandate for no more than the hundred aurei, you could not recover them. But it was held by the lawyers of a different school, that the mandatory might sue the mandator for the hundred aurei; and this appears to be the more equitable opinion. But, if you buy certain lands at a less price than that, which the mandator has allowed, you will undoubtedly be intitled to an action of mandator: for, if he hath ordered, that an estate should be purchased for an hundred aurei, he will certainly be understood, that it should if possible, be purchased at a less price.

De revocatione mandati.

§ 9. A mandate, properly contracted, becomes null, if revoked before any act hath been done in consequence of it.

De morte.

§ X. Item, si adhuc integro mandato mors alterius interveniat id est, vel ejus, qui mandaverit, vel illius, qui mandatum susceperit, solvitur mandatum. Sed utilitatis causâ receptum est, si eo mortuo, qui tibi mandaverat, tu, ignorans cum decessisse, executus fueris

§ 10. A mandate also becomes null, if either the mandator, or the mandatory die, while it continues intire. But expedience has settled, that, if a mandator die, and the mandatory not knowing of his death, should afterwards execute the mandate, he may bring his action against the mandatum, posse te agere mandati actione; alioqui justa et probabilis ignorantia tibi damnum affert. Et huic simile est, quod placuit, si debitores, manumisso dispensatore Titii, per ignorantiam liberti solverint, liberari eos; cum alioqui strictâ juris ratione non possent liberari: quia alii solvisent, quam cui solvere debuerint.

heirs of the mandator: otherwise an unblamable want of knowledge would be prejudicial. And, in a similar case, it hath been determined, that, if the debtors of Titius, whose steward has been manumitted, without their knowledge, should pay this freed-man what was due to Titius, they would be cleared from their debt; although, by the rigour of the law, it would be otherwise; since they had made their payment to another than him to whom it ought to have been made.

De renunciatione.

§ XI. Mandatum non suscipere cuilibet liberum est; susceptum autem consummandum est; aut quam primum renunciandum, ut per semetipsum, aut per alium, eandem rem mandator exequatur. Nam, nisi ita renunciatur, ut integra causâ mandatori reservetur eandem rem explicandi, nihilominus mandati actio locum habet; nisi justa causa intercesserit aut non renunciandi, aut intempestivè renunciandi.

§ 11. Every man is at liberty to refuse a mandate; but once accepted, it must be performed, or renounced, as soon as possible, that the mandator may transact the business himself, or by another. For, if this be not so done that the mandator can have an opportunity of transacting the business properly, an action will lie against the mandatary, unless he can shew good cause for his delay in not making a timely renunciation.

De die et conditione.

§ XII. Mandatum et in diem differi, et sub conditione fieri, potest.

§ 12. A mandate may be put off to a distant day, or performed conditionally, (according to the contract.)

De mercede.

§ XIII. In summâ sciendum est, mandatum, nisi gratuitum sit, in aliam formam negotii cadere: nam, mercede constitutâ, incipit locatio et conducto esse. Et, (ut

§ 13. In fine, it must be observed, that, a mandate not gratuitous, becomes another species of contract; for, if a price be agreed upon, the contract of location and conduction generalitèr dicamus,) quibus casibus, sinè mercede suscepto officio, mandati sivè depositi contrahitur negotium, iis casibus interveniente mercede locatio et conductio intelligitur contrahi. Et ideò, si fulloni polienda curandave quis dederit vestimenta, aut sarcinatori sarcienda, nullâ mercede constitutâ, neque promissâ, mandati competit actio.

commences. And in general, when a trust or business is undertaken without hire, the contract regards either a mandate, or a deposit; but, when there is an agreement for hire, it constitutes location and conduction. Therefore, if a man deliver his clothes to a fuller to be cleaned, or to a tailor to be mended, and there is no agreement or promise made, an action of mandate will lie.

TITULUS VIGESIMUS-OCTAVUS.

DE OBLIGATIONIBUS, QUÆ QUASI EX CONTRACTU NASCUNTUR.

Continuatio.

POST genera contractuum enumerata, dispiciamus etiam de iis obligationibus, quæ quidem non propriè nasci ex contractu intelliguntur; sed tamen, quia non ex maleficio substantiam capiunt, quasi ex contractu nasci videntur.

Having already enumerated the various kinds of direct obligations, we will now treat of those, which cannot properly be said to arise from contract, but yet, as they take not their origin from anything criminal, seem to arise from an implied, or a quasi-contract.

De negotiorum gestione.

§ I. Igitur, cum quis negotia absentis gesserit, ultro citroque inter eos nascuntur actiones, quæ appellantur negotiorum. Sed domino quidem rei gestæ adversus eum, qui gessit, directa competit actio; negotiorum autem gestori contraria; quas ex nullo contractu propriè nasci manifestum est: quippe ita nascuntur istæ actiones, si sinè

§ 1. When one person transacts the business of another, who is absent, they reciprocally obtain a right to certain actions, called actiones negotiorum gestorum; i. e. on account of business done: and it is manifest, that these can arise from no proper or regular contract; for they take place only, when one man assumes the care of the affairs of an-mandato quisque alienis negotiis gerendis se obtulerit; ex qua causa ii, quorum negotia gesta fuerint, etiam ignorantes obligantur. Idque utilitatis causa receptum est, ne abseutium, qui subitâ festinatione coacti, nulli demandata negotiorum suorum administratione, peregrè profecti essent, deserentur negotia; quæ sanè nemo curaturus esset, si de eo, quod quis impendisset, nullam habiturus esset actionem. Sicut autem is, qui utilitèr gessit negotia, dominum habet obligatum negotiorum gestorum, ita et contra iste quoque tenetur, ut administrationis reddat rationem; quo casu ad exactissimam quisque diligentiam compellitur reddere rationem: nec sufficit talem diligentiam adhibere, qualem suis rebus adhibere solet; si modo alius, diligentior eo, commodius administraturus esset negotia.

other without a mandate: and they for whom business is transacted, are thus bound without their knowledge; and this is permitted for the public good, because the business of persons absent in a foreign country, who have not entrusted their affairs to any particular person, would otherwise be totally neglected: for no man would take this care upon himself, if he could not afterwards bring an action to recover what he had expended. But, as the principal is bound to reimburse a careful agent, so is the latter bound to render a just account of his administration to his principal. And an agent, in this case, is obliged to use the most exact diligence; for it will not suffice, that he has taken the same care of the affairs of his principal, which he usually took of his own, if it appear, that a more diligent man could have managed to more advantage.

De tutela.

§ II. Tutores quoque, qui tutelæ judicio tenentur, non propriè ex contractu obligati esse intelliguntur; nullum enim negotium inter tutorem et pupillum contrahitur. Sed, quia sanè non ex maleficio tenentur, quasi ex contractu teneri videntur; hoc autem casu mutuæ sunt actiones. Non tantum enim pupillus cum tutore habet tutelæ actionem; sed et contra tutor cum pupillo habet contrariam tutelæ, si vel impenderit aliquid in rem pupilli, vel pro eo fuerit obligatus,

§ 2. A tutor, although subject to an action of tutelage, is not considered as bound by contract; for between a tutor and his pupil there is none. But as tutors are not subject to an action of mal-feasance, they are understood to be bound by an implied, or quasi-contract; and hence the right of action is reciprocal; the pupil may bring an action of tutelage against his tutor, and a tutor, who has expended his own money in the affairs of his pupil, or has been bound for him, or has mortgaged his own possessions to the creditors, is 'entitled to the action called contraria tutelæ.

De rei communione.

§ III. Item, si inter aliquos communis res sit sinè societate, veluti quod pariter eis legata donatave esset, et alter eorum alteri ideò teneatur communi dividundo judicio, quod solus fractus ex eâ re perceperit, aut quod socius ejus solus in eam rem necessarias impensas fecerit, non intelligitur ex contractu propriè obligatus esse; quippe nihil inter se contraxerunt: sed, quia ex maleficio non tenetur, quasi ex contractu teneri videtur.

§ 3. When property is in common among persons not partners, as when the same field, or part of an inheritance, is devised, or given generally between two; the one may be called to answer the other by the action communi dividundo, either for having taken to his use the whole produce of the ground; or because the other hath been at the sole expence of keeping it in good order. But neither can properly be said to be bound by contract, as they made no agreement between themselves; but, not being criminally liable, they are considered as bound by a quasi-contract.

De hæreditatis communione.

§ IV. Idem juris est de eo, qui cohæredi familiæ eriscundæ judicio ex his causis obligatus est.

§ 4. And the same law prevails as to him, who is bound to his coheir under the action familiæ eriscundæ, for the partition of an universal inheritance.

De additione hæreditatis.

§ V. Hæres quoque legatorum nomine non propriè ex contractu obligatus intelligitur; neque enim cum hærede, neque cum defuncto ullum negotium legatarius gessisse propriè dici potest; et tamen, quia ex maleficio non est obligatus, quasi ex contractu debere intelligitur.

§ 5. An heir for the same reason cannot properly be said to be bound by contract to a legatee, who can not be supposed to have entered into any compact either with the heir, or the deceased: but, as the heir cannot be prosecuted by an action of mal-feasance, he is considered as liable to a quasi-contract.

De solutione indebiti.

§ VI. Item is, cui quis per errorem non debitum solvit, quasi ex contractu debere videtur; adeò enim non intelligitur propriè ex contractu obligatus esse; ut, si certiorum rationem sequamur, magis (ut supra diximus) ex distractu quam ex contractu possit dici obligatus esse: nam, qui solvendi animo pecuniam dat, in hoc dare videtur, ut distrahat potius negotium, quam contrahat. Sed tamen perindè is, qui accepit, obligatur, ac si mutuum ei daretur; et ideò condictione tenetur.

§ 6. He, to whom another has paid by mistake what was not due, appears to be indebted by quasi-contract; for he is certainly not bound by an express agreement: and, strictly speaking, he might rather be said (as we have before observed,) to be bound by the dissolution than by the making of a contract; for he, who paid the money with an intent to discharge his debts, seemed rather inclined to dissolve an engagement, than to contract one. But, whoever receives money by the mistake of another, is as much bound to repayment, as if it had been lent him; and is therefore liable to an action of condiction.

Quibus ex causis indebitum solutum non repetitur.

§ VII. Ex quibusdam tamen causis repeti non potest, quod per errorem non debitum solutum sit; sic namque definierunt veteres, ex quibus causis inficiando lis crescit, ex iis causis non debitum solutum repeti non posse; veluti ex lege Aquilia, item ex legato: quod veteres quidem in iis legatis locum habere voluerunt, quæ certa constituta per damnationem cuique legata fuerant: nostra autem constitutio, cum unam naturam omnibus legatis et fideicommissis indulsit, hujusmodi augmentum in omnibus legatis et fideicommissis extendi voluit: sed non omnibus legatariis hoc præbuit sed tantummodo in iis legatis et fidei commissis, quæ sacrosanctis Ecclesiis, et cæteris venerabilibus lo-

§ 7. In some cases, money paid by mistake, cannot afterwards be demanded; for the ancient lawyers determined, that where an action for double the value of the debt is given upon the denial of it, (as by the law Aquilia, and in the case of legacies) the debtor, who has erroneously made payment to whom it was not due, shall never recover it. But these lawyers would have this rule to take place only in regard to fixed and certain legacies, devised per damnationem. But our constitution, which assigns to legacies and trusts, one common character, hath caused this augmentation in duplum after denial to be extended to legacies and trusts in general: yet the privilege of not refunding cis, quæ vel religionis vel pietatis intuitu honorantur, relicta sunt; quæ, si indebita solvantur, non repetuntur.

what is paid by mistake, is by our constitution only granted to churches and other holy places, which are honoured on account of religion and piety.

TITULUS VIGESIMUS-NONUS.

PER QUAS PERSONAS OBLIGATIO ACQUIRITUR.

C. iv. T. 27.

De his, qui sunt in potestate.

EXPOSITIS generibus obligationum, quæ ex contractu vel quasi ex contractu nascuntur, admonendi sumus, acquiri nobis non solum per nosmetipsos, sed per eas quoque personas, quæ in nostrâ potestate sunt, veluti per servos et filios nostros; ut tamen, quod per servos nostros nobis acquiritur, totum nostrum fiat; quod autem per liberos, quos in potestate habemus, ex obligatione fuerit acquisitum, hoc dividatur secundum imaginem rerum proprietatis, et usufructûs, quam nostra decrevit constitutio: ut, quod ab actione commodum perveniat, hujus usumfructum quidem habeat pater, proprietas autem filio servetur, scilicet patre actionem movente, secundum novellæ nostræ constitutionis divisionem.

Having explained the various kinds of obligations, arising from contracts or quasi-contracts, we must now observe, that we acquire obligations not only by ourselves, but also by persons under our power; as by our slaves, and children. Whatever is acquired by our slaves is wholly our own; but what is acquired by children, under our power, by means of their contracts, must be divided according to our constitution, which gives to the father the usufruct, but reserves the property to the son. But a father, in bringing an action, must act in obedience to our novel constitution.

De bona fide possessis.

§ I. Item per liberos homines et alienos servos, quos bonâ fide possidemus acquiritur nobis; sed tan-tùm ex duabus causis, id est, si quid ex operis suis, vel ex re nostrâ, acquirant.

§ 1. We may also acquire by means of freemen, and the slaves of others, whom we possess bonâ-fide:
but this only in two cases; to wit, when they have gained an acquisition by their labour, or by virtue of something, which belongs to us.

De servo fructuario, vel usuario.

§ II. Per eum quoque servum, in quo usum fructum vel usum habemus, similiter ex duabus istis cau-sis nobis acquiritur.

§ 2. We may always acquire in either of the above named cases, by means even of those slaves, of whom we have only the usufruct or use.

De servo communi.

§ III. Communem servum pro dominicâ parte dominis acquirere certum est excepto eo, quod nomi-natim uni stipulando, aut per traditionem accipiendo, illi soli acquirit; veluti cum ita stipulatur, Titio domino meo dare spondes? Sed, si domini unius jussu servus fuerit stipulatus, licet antea dubitabatur, ta-men post nostram decisionem res expedita est, ut illi tantùm acquirat, qui hoc ei facere jussit, ut supra dictum est.

§ 3. It is certain, that a slave, who is in common between two or more, acquires for his masters, in proportion to their property in him; unless he stipulate, or receive in the name of one of them only; as, do you promise to give such a thing to Titius my master? for although it was a doubt in times past, whether a slave, when commanded, could stipulate for one of his masters; yet, it is now settled by our decision, that a slave may acquire for him only, who hath ordered the stipulation.

TITULUS TRIGESIMUS.

QUIBUS MODIS TOLLITUR OBLIGATIO.

D. iv. T. 2, 3, 4. C. viii. T. 42, 43, 44.

De solutione.

TOLLITUR autem omnis obligatio solutione ejus, quod debetur; vel si quis consentiente creditore aliud pro alio solverit. Nec interest, quis solvat, utrum ipse, qui debet, an alius pro eo; liberatur enim et alio solvente, sive sciente, sive ignorante debitore, vel invito eo solutio fiat. Item, si reus solverit, etiam ii, qui pro eo intervernerunt, liberantur. Idem ex contrario contingit, si fide-jussor solverit; non enim ipse solus liberatur, sed etiam reus.

An obligation is dissolved by the payment of what is due; or by the payment of one thing for another, if the creditor consent; nor is it material whether payment be made by the debtor himself, or by another for him; for the debt is discharged when another has paid it, either with or without the knowledge, or even against the consent of the debtor. So, when a debtor pays his creditors, his sureties are freed: on the other hand when a surety discharges his obligation, he not only becomes free himself, but he discharges the principal debtor also.

De acceptilatione.

§ I. Item per acceptilationem tollitur obligatio: est autem acceptilatio imaginaria solutio: quod enim ex verborum obligatione Titio debetur, id, si velit Titius remittere, poterit sic fieri, ut patiaturs hęc verba debitorem dicere: quod ego tibi promisi, habesne acceptum? et Titius respondeat, habeo. Sed et Græcè potest acceptilatio fieri; dummodo sic fiat, ut Latinis verbis solet; εχεις λαβων δηναρια τοσα εχω λαβων. Quo genere, (ut diximus,) tantum eę solvuntur obligationes, quę ex verbis consistunt, non etiam cęterę. Consentaneum enim visum

§ 1. An obligation is also dissolved by acceptilation or acknowledgment; which is an imaginary payment: for, if Titius be willing to remit what is due to him by a verbal contract, it may be done, if the debtor should say, do you consider what I promised you, as accepted and received? and Titius answer, I do. An acceptilation may also be made in Greek, if it be so worded, as to agree with the Latin form; do you acknowledge to have received so many Denarii? I do. But verbal contracts only are thus dissolved: and it seems proper that an obliga-

est, verbis factam obligationem aliis posse verbis dissolvi. Sed et id, quod aliâ ex causâ debetur, potest in stipulationem deduci, et per acceptilationem dissolvi. Sicut etiam quod debetur pro parte rectè solvitur; ita in parte debiti, acceptilatio fieri potest.

tion, verbally created, may be dissolved by other words of a contrary import. But it is observable, that any species of contract may be reduced to a stipulation, and of course dissolved by acceptilation. As a debt may be paid in part by money, it may be discharged in part also by acceptilation.

De Aquiliana stipulatione et acceptilatione.

§ II. Est autem prodita stipulatio, quæ vulgò Aquilianâ appellatur, per quam contingit, ut omnium rerum obligatio in stipulatum deducatur, et ea per acceptilationem tollatur. Stipulatio enim Aquilianâ renovat omnes obligationes, et à Gallo Aquilio ita composita est. Quicquid te mihi ex quacunque causa dare facere oportet oportebitve, præsens in diemve, aut sub conditione; quarumcunque rerum mihi tecum actio est, quæque adversus te petitio, vel adversus te persecutio, est eritve; quodve tu meum habes, tenes, possides, dolo malo fecisti quo minus possideas; quanti quæque earum rerum res erit, tantam pecuniam dari stipulatus est Aulus Agerius, spondit, Numerius Nigidius. Quod Numerius Nigidius Aulo Agerio spondidit, id haberetne a se acceptum Numerius Nigidius Aulum Agerium rogavit: Aulus Agerius Numerio Nigidio acceptum fecit.

§ 2. There is another species of stipulation, called commonly the Aquilian, by virtue of which every other kind of obligation may be reduced to a stipulation, and may afterwards be dissolved by acceptilation. For the Aquilian stipulation changes all obligations, and was constituted by Gallus Aquilius in the following manner. Do you promise, said Aulus Agerius to Numerius Nigidius, to pay me a sum of money, in lieu of what you was, or shall be, obliged to give me, or to perform for my benefit, either simply, at a day to come, or upon condition; and in lieu of those things, which, being my property, you have, detain, or possess; or of which you have fraudulently quitted the possession; and for which I may, or shall be, intitled to any species of action, plaint, or prosecution; Numerius Nigidius answered, I do: and, when this was said, Numerius Nigidius asked Aulus Agerius, if he acknowledged the money as accepted and received, which he (Numerius) had promised? to which Aulus Agerius answered, that he did so acknowledge it.

De Novatione.

§ III. Præterea, Novatione tollitur obligatio; veluti si id, quod tibi Seius debebat, à Titio stipulatus sis. Nam interventu novæ personæ nova nascitur obligatio, et prima tollitur, translata in posteriorem: adeò ut interdum, licet posterior stipulatio inutilis sit, tamen prima novationis jure tollatur; veluti si id, quod tu Titio debes, à pupillo sinè tutoris auctoritate stipulatus fuerit; quo casu res amittitur: nam et prior debitor liberatur, et posterior obligatio nulla est. Non idem juris est, si à servo quis fuerit stipulatus: nam tunc prior perindè obligatus manet, ac si postea nullus stipulatus fuisset. Sed, si eadem persona sit, à quâ postea stipuleris, ita demum novatio fit, si quid in posteriore stipulatione novi sit; fortè si conditio aut dies aut fidejussor adjiciatur aut detrahatur. Quod autem diximus, si conditio adjiciatur, novationem fieri, sic intelligi oportet, ut ita dicamus factam novationem, si conditio extiterit; alioqui, si defecerit, durat prior obligatio. Sed, cum hoc quidem inter veteres constabat, tunc fieri novationem, cum novandi animo in secundam obligationem itum fuerat, per hoc autem dubium erat, quando novandi animo vitetur hoc fieri, et quasdam de hoc præsumptiones alii in aliis casibus introducebant, idè nostra processit constitutio, quæ apertissimè definivit, tunc solum novationem prioris ob-

§ 3. An obligation is also dissolved by novation; as when you stipulate with Titius to receive from him what is due to you from Seius. For, by the intervention of a new debtor, a fresh obligation arises, by which the former is discharged, and transferred to the latter. Sometimes, although the latter be of no force, yet the prior contract is discharged by the mere act of novation: as if Titius should stipulate to receive what I owe him, from a pupil without authority of his tutor; here the debt is lost, because the first debtor is freed, and the second obligation is void: but it is not so if a man contract by stipulation with a slave, (intending a novation;) for then the first debtor remains bound, as if there had been no second stipulation. And, if you stipulate from the same person a second time, a novation arises, if any thing new be contained in the latter stipulation; as a condition, a day, or a bondsman added, or taken away. But when a condition only is added, novation does not take place, till the event happen; and, till then, the prior obligation continues. The ancient lawyers held that a novation arose, when a second contract was intended to dissolve a former; but it was always difficult to know with what intent the second obligation was made; and for want of positive proof, ligationis fieri, quoties hoc ipsum inter contrahentes expressum fuerit, quod propter novationem prioris obligationis convenerunt; alioqui et manere pristinam obligationem, et secundam ei accedere, ut maneat ex utrâque causâ obligatio, secundum nostræ constitutionis definitionem, quam licet ex ipsius lectione apertius cognoscere.

opinions were founded on presumptions, arising from the circumstances of each case. This uncertainty gave rise to our constitution, which enacts that a novation of a former contract shall only take place, when it is expressed by the contractors, that they covenanted with this intent; otherwise the first contract shall continue valid, and the second be regarded as an accession to it; so that an obligation may remain under both contracts, as may be better known by perusing our constitution on this subject.

De contrario consensu.

§ IV. Hoc amplius, eæ obligationes, quæ consensu contrahuntur, contrariâ voluntate dissolvuntur. Nam, si Titius et Seius inter se consenserint, ut fundum Tusculanum emptum Seius haberet centum aureis, deinde, re nondum secutâ, (id est, neque pretio soluto; neque fundo tradito,) placuerit inter eos, ut discederetur ab eâ emptione et venditione, invicem liberantur. Idem est in conductione et locatione, et in omnibus contractibus, qui ex consensu decedunt, sicut jam dictum est.

§ 4. Farther, obligations contracted by consent, may be dissolved by dissent. For, if Titius and Seius have agreed that Seius shall have a certain estate for an hundred aurei, and afterwards before execution, that is, before payment, or livery of the land, the parties dissent from their agreement, they are mutually discharged. The same may be said of location and conduction, and of all other contracts, which arise from consent.

INSTITUTIONUM

LIBER QUARTUS.

---

TITULUS PRIMUS.

DE OBLIGATIONIBUS, QUÆ, EX DELICTO NASCUNTUR.

D. xlvii. T. 2. C. vi. T. 2.

Continuatio et divisio obligationum ex delicto.

CUM sit expositum superiore libro de obligationibus ex contractu et quasi ex contractu, sequitur, ut de obligationibus ex maleficio et quasi ex maleficio dispiciamus. Sed illæ quidem, ut suo loco tradidimus, in quatuor genera dividuntur; hæ vero unius generis sunt: nam omnes ex re nascuntur, id est, ex ipso maleficio; veluti ex furto, rapinâ, damno, injuriâ.

Having explained in the preceding book the nature of obligations, which arise from contracts and quasi-contracts, it follows, that we should here treat of those, which arise from male-feasance and quasi-male-feasance. The former, as we have shewn in the proper place, are divided into four species; but the latter are of one kind only; for they all arise ex re, that is, from the crime or male-feasance itself; as from theft, rapine, damage, injury.

Definitio furti.

§ I. Furtum est contrectatio fraudulosa, lucri faciendi gratiâ, vel ipsius rei, vel etiam usûs ejus, possessionisve: quod lege naturali prohibitum est admittere.

§ 1. Theft, is the taking, using, or possessing any thing by fraud for the sake of gain. And this is prohibited by the law of nature.

Etymologia.

§ II. Furtum autem vel à furvo, id est, nigro, dictum est, quod clàm et obscurè fiat, vel plerùmque nocte: vel à fraude: vel à ferendo, id est, auferendo: vel à Græco sermone, quod φωρας appellant fures: imo et Græci, ἀπο τῆ φερειν, φωρας dixerint.

§ 2. The word furtum [theft] is derived from furvum; [black or dark;] because theft is committed privately, and generally in the night:—or from fraus [fraud]:—or from ferendo, i. e. (auferendo) and denotes a subtraction, or taking away. Or perhaps from the Greek; for the Greeks call fures, φωρας from φερειν, to take away.

Divisio.

§ III. Furtorum autem duo sunt genera; manifestum et nec manifestum: nam conceptum et oblatum species potius actionis sunt furto cohærentes, quam genera furtorum, sicut inferius apparebit. Manifestus fur est, quem Græci ἐπ' αὐτοφωρῶ appellant: nec solùm is, qui in ipso furto deprehenditur, sed etiam is, qui eo loco deprehenditur, quo furtum fit; veluti qui in domo furtum fecit, et, nondùm egressus januam, deprehensus fuerit: et qui in oliveto olivarum, aut in vineto uvarum, furtum, fecit, quamdiu in eo oliveto aut vineto deprehensus fuerit. Imò ulterius furtum manifestum est extendendum, quamdiu eam rem fur tenens visus vel deprehensus fuerit, sive in publico, sive in privato, vel à domino, vel ab alio, antequam eo pervenerit, quo deferre vel deponere destinasset. Sed, si pertulit, quo destinavit, tametsi deprehendatur cum re furtivâ, non est manifestus fur. Nec manifestum furtum quid sit, ex iis, quæ diximus, intelligitur; nam quod manifestum

§ 2. Of theft there are two kinds, manifest and not manifest: for the thefts, called conceptum and oblatum, rather denote the kind of action connected with theft, than the kind of theft; as will appear in the next paragraph. A manifest thief, whom the Greeks call ἐπ' αὐτοφωρῶ, is he, who is taken in the act of thieving, or in the place, where he committed it; as if a man, having committed a theft within a house, should be apprehended before he had passed the outward door: or, having stolen grapes or olives, should be taken in the vineyard or olive orchard. Manifest theft is also farther extended: for, if the thief be apprehended, while seen in possession of the thing stolen, or if he be taken in public or in private, by the owner or by a stranger, at any time before his arrival at the place, to which he proposed to carry it, he is guilty of a manifest theft. But if he actually arrive, before apprehension, at the place proposed, then, although the thing stolen be found upon him, he is not a manifest thief. By this de-non est, id scilicet nec manifestum est.

scription of manifest theft, may be understood what is theft not manifest.

De furto concepto, oblato, prohibito, non exhibito.

§ IV. Conceptum furtum dicitur, cum apud aliquem, testibus præsentibus, furtiva res quæsitæ et inventa sit: nam in eum propria actio constituta est, quamvis fur non sit; quæ appellatur concepti. Oblatum furtum dicitur, cum res furtiva ab aliquo tibi oblata sit, eaque apud te concepta sit; utique si eâ mente tibi data fuerit, ut apud te potius, quam apud eum, qui dedit, conciperetur: nam tibi, apud quem concepta sit, propria adversus eum, qui obtulit, quamvis fur non sit, constituta est actio, quæ appellatur oblato. Est etiam prohibiti furti actio, adversus eum, qui furtum quærere testibus præsentibus volentem prohibuerit. Præterea pœna constituitur edicto prætoris per actionem furti non exhibiti adversus eum, qui furtivam rem apud se quæsitam et inventam non exhibuit. Sed hæ actiones, scilicet concepti, et oblato, et furti prohibiti, nec non furti non exhibiti, in desuetudinem abierunt. Cum enim requisitio rei furtivæ hodie secundum veterem observationem non fiat, meritò ex consequentiâ, etiam præfatæ actiones ab usu communi recesserunt; cum manifestum sit, quod omnes, qui scientes rem furtivam susceperint, et celaverint, furti nec manifesti obnoxii sunt.

§ 4. A theft is called conceptum [i. e. found] when a thing stolen is searched for and found upon some person in the presence of witnesses; and a particular action, called actio concepti, lies against such possessor, although he did not commit the theft. A theft is called oblato, [i. e. offered,] when a thing stolen is offered to Titius, and found upon him, it having been given to him by Seius, with intent that it might rather be found upon Titius than upon himself: and in this case a special action, called actio oblato, may be brought by Titius against Seius, although Seius was not guilty of the theft. The action, called prohibiti furti, also lies against him, who prevents another from inquiring of theft in the presence of witnesses. And farther, a penalty was appointed by prætorian edict to be sued by the action furti non exhibiti against any man for not having produced things stolen, which upon search were found to have been in his possession. But these four actions are become quite obsolete; for, since a search after things stolen is not now made according to ancient formalities, these actions have in consequence ceased to be in use; for it is a settled point, that all, who knowingly have received and concealed a thing stolen, are subject to the penalty of theft not manifest.

Pœna.

§ V. Pœna manifesti furti quadrupli est, tam ex servi, quam ex liberi personâ; nec manifesti, dupli.

§ 5. The penalty of committing manifest theft, is quadruple, whether the thief be bond or free; the penalty of theft not manifest, is double the value of the thing stolen.

Quomodo furtum fit; de contrectatione.

§ VI. Furtum autem fit, non solum cum quis intercipiendi causâ rem alienam amovet; sed generaliter, cum quis alienam rem, invito domino, contrectat. Itaque sive creditor pignore, sive is, apud quem res deposita est, eâ re utatur; sive is, qui rem utendam accepit, in alium usum eam transferat, quam cuius gratiâ ei data est, furtum committit; veluti, si quis argentum utendum accepit, quasi amicos ad cœnam invitaturus, et id peregrè secum tulerit; aut si quis equum, gestandi causâ commodatum sibi, longius aliquo duxerit: quod veteres scripserunt de eo, qui in aciem equum perduxisset.

§ 6. Theft is committed not only, when one man removes the property of another to appropriate it to himself, but also generally, when one man uses the property of another against the will of the proprietor; thus, if a creditor uses a pledge, or a depositary the deposit left with him, or if he who hath only the use of a thing for a special purpose, converts it to other uses, a theft is committed. If any one borrows plate under pretence of using it at an entertainment of his friends, and then carries it away to a foreign country—or borrows a horse, and rides it farther than he ought, theft is also committed: and the ancients extended this to him, who rides a borrowed horse into a field of battle.

De affectu furandi.

§ VII. Placuit tamen, eos, qui rebus commodatis aliter uterentur, quam utendas acceperint, ita furtum committere, si se intelligant id, invito domino, facere; eumque, si intellexisset, non permissurum: at, si permissurum credant, extra crimen videri, optimâ sanè distinctione;

§ 7. But it hath been adjudged, that whoever applies a thing borrowed to other uses than those for which he borrowed it, is not guilty of theft, unless the borrower knew, that he so applied it contrary to the will of the owner, who would not have permitted such application, if quia furtum sine affectu furandi non committitur.

he had been apprized of it. But it should seem, that the borrower is not guilty, if it appear, that he relied on the owner's consent. And this is a good distinction; for a theft can never be committed, unless there appear to have been an intention of stealing.

De voluntate domini.

§ VIII. Sed et, si credat aliquis, invito domino, se rem commodatam sibi contrectare, domino autem volente id fiat, dicitur furtum non fieri. Unde illud quæsitum est, cum Titius servum Mævii sollicitaverit, ut quasdam res domino surriperet, et ad eam perferret, et servus id ad dominum pertulerit; Mævius autem, dum vult Titium in ipso delicto deprehendere, permissit servo quasdam res ad eum perferre; utrum furti, an servi corrupti, judicio teneatur Titius, an neutro? Et cum nobis super hac dubitatione suggestum est, et antiquorum prudentium super hoc altercationes perspeximus, quibusdam neque furti, neque servi corrupti, actionem præstantibus, quibusdam furti tantummodo, nos, hujusmodi calliditati obviam euntes, per nostram constitutionem sancimus, non solum furti actionem, sed et servi corrupti contra eum dari. Licet enim is servus deterior à sollicitatore minimè factus est, et ideo non concurrant regulæ, quæ servi corrupti actionem introducunt; tamen consilium corruptoris ad perniciem probitatis servi introductum est, ut sit ei pœnalis

§ 8. But, if a man use a thing borrowed against the will of the owner, as he believes, but who in reality consents that it should be so used, theft is not committed; hence arises a question on the following case. Titius solicited the slave of Mævius to rob his master, and to bring him the things stolen; of this the slave informs his master, who, being desirous of catching Titius in the fact, permitted the slave to carry certain things to Titius, as stolen; will Titius be subject to an action of theft, or to an action for having corrupted a slave, or to neither? When this was proposed to us as a matter of doubt, and we examined the altercations of ancient lawyers upon the point, some of them allowing of neither of the before-named actions, and others allowing an action of theft only, we, being willing to obviate all subtilities, decreed that not only an action of theft might be brought, but also the action servi corrupti, which lies for having corrupted a slave. For although the slave became not the worse for the solicitation, and therefore the causes, which introduce the actio imposita, tanquam si re ipsâ fuisset servus corruptus; ne ex huiusmodi impunitate et in alium servum, qui faciliè possit corrumpi, tale facinus à quibusdam perpetretur.

action servi corrupti, do not concur; yet inasmuch as such solicitation was intended to corrupt, it hath therefore pleased us, that a penal action shall lie against the party soliciting, in the same manner as if he had actually succeeded by corrupting the slave; lest impunity might encourage evil-disposed persons to make the same attempt upon other slaves, who might be more easily corrupted.

Quarum rerum furtum fit. De liberis hominibus.

§ IX. Interdùm etiam liberorum hominum furtum fit; veluti si quis liberorum nostrorum, qui in potestate nostrâ sunt, surreptus fuerit.

§ 9. A theft may be committed even of free persons; as, for instance, when children who are under power, are surreptitiously taken from their parents.

De re propria.

§ X. Aliquando etiam suæ rei furtum quis committit; veluti si debitor rem, quam creditori pignoris causa dedit, subtraxerit.

§ 10. A man may also commit a theft of his own property; as when a debtor takes away the pledge left with his creditor.

Qui tenentur furti. De eo, cujus ope, consilio, furtum factum est.

§ XI. Interdùm quoque furti tenetur, qui ipse furtum non fecit; qualis est is, cujus ope et consilio furtum factum est. In quo numero est, qui tibi nummos excussit, ut alius eos raperet; aut tibi obstiterit, ut alius rem tuam exciperit; aut oves tuas, vel boves fugaverit, ut alius eas acciperet. Et hoc peteres scripserunt de eo, qui panno rubro fugavit armentum. Sed, si quid eorum per lasciviam, et non datâ operâ, ut furtum admitteretur, factum est, in factum actio dari debet.

§ 11. An action of theft will, in some cases, lie against persons who did not actually commit the theft: as against those, by whose aid and advice the theft was committed: whoever strikes money out of your hand, to the intent that another may pick it up; or so obstructs you, as to enable his accomplice to take your sheep, oxen, or any part of your property, must be regarded as an aider and adviser. The ancient lawyers also included him in this number, who frightened away a herd from its pasture with a red cloth. But, if a man should do any of these acts wantonly, without intention of thieving, then an action can only lie in factum; i. e. upon the case, or the fact done: but, when Titius commits theft by the aid of Mævius, they are both subject to an action of theft. Theft seems to be committed both by aid and advice, when a man puts a ladder to a window, or breaks open a door or window, to the intent, that another may commit theft; or when one man lends another iron bars, or ladders, knowing the bad purposes to which they are to be applied. But it is certain, that he, who hath afforded no actual assistance, but hath only given his council by advising the crime, is not liable to an action of theft.

At, ubi ope Mævii Titius furtum fecerit, ambo furti tenentur. Ope et consilio ejus quoque furtum admitti videtur, qui scalas forte fenestris supponit, aut ipsas fenestras vel ostium effringit, ut aliis furtum faceret; quive ferramenta ad effringendum, aut scelas, ut fenestris supponerentur, commodaverit. Certè, qui nullam opem ad furtum faciendum adhibuit, sed tantum consilium dedit, atque hortatus est ad furtum faciendum, non tenetur furti.

De his, qui sunt in potestate. Et de ope ac consilio extranei.

§ XII. Hi, qui in parentum vel dominorum potestate sunt, si rem eis surripiunt, furtum quidem faciunt, et res in furtivam causam cadit; nec ob id ab ullo usucapi potest, antequam in domini potestatem revertatur: sed furti actio non nascitur; quia nec ex aliâ ullâ causâ potest inter eos actio nasci. Si verò ope et consilio alterius furtum factum fuerit, quia utique furtum committitur, convenienter ille furti tenetur; quia verum est, ope et consilio ejus furtum factum esse.

§ 12. When persons under the power of parents or masters take from them anything surreptitiously, it is considered that a theft is committed; so that it cannot be prescribed to, by any one, until it hath first reverted into the power of the owner; and yet an action of theft will not lie; for no action lies between parents and children, or masters and slaves. But if the fact were done by the aid and advice of any other, inasmuch as a theft is committed, an action of theft will lie against the accessary.

Quibus datur actio furti.

§ XIII. Furti autem actio ei competit, cujus interest rem salvam esse, licet dominus non sit: itaque nec domino aliter competit, quam si ejus intersit, rem non perire.

§ 13. An action of theft may be brought by any man, who has an interest in the safety of the thing stolen, although he be not the proprietor; and the proprietor himself can have no action, unless he have an interest.

De pignore surrepto creditori.

§ XIV. Unde constat creditorem de pignore surrepto furti actione agere posse, etiamsi idoneum debitorem habeat; quia expedit ei pignori potius incumbere, quam in personam agere; adeo quidem ut, quamvis ipse debitor eam rem surripuerit, nihilominus creditori competat actio furti.

§ 14. Hence, a creditor may bring this action for a pledge stolen, although his debtor be solvent; because it may be more expedient for him to rely upon his pledge, than to bring suit against his debtor; and, although the debtor himself should have purloined the pledge, yet an action of theft will lie against him.

De re fulloni, vel sarcinatori, vel bonæ fidei emptori, surrepta.

§ XV. Item si fullo polienda curandave, aut sarcinator sarcienda, vestimenta mercede certâ constitutâ acceperit, eaque furto amiserit, ipse furti habet actionem, non dominus; quia domini nihil interest, eam rem non perire; cum judicio locati à fullo, aut sarcinatore, rem suam persequi possit. Sed et bonæ fidei emptori surreptâ re, quam emerit, quamvis dominus non sit, omnino competit furti actio, quemadmodum et creditori. Fulloni verò et sarcinatori non aliter furti actionem competer placuit, quam si solvendo fuerint; hoc est, si domino sei æstimationem solvere possint. Nam, si solvendo non sint, tunc, quia ab eis suum consequi non possit, ipsi domino furti competit ac-

§ 15. A fuller who receives clothes to clean, which are stolen from him, may bring an action of theft, but not the owner; for the owner is not considered as interested in their safety, having a right of action, called locati against the fuller. But, if a thing be stolen from a bonâ fide purchaser, he is intitled, like a creditor, to an action of theft, although he be not the proprietor. But an action of theft is not maintainable by the fuller, or any tradesman in similar circumstances, unless he be solvent; that is, unless he be able to pay the owner the full value of the thing lost: for, if the fuller be insolvent, then the owner, who cannot recover from the fuller, is allowed to bring an action of theft, tio; quia hoc causa ipsius interest, rem salvam esse. Idem est, etsi in parte solvendo fuerit fullo aut sarcinator.

having in this case an interest. And this although the tradesman be partially solvent.

De re commodata.

§ XVI. Quæ de fullone et sarcinatore diximus, eadem et ad eum, cui commodata res est, transferenda, veteres existimabant. Nam ut ille fullo, mercedem accipiendo, custodiam præstat, ita is quoque, qui commodatum utendi causâ accepit, similiter necesse habet custodiam præstare. Sed nostra providentia etiam hoc in nostris decisionibus emendavit, ut in domini voluntate sit, sive comodati actionem adversus eum, qui rem commodatum accepit, movere desiderat, sive furti adversus eum, qui rem surripuit; et, alterutrâ earum electâ, dominum non posse ex pœnitentiâ ad alteram venire actionem: sed, si quidem furem eligeret, illum, qui rem utendam accepit, penitus liberari; sin autem commodator veniat adversus eum, qui rem utendam accepit, ipsi quidem nullo modo competere posse adversus furem furti actionem; eum autem, qui pro re commodata convenitur, posse adversus furem furti habere actionem; ita tamen, si dominus, sciens rem esse surreptam, adversus eum, cui res commodata fuerit, pervenit. Sin autem nescius et dubitans, rem esse surreptam, apud eum comodati actionem instituerit: postea autem, re comper-tâ, voluerit remittere quidem com-

§ 16. The ancients were of opinion, that what we have said of a tradesman is equally applicable to a borrower. For as the fuller, by agreeing for a certain price, is obliged to answer for the clothes committed to his care, so is he who receives a loan for the sake of using it, under the like necessity of preserving it. But we have amended the law in this point by our decisions, so that it is now at the will of the owners either to bring an action of theft against the thief, or an action on account of the thing lent, against the borrower. But, if the owner once made an election, he cannot afterwards have recourse to the other remedy; if he prosecutes the thief, the borrower is discharged; if he brings suit against the borrower, he cannot sue the thief. But the borrower, who is sued on account of the thing lent, may bring an action of theft against the thief, if the owner suing were apprized, that the thing was stolen; but, if the owner, either not knowing or doubting of the theft, institute an action of loan against the borrower, and afterwards upon information is willing to withdraw it, and recur to an action of theft, he shall have liberty, in consideration of his incertainty, to prosecute modati actionem, ad furti autem actionem pervenire, tunc licentia ei concedatur et adversus furem venire, obstaculo nullo ei opponendo; quoniam incertus constitutus movit adversus eum, qui rem utendam accepit, commodati actionem; nisi domino ab eo satisfactum fuerit: tunc etenim omnino furem à domino quidem furti actione liberari; suppositum autem esse ei, qui pro re sibi commodatâ domino satisfecit; cum manifestissimum sit, etiamsi ab initio dominus actionem commodati instituerit, ignarus rem esse surreptam, postea huiusmodi, hoc ei cognito, adversus furem transierit, omnino liberari cum, qui rem commodatam acceperit, quemcunque cuasæ exitum dominus adversus furem habuerit: eadem definitione obtinente, sive in parte, sive in solidum solvendo sit is, qui rem commodatam acceperit.

the thief without obstacle, if the borrower has not satisfied his demand; but if he has, then the thief is freed from any action of theft by the owner and remains subject to prosecution of the borrower, who hath satisfied the owner. But it is most manifest, that if the owner of any particular thing not knowing, that it is stolen, should at first institute an action of loan against the borrower, but should afterwards, upon better information, choose to pursue the thief by an action of theft, the borrower is secure, whatever may be the issue of the action brought against the thief. And this is law, whether the borrower be able to answer the whole, or a part only, of the value of the thing.

De re deposita.

§ XVII. Sed is, apud quem res deposita est, custodiam non præstat; sed tantum in eo obnoxius est, si quid ipse dolo malo facerit; quæ de causâ, si res ei surrepta fuerit, quia restituendæ ejus rei nomine depositi, non tenetur, nec ob id ejus interest rem salvam esse, furti agere non potest: sed furti actio domino competit.

§ 17. A depositary is not obliged to make good the deposited, unless he be himself guilty of some fraud; and therefore, as he is not obliged to make restitution, when the deposit is stolen, and has consequently no interest in the preservation of it, he cannot bring an action of theft, which in this case can only be maintained by the owner.

An impubes furti teneatur.

§ XVIII. In summâ sciendum est, quæsitum esse, an impubes rem alienam amovendo furtum faciat?

§ 18. It hath been a question whether a person within puberty, taking away the property of another

Et placuit, quia furtum ex effectu furandi consistit, ita demùm obligari eo crimine impuberem, si proximus pubertati sit, et ob id intelligat se delinquere.

can be guilty of theft? And it hath been determined, that as theft consists in the intention of defrauding, a person approaching to puberty and sensible of doing wrong, may be charged with theft.

Quid veniat in hanc actionem; et de affinibus actionibus.

§ XIX. Furti actio, sive dupli, sive quadrupli, tantum ad pœnæ persecutionem pertinet: nam ipsius rei persecutionem extrinsecus habet dominus, quam aut vindicando aut condicendo potest auferre. Sed rei vindicatio quidem adversus possessorem est, sive fur ipse possidet, sive alius quilibet; condictio autem adversus furem ipsum, hæredemve ejus, licet non possideat, competit.

§ 19. An action of theft can only be brought for the penalty, whether double or quadruple: for the owner may recover the thing itself, either by vindication or condictio. An action of vindication may be brought either against the thief or any other in possession; but condictio is maintainable only against the thief himself, or his heir; and it will lie against either of them, whether in possession of the thing stolen, or not.

TITULUS SECUNDUS.

DE VI BONORUM RAPTORUM.

D. xlvii. T. 8. C. ix. T. 33.

Origo hujus actionis, et quid in eam veniat.

QUI vi res alienas rapit, tenetur quidem etiam furti; (quis enim magis alienam rem, invito domino, contrectat, quam qui vi rapit? ideoque rectè dictum est, eum improbum furem esse;) sed tamen propriam actionem ejus delicti nomine prætor introduxit, quæ appellatur vi bonorum raptorum; et est intra annum quadrupli, post annum sim-

He who takes the property of another by force, is liable to an action of theft; [for who can be said to take the property of another more against his will, than he, who takes it by force? it is therefore rightly observed, that he is a thief of the worst kind:] the prætor however, hath introduced a peculiar action in this case, called vi bonorum raptorum.

pli; quæ actio utilis est, etiamsi quis unam rem, licet minimam, rapuerit. Quadruplum autem non totum poena est, sicut in actione furti manifesti diximus; sed in quadruplo inest et rei persecutio; ut poena tripli sit, sive comprehendatur raptor in ipso delicto, sive non. Ridiculum enim esset, levioris conditionis esse eum, qui vi rapit, quam qui clam amovet.

rum; which, if brought within a year after the robbery, enforces the payment of the quadruple value of the thing taken; but, if brought after the expiration of a year, then the simple value only is claimable; and this action may be brought for any single thing, though of the smallest value, if taken by force. But the quadruple value is not altogether penalty, as in an action of manifest theft; for the thing itself is included, so that, strictly, the penalty is only threefold; but then it is inflicted without distinguishing whether the robber was, or was not taken in the actual commission of the fact. For it would be ridiculous, that a robber, who uses force, should be in a better condition, than he, who is only guilty of clandestine theft.

Adversus quos datur.

§ I. Ita tamen competit hæc actio, si dolo malo quis rapuerit; nam, qui aliquo errore ductus, rem suam esse existimans, et imprudens juris, eo animo rapuerit, quasi domino liceat etiam per vim rem suam auferre à possessoribus, absolvi debet: cui scilicet conveniens est, nec furti teneri eum, qui eodem hoc animo rapuit. Sed, ne, dum talia excogitantur, inveniatur via, per quam raptores impune suam exerceant avaritiam, melius divalibus constitutionibus pro hac parte prospectum est, ut nemini liceat vi rapere vel rem mobilem, vel se moventem, licet suam eandem rem existimet. Sed, si quis contra sta-

§ 1. This action is maintainable also on the ground of fraud: but if a man, ignorant of the law and erroneously deeming some particular thing to be his own, should take it away by force from the possessor, upon full persuasion that he, as proprietor, could justify such a proceeding, he ought to be acquitted upon this action: neither is he subject, under these circumstances, to an action of theft. But, lest robbers should from hence find out a way of practising their villanies with impunity, it is provided by the imperial constitutions, that no man shall take by force any moveable thing, or living creature, although he believe it to be his own; and that, whoever offends by forcibly seizing his own property, shall forfeit it; and that, whoever forcibly takes the property of another, imagining it to be his own, shall be obliged not only to restore the thing itself, but also to pay the value of it as a penalty. And the emperors have thought proper, that this should obtain, not only as to things moveable and moving, which may be carried away, but also as to invasions or forcible entries, made upon things immovable, as lands or houses, that mankind may be deterred from committing any species of rapine.

tuta principum fecerit, rei quidem suæ dominio cadere; sin autem aliena res sit, post restitutionem ejus, etiam æstimationem ejusdem rei præstare. Quod non solum in mobilibus rebus, quæ rapi possunt, constitutiones obtinere censuerunt, sed etiam in invasionibus, quæ circa res soli fiunt; ut, ex hac causâ, ab omni rapinâ homines abstineant.

Quibus datur.

§ II. Sanè in hac actione non utique expectatur rem in bonis actoris esse; nam, sive in bonis sit, sive non, si tamen ex bonis sit, locum hæc actio habebit. Quare sive locata, sive commodata, sive etiam pignorata, sive deposita, sit res apud Titium sic, ut intersit ejus, eam rem per vim non auferri, (veluti si in depositâ re culpam quoque promisit,) sive bonâ fide possideat, sive usumfructum quis habeat in eâ, vel quid aliud juris, ut intersit ejus non rapi, dicendum est, ei competere hanc actionem, non ut dominium accipiat, sed illud solum, quod ex bonis ejus, qui rapinam passus est, id est, quod ex substantiâ ejus ablatum esse proponatur. Et generaliter dicendum est, ex quibus causis furti actio competit in re clam factâ, ex iisdem causis omnes hanc habere actionem.

§ 2. In this action, it is not considered, whether the thing forcibly taken be the property of the complainant or not; for if he have an interest in it, the action is maintainable: and therefore, if a thing be let, lent, pledged, or deposited, so that the possessor becomes interested in the preservation of it, as he may be, if he has made himself answerable for the deposit; or, if he was a bonâ fide possessor, or intitled to the usufruct, or has any other right, which gives an interest, he may bring this action, not for the recovery of the absolute property, but of that only, to which his interest extends. And we may in general affirm, that the same causes, which intitle a man to an action of theft in case of private stealing, will also intitle him to the action vi bonorum raptorum, when force hath been used.

TITULUS TERTIUS.

DE LEGE AQUILIA.

D. ix. T. 2. C. iii. T. 35.

Summa. Caput primum.

DAMNI injuriæ actio constituitur per legem Aquiliam; cujus primo capite cautum est, ut si quis alienum hominem, alienamve quadrupedem, quæ pecudum numero sit, injuriâ occiderit, quanti ea res in eo amo plurimi fuerit, tantum domino dare damnetur.

The action for injurious damage is given by the law Aquila; which enacts, in the first chapter, that, if any man injuriously kills the slave, or the four-footed beast of another, which may be reckoned among his cattle, he shall be condemned to pay the owner the greatest price, which the slave or beast might have been sold for, at any time within a year preceding.

De quadrupede, quæ pecudum numero est.

§ I. Quod autem non præcisè de quadrupede, sed de eâ tantum, quæ pecudum numero est, cavetur, eo pertinet, ut neque de feris bestiis, neque de canibus, cautum esse intelligamus; sed de iis tantum, quæ gregatim propriè pasci dicuntur; quales sunt equi, muli, asini, oves, boves, capræ. De suibus quoque idem placuit. Nam et sues quoque pecudum appellatione continentur; quia et hi gregatim pascuntur. Sic denique et Homerus in Odysseâ ait; (sicût Ælius Marcianus in suis institutionibus refert.)

Ἀγὼς τὸν γὰρ σὺν σσοὶ ὠαρημένον αἰ δὲ νεμόνται Παρ Κοράκος ὠστρη, ἐπὶ τῇ κρηνῇ Ἀρεθυσῇ.

§ 1. As the law does not speak of four-footed beasts in general, but only of cattle, we may collect, that wild beasts and dogs do not come within the intendment, which can be understood to include only those animals, which feed in herds; as horses, mules, sheep, oxen, goats, &c. It hath also been determined, that swine are comprised under the term cattle, because they feed in herds; and this Homer testifies in the Odyssey, for which he is quoted by Ælius Marcian in his institutions.

You will find him taking care of the swine, which feed in herds near the Corasian rock, &c. Odys. b. 13.

Hoc est,

*Assidet is suibus, quarum grex magnus in agris
Pascitur, ad Coracis saxum, fontemque Arethusam.*

De injuria.

§ II. Injuriâ autem occidere intelligitur, qui nullo jure occidit: itaque, qui latronem insidiatorem occidit, non tenentur; utique si aliter periculum effugere non potest.

§ 2. A man who kills another without proper authority, is understood to kill him injuriously; but he is not subject to the law, who kills a robber lying in wait if there was no other way of avoiding the danger threatened.

De casu, dolo, et culpa.

§ III. Ac ne is quidem hac lege tenetur, qui casu occidit, si modo culpa ejus nulla inveniatur. Nam alioqui non minus ex dolo, quam ex culpâ, quisque hac lege tenetur.

§ 3. Nor is he liable under this law who hath killed another by accident if no fault can be imputed to him. But the law holds a man equally liable for negligence or fraud.

De jaculatione.

§ IV. Itaque, si quis, dum jaculis ludit vel exercitatur, transeuntem servum tuum trajecerit, distinguatur. Nam, si id à milite in eo campo, ubi solitum est exercitari, admissum est, nulla culpa ejus intelligitur; si alius tale quid admiserit, culpæ reus est. Idem juris est de milite, si in alio loco, quam qui ad exercitandum militibus destinatus est, id admiserit.

§ 4. But, if a man, by throwing a javelin for his diversion or exercise, happen to kill a slave, who is passing, we must, in this case, make a distinction: for, if the slave be killed by a soldier, while exercising in a place appointed for that purpose, the soldier is guilty of no fault; but, if any other person should accidentally kill a slave, by throwing a javelin, he is guilty; and even, if a soldier should kill a slave accidentally by throwing a javelin in any other place, than that appointed for soldiers to exercise in, he also is guilty of a fault (i. e. culpable negligence.)

De putatione.

§ V. Item si putator, ex arbore ramo dejecto, servum tuum transeuntem occiderit, si propè viam publicam aut vicinalem id factum est, neque proclamavit, ut casus evitari

§ 5. If a man lopping a tree, chance to kill a slave who is passing, he is an offender if he worked near a public road, or in a way leading to a village, without giving pro-posset, culpæ reus est : sed, si proclamavit, nec ille curavit præcavere, extra culpam est putator. Æquè extra culpam esse intelligitur, si seorsum à viâ fortè, vel in medio fundo cædebat, licèt non proclamavit : quia in eo loco nulli extraneo jus fuerat versandi.

per warning ; but, if he made due proclamation, and the other did not take care of himself, the lopper is exempt from fault : and he is equally so, although he did not make proclamation, if he worked apart from the high road, or in the middle of a field ; for a stranger has no right of passage through such places.

De curatione relicta.

§ VI. Præterea, si medicus, qui servum tuum secuit, dereliquerit curationem ejus, et ob id mortuus fuerit servus, culpæ reus erit.

§ 6. Also, if a surgeon having performed an operation on a slave, should neglect or forsake the cure, by reason whereof the slave dies, he is guilty of culpable negligence.

De imperia medici.

§ VII. Imperitia quoque culpæ annumeretur ; veluti si medicus ideò servum tuum occiderit, quia malè eum secuerit, aut perperam ei medicamentum dederit.

§ 7. The want of professional skill is also regarded as culpable : as if a physician occasion the death of a slave by an unskillful incision, or a rash administration of medicine.

De imperita et infirmitate mulionis, aut equo vecti.

§ VIII. Impetu quoque mularum, quas mulio propter imperitiam retinere non potuit, si servus tuus oppressus fuerit, culpæ reus est mulio. Sed et, si propter infirmitatem eas retinere non potuerit, cum alius firmior eas retinere potuisset, æque culpæ tenetur. Eadem placuerunt de eo quoque, qui cum equo veheretur, impetum ejus, aut propter infirmitatem, aut propter imperitiam suam, retinere non potuerit.

§ 8. If a mule-driver, from want of skill, is unable to manage his mules, and a slave is run over by them, the mule-driver is in fault ; and, if he want strength to rein them in, when another man is able to do it, he is then equally culpable ; and the same may be said of a rider, who, through want either of strength or skill, is not able to manage his horse.

Quanti damnum æstimetur, et de hæredibus.

§ IX. His autem verbis legis, quanti id eo in anno plurimi fuerit, illa sententia exprimitur, ut si quis hominem tuum, qui hodie claudus, aut mancus, aut luscus erit, occiderit, qui in eo anno integer aut pretiosus fuerit, non tanti teneatur, quanti hodie erit, sed quanti in eo anno plurimi fuerit: ratione creditum est pœnalem esse hujus legis actionem; quia non solum tanti quisque obligatur, quantum damni dederit, sed aliquando longè pluris. Ideoque constat, hæredem eam actionem non transire, quæ transitura fuisset, si ultra damnum nunquam lis æstimaretur.

§ 9. The words of the law Aquila, let him who kills a slave, or beast of another, forfeit the greatest price, which either could have been sold for in that year, mean this; if Titius accidentally kill a slave, who was then lame, or wanted a limb, or an eye, but had been within the space of a year perfect in all his parts, and valuable, then Titius shall be liable, not merely to his value on that day, but to his highest value at any time within a year preceding his death. An action therefore, upon the law Aquila, has always been regarded as penal; for it obliges a man to pay not only the full value of the damage done, but often much more; and of consequence can by no means pass against the heir of the offender: but it might legally have been transferred against the heir, if the condemnation had never exceeded the quantum of the damage.

Quid æstimatur.

§ X. Illud non ex verbis legis, sed ex interpretatione, placuit, non solum perempti corporis æstimationem habendum esse secundum ea, quæ diximus, sed, eo amplius, quicquid præterea, perempto eo corpore, damni nobis illatum fuerit; veluti si servum tuum hæredem ab aliquo institutum ante quis occiderit, quam is jussu tuo hæreditatis quoque amissæ rationem esse habendam constat. Item, si ex pari mulierum unam, vel ex quadrigis

§ 10. It hath prevailed by construction, though not by the express words of the law, that not only the value of a slave is to be computed, as we have already mentioned; but that an estimation must be made of whatever further damage is occasioned by his death; as if your slave should be killed just as he was instituted heir, and before actual entry upon the heirship at your command, for in this case, the loss of the inheritance must be brought into the computation. Also if a horse, or mule be killed, by which a pair, or set, is broken, or if a slave be slain, who made one of a comedians, an estimation must be made, not merely of the value of that slave or animal, but of the diminished value of those, which remain.

De concurso hujus actionis et capitalis.

§ XI. Liberum autem est ei, cuius servus occisus fuerit, et ex iudicio privato legis Aquilæ damnum persequi, et capitalis criminis eum reum facere.

§ 11. The master of a slave, who is killed, may bring a civil action for damages founded upon the law Aquilia, and at the same time prosecute the offender for a capital crime.

Caput secundum.

§ XII. Caput secundum legis Aquilæ in usu non est.

§ 12. The second chapter of the law Aquilia is not in use.

Caput tertium. Quod damnum vindicatur.

§ XIII. Capite tertio de omni cætero damno cavetur; itaque, si quis servum, vel eam quadrupedem, quæ in pecudum numero est, vulneraverit, sive eam quadrupedem, quæ in pecudum numero non est, veluti canem, aut ferram bestiam, vulneraverit aut occiderit, hoc capite actio constituitur. In cæteris quoque omnibus animalibus, item in omnibus rebus quæ animâ carent, damnum per injuriam datam hac parte vindicatur. Si quid enim usum, aut ruptum, aut fractum fuerit, actio ex hoc capite constituitur; quanquam poterat sola rupti appellatio in omnes istas causas sufficere; ruptum enim intelligitur, quod quoquo modo corruptum est; unde non solum fracta, aut usta, sed etiam scissa, et collisa, et quoquo modo

§ 13. By the third chapter of this law, a remedy is given for every other kind of damage; therefore, if a man wound a slave, or four-footed animal, whether ranked among cattle or not, as a dog or wild beast, an action will lie against him. Reparation may also be obtained, under this chapter, for all damage injuriously done to animals in general, or to things inanimate; and for things burned, spoiled or broken. The term ruptum would alone be sufficient in any of these cases; for in whatever manner a thing be damaged, or spoiled, it is understood to be ruptum; so that, whenever a thing is broken, burned, torn, bruised, spilled, or in any manner made worse, it may be said to be ruptum. It hath also been determined that, perempta atque deteriora facta, hoc verbo continentur. Denique responsum est, si quis in alienum vinum aut oleum id miscuerit, quo naturalis bonitas vini aut olei corrumpatur, ex hac parte legis Aquiliæ eum teneri.

to intermix anything with the wine or oil of another, so as to corrupt or impair its natural goodness, renders the offender liable under this chapter of the law Aquilia.

De dolo et culpa.

§ XIV. Illud palàm est, sicut ex primo capite demum quisque tenetur, si dolo aut culpâ ejus homo aut quadrupes occisus occisave fuerit, ita ex hoc capite, de dolo aut culpâ, et de cætero damno quemque teneri; ex hoc tamen capite, non quanto in eo anno, sed quanti in diebus triginta proximis res fuerit, obligatur is, qui damnum dederit.

§ 14. It is evident, that the first chapter of the law subjects every man to an action, who through design or negligence kills the slave or beast of another, and that the third part gives a remedy for any other damage, so occasioned. But by this third chapter the offender is not liable to the highest price, which the thing damaged might have sold for at any time within the year, but only at any time within thirty days previous to the damage.

Quanti damnum æstimetur.

§ XV. Ac ne plurimi quidem verbum adjicitur. Sed Sabino rectè placuit, perindè habendam æstimationem ac si etiam hac parte plurimi verbum adjectum fuisset; nam plebem Romanum, quæ, Aquilio tribuno rogante, hanc legem tulit, contentam fuisse, quod primâ parte eo verbo usa esset.

§ 15. There is no expression of the highest value. But, in the opinion of Sabinus, the valuation ought to be made, as if the word highest had been used: for, when Aquilius, the tribune, proposed this law, the commonalty of Rome thought it sufficient to insert the word highest in the first chapter.

De actione directa, utili, et in factum.

§ XVI. Cæterum placuit, ita demum directam ex hac lege actionem esse, si quis præcipuè corpore suo damnum dederit: ideòque in eum, qui alio modo damnum dederit, utiles actiones dari solent; veluti si quis hominem alienum, aut pecus,

§ 16. It has been determined, that, if a man with his own hand or body, injures another, a direct action will lie under this law. But when damage is done by any other means, as by imprisoning a slave, or impounding the cattle of another, unita incluserit, ut fame necaretur; aut jumentum ita vehementer egerit, ut rumperetur; aut pecus in tantum exagitaverit, ut præcipitaretur; aut si quis alieno servo persuaserit, ut in arborem ascenderet, vel in putem descenderet, et is ascendendo, vel descendendo, aut aliquâ parte corporis læsus fuerit, utilis actio in eum datur: sed, si quis alienum servum aut de ponte, aut de ripâ. in flumen dejecerit, et is suffocatus fuerit, eo quod projecit, corpore suo damnum dedisse non diffuciliter intelligi potest; ideoque ipsâ lege Aquilia tenetur. Sed, si non corpore damnum fuerit datum, neque corpus læsum fuerit, sed alio modo alicui damnum contigerit, cum non sufficiat neque directa, neque utilis legis Aquiliæ actio, placuit, eum, qui obnoxius fuerit, in factum actione teneri; veluti si quis, misericordiâ ductus, alienum servum compeditum solverit, ut fugeret.

til they die with hunger: by driving a beast of burden so vehemently as to spoil him; by chasing a herd of cattle until they leap down a precipice; or by persuading a slave to climb a tree, or to go down into a well, by which he is killed or maimed; then the remedy by action called utilis, is given. If Titius thrust the slave of another into the water from the top of a bridge or bank, and the slave is thereby drowned, it is plain, that Titius occasioned this damage with his own hands, and he is therefore subject under the Aquilian law, to a direct action. But if the damage received was not done by the hand or body of another, and is not corporeal, so that neither a direct nor beneficial action can be brought by virtue of the Aquilian law, then an action upon the case, or fact, will lie against the offender; as if man through compassion should unchain the slave of another, and so promote his escape.

TITULUS QUARTUS.

DE INJURIIS.

D. xlvii. T. 10. C. ix. T. 35. et 36.

Verbum injuria quot modis accipitur.

GENERALITER injuria dicitur omne, quod non jure fit; specialiter, alias contumelia, quæ à contemnendo dicta est, quam Græci υβρεῖν appellant; alias culpa, quam Græci ἀδίκημα dicunt, sicut in lege Aquilia damnum injuriæ datum accipitur; alias iniquitas et injustitia, quam Græci ἀνομίαν καὶ ἀδικίαν vocant: cum enim prætor vel judex non jure contra quem pronunciat, injuriam accepisse dicitur.

Injuria in a general sense denotes every unjust act; but, when specially used, it is the same with contumelia, derived from contemno, in greek υβρεῖν: sometimes it signifies a fault, called by the greeks ἀδίκημα in which acceptation it is used in the law Aquilia, when damage injuriously occasioned, is spoken of: at other times it signifies iniquity or injustice, which the greeks call ἀνομίαν and ἀδικίαν: therefore, when the prætor or judge decides unjustly against any person, such person is said to be injured.

Quibus modis injuria fit.

§ I. Injuria autem committitur, non solum cum quis pugno pulsatus, aut fustibus cæsus, vel etiam verberatus erit; sed et si cui convitium factum fuerit; sive cujus bona, quasi debitoris, qui nihil deberet, possessa fuerint ab eo, qui intelligebat, nihil eum sibi debere; vel si quis ad infamiam alicujus libellum aut carmen (aut historiam) scripserit, composuerit, ediderit, dolove malo fecerit, quo quid eorum fieret; sive quis matrem familias, aut prætextatum prætextatamve, adsectatus fuerit: sive cujus pudicitia attentata esse dicetur: et denique, aliis plurimis modis admitti injuriam, manifestum est.

§ 1. An injury may be done not only by beating and wounding, but also by slanderous language, by seizing the goods of a man, as if he were a debtor, when the person, who seized them, well knew, that nothing was due to him; by writing a defamatory libel, poem or history; or by maliciously causing another so to do; also by continually soliciting the chastity of a boy, girl, or woman of reputation; and by various other means, too numerous to be specified.

Qui et per quos injuriam patiuntur. De parente et liberis, viro et uxore, soccro et nuru.

§ II. Patitur autem quis injuriam non solum per semetipsum, sed etiam per liberos suos, quos in potestate habet; item per uxorem suam; id enim magis prævaluit. Itaque, si filię alicujus, quę Titio nupta est, injuriam feceris, non solum filię nomine tecum injuriarum agi potest, sed etiam patris quoque et mariti nomine. Contra autem, si viro injuria facta sit, uxor injuriarum agere non potest: defendi enim uxores à viris, non viros ab uxoribus, æquum est. Sed et socer nurus nomine, cujus vir in ejus potestate est, injuriarum agere potest.

§ 2. It is understood that a man may receive an injury, not only in his own person, but in that of children under his power, and also in the person of his wife; and therefore, if an injury be done to Seius's daughter married to Titius, an action may be brought not only in the name of the daughter, but in the name of her father or her husband; but, if the husband receive an injury, the wife is not allowed to institute a suit in his defence; for it is a maxim, that wives may be defended by their husbands, but not husbands by their wives. And a father-in-law may bring an action for damages in the name of his son's wife, if her husband be under the power of his father.

De servo.

§ III. Servis autem ipsis quidem nulla injuria fieri intelligitur, sed domino per eos fieri videtur: non tamen iisdem modis, quibus etiam per liberos et uxores; sed ita, cum quid atrocius commissum fuerit, et quod apertè ad contumeliam domini respicit; veluti si quis alienum servum atrociter verberaverit; et in hunc casum actio proponitur. At, si quis servo convitium fecerit, vel pugno eum percusserit, nulla in eum actio domino competit.

§ 3. An injury is never considered as done to a slave, but through him to the master; not however in the same manner as through a wife or child; as when some atrocious injury is done to the slave, manifestly in despite of the master; as if any one should cruelly beat the slave of another; in which case an action would lie; but, if a man should only give ill language to a slave, or strike him with his fist, the master is entitled to no action against him.

De servo communi.

§ IV. Si communi servo injuria facta sit, æquum est, non pro eâ parte, qua dominus quisque est, æstimationem injuriæ fieri, sed ex dominorum personâ, quia ipsis fit injuria.

§ 4. If an injury be done to the common slave of many masters, it is to be estimated, not according to their respective rights in the slave, but according to the quality of each master; for the injury is done to them.

De servo fructuario.

§ V. Quod si usufructus in servo Titii est, proprietas Mævii, magis Mævio injuria fieri intelligitur.

§ 5. If Titius has the usufruct of a slave, and Mævius the property, then any injury done to the slave, is understood to be done to Mævius.

De eo, qui bona fide servit.

§ VI. Sed, si libero homini, qui tibi bonâ fide servit, injuria facta sit, nulla tibi actio dabitur, sed suo nomine is expiriri poterit, nisi in contumeliam tuam pulsatus sit; tunc enim competit et tibi injuriarum actio. Idem ergo est et in servo alieno bonâ fide tibi serviente; ut toties admittatur injuriarum actio, quoties in tuam contumeliam injuria ei facta est.

§ 6. But, if an injury be done to a free person in the service of another, the servant must bring suit in his own name, unless the person who beat him, did it principally for the sake of affronting his master; in which case the master may also bring an action of injury. And so if your servant be the slave of another; for as often as he receives an injury, which was intended to insult you, you may bring an action of injury.

Pœna injuriarum ex l. xii. tabb. et ex jure prætorio.

§ VII. Pœna autem injuriarum propter membrum quidem ruptum talio erat; propter os verò fractum nummariæ pœnæ erant constitutæ, quasi in magnâ veterum paupertate. Sed postea prætores permittebant ipsis, qui injuriam passi sunt, eam æstimare; ut judex vel tanti reum condemneret, quanti injuriam passus æstimaverit, vel mino-

§ 7. The punishment of an injury, by the 12 tables, was a return of the like injury, if a limb was broken; but, if a blow only was given, or a single bone broken, then the punishment was pecuniary, the ancients living in great poverty. The prætors afterwards permitted the parties injured to fix their damages at a certain sum, which might serve ris, prout ei visum fuerit. Sed pœna quidem injuriæ, quæ ex lege xii. tabularum introducta est, in desuetudinem abiit: quam autem prætores introduxerunt, (quæ etiam honoraria appellatur,) in judiciis frequentatur. Nam, secundum gradum dignitatis vitæque honestatem, crescit aut minuitur æstimatio injuriæ: qui gradus condemnationis et in servili personâ non immeritò servatur, ut aliud in servo actore, aliud in medii actûs homine, aliud in vilissimo vel compedito, jus æstimationis constituatur.

as a guide to the judge, but not preclude him from lessening the estimate at his discretion. The species of pecuniary punishment, which was introduced by the law of the 12 tables, fell gradually into disuse, and that only which the prætors introduced, termed honorary, is now resorted to: for the estimate of an injury is increased or diminished according to the degree and quality of the person injured; a gradation not improperly observed even as to slaves; so that one estimate may be adopted in the case of a steward or agent to his master, and a lower one in the case of an inferior slave.

De lege Cœrnelia.

§ VIII. Sed et lex Cœrnelia de injuriis loquitur, et injuriarum actionem introduxit, quæ cõpetit ob eam rem, quod se pulsatum quis, verberatumve, vel domum suam vi introitam esse, dicat. Domum autem accipimus, sivè in propriâ domo quis habitet, sivè in conductâ, sivè gratis, sivè hospitio receptus sit.

§ 8. The law Cœrnelia speaks also of injuries, and hath introduced an action, which lies, when a man alleges, that he hath been struck or beaten, or that another hath entered forcibly into his house; and whether he owns, or hires, or borrows, or lives in it as a guest, it is regarded as his house.

De æstimatione atrocis injuriæ.

§ IX. Atrox injuria æstimatur vel ex facto, veluti si quis ab alio vulneratus sit, vel fustibus cæsus; vel ex loco, veluti si cui in theatro, vel in foro, vel in conspectu prætoris, injuria facta sit; vel ex personâ, veluti si magistratus injuriam passus fuerit, vel si senatori ab humili personâ injuria facta sit, aut parenti patronove fiat à liberis vel

§ 9. An injury is esteemed atrocious, from the nature of the fact, as when a man is wounded by another, or beaten with a club—from the place, as when an injury is done in a public theatre, in an open market, or in the presence of the prætor—and sometimes from the rank of the person, as when a magistrate, or a senator, receives an injury from libertis. Aliter enim senatoris et parentis patronique, aliter extranei et humilis personæ, injuria æstimatur. Nonnunquam et locus vulneris atrocem injuriam facit, veluti si in oculo quis percussus fuerit. Parvi autem refert, utrum patri-familias, an filio familias, talis injuria facta sit: nam et hæc atrox injuria æstimabitur.

one of mean condition, a parent from his child, or a patron from his freed-man; for these cases demand a heavier punishment, than where an injury is done to a stranger, or a person of low degree. Also the part injured, may constitute an injury atrocious; as if a man should be wounded in his eye; but it is of little consequence whether such an injury be done to the father of a family, or to the son of a family; for such an injury will be considered as atrocious.

De judicio civili et criminali.

§ X. In summâ sciendum est, de omni injuriâ eum, qui passus est, posse vel criminaliter agere, vel civiliter: et, si quidem civiliter agatur, æstimatione factâ secundum quod dictum est, pœna reo imponitur; sin autem criminaliter, officio judicis extraordinaria pœna reo irrogatur. Hoc videlicet observando, quod Zenoniana constitutio introduxit, ut viri illustres, quique super eos sunt, et per procuratores possint actionem injuriarum criminaliter vel persequi vel suspicere, secundum ejus tenorem, qui ex ipsâ manifestius apparet.

§ 10. In fine, it must be observed concerning every injury, that the party injured may sue either criminally or civilly. If civilly the damage must be estimated, and the penalty awarded as we have before noticed: but, if he sue criminally, it is the duty of the judge to inflict an extraordinary punishment upon the offender; observing the constitution of Zeno, which permits illustrious persons, and those who enjoy a superior title, either to pursue or defend criminally any action of injury by their procurators; but the tenor of this law will more fully appear by a perusal of the ordinance itself.

Qui tenentur injuriarum.

§ XI. Non solùm autem is injuriarum tenetur, qui fecit injuriam, id est, qui percussit; verùm ille quoque tenetur, qui dolo fecit injuriam, vel qui procuravit, ut cui mala pugno percuteretur.

§ 11. An action of injury lies not only against him, who hath done an injury, by giving a blow, &c. but also against him, who by craft, or by persuasion hath caused the injury to be done.

Quomodo tollitur hæc actio.

§ XII. Hæc actio dissimulatione aboletur; et ideo, si quis injuriam dereliquerit, hoc est, statim passus ad animum suum non revocaverit, postea ex pœnitentiâ remissam injuriam non poterit recolare.

§ 12. All right to an action of injury may be lost by suppression; therefore, if a man takes no notice of an injury at the time, when he receives it, he cannot afterwards repent of his forbearance and bring suit.

TITULUS QUINTUS.

DE OBLIGATIONIBUS, QUÆ QUASI EX DÉLICTO NASCUNTUR.

D. xlvii. T. 5. C. ix. T. 3.

Si judex litem suam fecerit.

Si judex litem suam fecerit, non propriè ex maleficio obligatus videtur: sed quia neque ex maleficio, neque ex contractu obligatus est, et utique peccasse aliquid intelligitur, licet per imprudentiam, ideo videtur quasi ex maleficio teneri; et, in quantum de eâ re æquam religioni judicantis videbitur, pœnam sustinebit.

If a judge make a suit his own, by giving an unjust determination, an action of mal-feasance will not properly lie against him: but, granting he is not subject to an action of mal-feasance, or of contract, yet, as he hath certainly committed a fault, although not by design, but through imprudence and want of skill, he may be sued by an action of quasi-mal-feasance; and must suffer such penalty, as seems equitable to the conscience of a superior judge.

De dejectis vel effusis, et positis aut suspensis.

§ I. Item is, cujus ex cœnaculo, vel proprio ipsius, vel conducto, vel in quo gratis habitat, dejectum effusumve aliquid est, ita ut alicui noceret, quasi ex maleficio obligatus intelligitur. Ideò autem non propriè ex maleficio obligatus intelligitur, quia plerùmque ob alterius culpam tenetur, aut servi aut liberi. Cui similis est is, qui eâ parte, quâ vulgo iter fieri solet, id positum aut suspensum habet, quod potest, si ceciderit, alicui nocere; quo casu pœna decem aureorum constituta est. De eo verò, quod dejectum effusumve est, dupli, quantum damni datum sit, constituta est actio. Ob hominem verò liberum occisum, quinquaginta aureorum pœna constituitur. Si verò vivat, nocitumque ei esse dicatur, quantum ob eam rem æquum judici videtur, actio datur. Judex enim computare debet mercedes medicis præstitas, cæteraque impendia, quæ in curatione facta sunt: præterea operas, quibus caruit aut cariturus est, ob id, quod inutilis est factus.

§ 1. The occupier of a chamber, from which any thing hath been thrown or spilt, whereby damage is done, is, liable to an action of quasi-mal-feasance; and it is not material,

whether the chamber be his property; whether he rents it; or inhabits it gratis: and the reason, why such occupier is not suable for a direct malfeasance, is, because he is generally sued for the fault of another. Any man is also subject to the same action, who hath hung or placed anything in a public road, so as to endanger passengers by the fall of it; in which case a fine of ten aurei is appointed: but, when anything hath been thrown or split, the action is always for double the actual damage. If a freeman be killed by accident, the penalty is fifty aurei; but, if he only receive some hurt, the quantum of the damage is at the discretion of the judge, who ought to take into account the fees of the physician, and all other expenses attendant upon the cure, over and above the time, which the patient hath lost in his illness, or may lose by being unable to pursue his business.

De filio-familias, seorsum habitante a patre.

§ II. Si filius-familias seorsum à patre habitaverit, et quid ex cœnaculo ejus dejectum effusumve fuerit, sive quid positum suspensumve habuerit, cujus casus periculosus est, Juliano placuit, in patrem nullam esse actionem, sed cum ipso filio agendum esse. Quod et in filio-familias judice observandum est, qui litem suam fecerit.

§ 2 If the son of a family live separate from his father, and anything is either thrown, or split, from his apartment, or so hung, or placed, that the fall of it may be dangerous, it is the opinion of Julian, that no action will lie against the father, and that the son only can be sued. The same rule of law is also to be observed, in regard to the son of a family, who hath given as a judge, an unjust decision.

De damno aut furto, quod in navi, aut caupona, aut stabulo, factum est.

§ III. Item exercitor navis, aut cauponæ, aut stabuli, de damno aut furto, quod in navi, aut cauponâ, aut stabulo, factum erit, quasi ex maleficio teneri videtur; si modo ipsius nullum est maleficio, sed alicujus eorum, quorum opera navem, aut cauponam, aut stabulum, exercet. Cum enim neque ex maleficio, neque ex contractu, sit adversus eum constituta hic actio, et aliquatenus culpæ reus est, quod opera malorum hominum uteretur, ideò quasi ex maleficio teneri videtur. In his autem casibus in factum actio competit; quæ hæredi quidem datur, adversus hæredem autem non competit.

§ 3. The master of a ship, tavern or inn, is liable to be sued for a quasi-mal-feasance, on account of every damage, or theft, done or committed in any of these places, by himself or his servants: for although no action, either of direct mal-feasance, or of contract, can be brought against the master, yet, as he has, in some measure, been guilty of a fault in employing dishonest persons as his servants, he is therefore subject to a suit for a quasi-mal-feasance. But, in all these cases, the action given is an action upon the fact, which may be brought in favour of an heir, but not against him.

TITULUS SEXTUS.

DE ACTIONIBUS.

D. xlv. T. 7. C. iv. T. 10.

Continuatio, et Definitio.

SUPEREST, ut de actionibus loquamur. Actio nihil aliud est, quam jus persequendi in judicio, quod sibi debetur.

It now remains, that we treat of actions. An action is nothing more than the right of suing in a court of law for our just demands.

Divisio prima.

§ 1. Omnium autem actionum, quibus inter aliquos apud iudices arbitrosve de quâcunque re quæri-

§ 1. All actions whatever be the subject matter of them whether determinable before judges or referees

tur, summa divisio in duo genera deducitur: aut enim in rem sunt, aut in personam: namque agit unusquisque aut cum eo, qui ei obligatus est, vel ex contractu, vel ex maleficio; quo casu prodiæ sunt actiones in personam, per quas intendit, adversarium ei dare aut facere oportere, et aliis quibusdam modis: aut cum eo agit, qui nullo jure ei obligatus est, movet tamen alicui de aliquâ re controversiam; quo casu prodiæ actiones in rem sunt: veluti si rem corporalem possideat quis, quam Titius suam esse affirmet possessor autem, dominum ejus se esse, dicat; nam, si Titius suam esse intendat, in rem actio est.

may be divided into real and personal; for the plaintiff must sue the defendant, either because the defendant is obligated to him by contract, or hath been guilty of some malfesance; and, in this case, the action must be personal, in which the plaintiff alleges, that his adversary is bound to give, or to do something for his benefit; or some other matter, as the occasion requires; or otherwise, the plaintiff must sue the defendant, on account of some corporeal thing, when there is no obligation; in which case the action must be real; as for example, if a man possess land, which Titius affirms to be his property, the other denying it, Titius must bring a real action for the recovery.

De actione confessoria, et negatoria.

§ II. Æquè, si agat quis, jus sibi esse fundo fortè, vel ædibus utendi fruendi, vel per fundum vicini eundi agendi, vel ex fundo vicini aquam ducendi in rem actio est. Ejusdem generis est actio de jure prædiorum urbanorum; veluti, si quis agat, jus sibi esse altius ædes suas tollendi, prospiciendive, vel projiciendi aliquid, vel immittendignum in vicini ædes. Contra quoque de usufructu, et de servitutibus prædiorum rusticorum, item prædiorum urbanorum, invicem quoque prodiæ sunt actiones; ut si quis intendat, jus non esse adversario utendi fruendi, eundi agendi, aquamve ducendi; item altius tolendi, prospiciendive, vel projiciendi, immit-

§ 2. Also, if any man sue, alleging that he has a right to the usufruct of a field or house, or a right of driving his cattle, or of drawing water in the land of his neighbor, this is a real action. And an action relating to the rights of houses or city estates, which rights are called services, is also of the same kind; as when a man commences a suit, and alleges, that he has a right of prospect, a right to raise his house, a right of making a part of it project, or of laying the beams of his building upon his neighbor's walls. There are also actions different from these, which relate to usufructs, and the rights of country and city estates; as when tendive: istæ quoque actiones in rem sunt, sed negativæ; quod genus actionis in controversiis rerum corporalium proditum non est; nam in his is agit, qui non possidet; ei verò, qui possidet, non est actio prodita, per quam neget rem actoris esse. Sanè non uno casu, qui possidet, nihilominus is actoris partes obtinet; sicut in latioribus digestorum libris opportunius apparebit.

the complainant alleges, that his adversary is not entitled to the usufruct of a particular ground, or to the right of passage, &c. &c. These actions are also real, but are negative in their nature, and cannot therefore be used in controversies respecting things corporeal, where the agent, or plaintiff, is the person out of possession: for a possessor can bring no action: there are however, many cases, in which a possessor may be obliged to act the part of a plaintiff; but we refer the reader to the book of the digests.

De actionibus prætoriiis realibus.

§ III. Sed istæ quidem actiones, quarum mentionem habuimus, et si quæ sunt similes, ex legitimis et civilibus causis descendunt. Aliæ autem sunt, quas prætor ex suâ jurisdictione comparatas habet, tam in rem, quam in personam; quas et ipsas necessarium est exemplis ostendere; ut ecce plerumque ita permittit prætor in rem agere, ut vel actor dicat, se quasi usucepisse, quod non usuceperit vel ex diverso possessor dicat, adversarium suum non usucepisse, quod usuceperit.

§ 3. The actions just mentioned and those of a similar nature, are derived from the civil law; but the prætor, by virtue of his jurisdiction, hath introduced other actions, both real and personal, of which it will be necessary to give some examples: for he often permits a real action to be brought, either by allowing the demandant to allege, that he hath acquired by prescription, what he hath not so acquired; or, on the contrary, by permitting a former possessor to allege, that his adversary hath not acquired by prescription, what, in reality, he hath so acquired.

De Publiciana.

§ IV. Namque, si cui ex justâ causâ res aliqua tradita fuerit, (veluti ex causâ emptionis, aut donationis, aut dotis, aut legatorum,) et necdum ejus rei dominus effectus est, si is ejus re possessionem casu

§ 4. If anything should be delivered to or deposited with a man in trust upon some just account, as by reason of a purchase, a gift, a marriage, or a bequest, and the trustee should lose the possession, before he amiserit, nullam habet in rem directam actionem ad eam persequendam: quippe ita proditæ sunt jure civili actiones, ut quis dominium suum vindicet. Sed, quia sanè durum erat, eo cāsū deficere actionem, inventa est à prætore actio, in quâ dicit is, qui possessionem amisit, eam rem se usucepisse, quam usu non cepit, et ita vindicat suam esse: quæ actio Publiciana appellatur, quoniam primum à Publiciō prætore in edicto proposita est.

hath gained a property in the thing possessed, he could have no direct action for the recovery of it; inasmuch as real actions are given by law for the re-vindication of those things only, in which a man hath a vested property or dominion. But, it being hard, that an action should be wanting in such a case, the prætor hath supplied one, in which the person, who hath lost his possession, is allowed to prescribe to the thing in question, although he did not obtain it by prescription, and he may thus recover. This action is called actio Publiciana, because it was first instituted by the edict of Publicus the prætor.

De rescissoria.

§ V. Rursus ex diverso, si quis, cum reipublicæ causâ abesset, vel in hostium potestate esset, rem ejus, qui in civitate esset, usuceperit, permititur domino, si possessor reipublicæ causâ abesse desierit, tunc intra annum rescissâ usucapione eam rem petere, id est, ita petere, ut dicat, possessorum usu non cepisse, et ob id suam rem esse. Quod genus actionis quibusdam et aliis simili æquitate motus prætor accommodat; sicut ex latiore digestorum seu pandectarum volumine intelligere licet.

§ 5. On the contrary, if any man, while abroad in the service of his country, or a prisoner in the hands of the enemy, should gain a prescriptive title to a thing, which belongs to another person resident at home, then the former proprietor is permitted within a year after the return of the possessor from public service, to bring an action against him, the prescriptive title being rescinded; and may allege, that the possessor hath not effectually prescribed, so that the thing in litigation is his own. Under the same motive of equity the prætor hath adapted this species of action to certain other persons, as we may learn more at large from the digests.

De Pauliana.

§ VI. Item, si quis in fraudem creditorum rem suam alicui traderit, bonis ejus à creditoribus possessis ex sententiâ præsidis, permittitur ipsis creditoribus, rescissâ traditione, eam rem petere; id est, dicere, eam rem traditam non esse, et ob id in bonis debitoris mansisse.

§ 6. If a debtor deliver anything to some person in order to defraud his creditors, they are permitted, notwithstanding the delivery, to bring an action for the thing, if the possession hath been previously adjudged to them by an order of court: that is, they are allowed to plead, that the thing was not delivered, and of course, that it continues to be a part of their debtor's goods.

De Serviana et quasi-Serviana, seu hypothecaria.

§ VII. Item Servinia, et quasi Serviana, (quæ etiam hypothecaria vocatur,) ex ipsius prætoris jurisdictione substantiam capiunt. Serviana autem experitur quis de rebus coloni, quæ pignoris jure pro mercedibus fundi ei tenentur. Quasi Serviana autem est, qua creditores pignora hypothecasve persequuntur. Inter pignus autem et hypothecam, (quantum ad actionem hypothecariam attinet,) nihil interest: nam de quâ re inter creditorem et debitorem convenerit, ut sit pro debito obligata, utraque hac appellatione continetur; sed in aliis differentia est: nam pignoris appellatione eam propriè rem contineri dicimus, quæ simul etiam traditur creditori, maxime si mobilis sit: at eam, quæ sine traditione nudâ conventionem tenetur, propriè hypothecæ appellatione contineri dicimus.

§ 7. Also the action Serviana, and the action quasi-Serviana, (which is also called hypothecary,) take their rise from the prætor's jurisdiction. By the action Serviana, a suit may be commenced for the property of a farmer, bound for rent. The action quasi-Serviana is that, by which a creditor may sue for a thing pledged or hypothecated to him; and, in regard to this action, there is no difference between a pledge and an hypothecque; though in other respects they differ; for, by the term pledge, is meant that, which hath actually been delivered to a creditor, especially if the thing was a moveable; hypothecation means the making anything liable to a creditor by a nude agreement only, without delivery.

De actionibus prætoriiis personalibus.

§ VIII. In personam quoque actiones ex suâ jurisdictione propositas habet prætor, veluti de pecuniâ constitutâ; cui similis videbatur receptitia. Sed ex nostrâ constitutione, (cum, et si quid plenius habebat, hoc in actionem pecuniæ constitutæ transfusum est,) et ea quasi supervacua jussa est cum suâ auctoritate à nostris legibus, recedere. Item prætor proposuit actionem de peculio servorum, filiorumque familiarum; et eam, ex quâ quæritur, an actor juraverit; et alias complures.

§ 8. Personal actions have also been introduced by the prætors, in consequence of their authority; as the action de pecuniâ constitutâ; which much resembles that called receptitia, now taken away by our constitution, as unnecessary; and whatever advantageous matter it contained, we have comprised in the action de pecuniâ constitutâ. The prætors have likewise introduced the action concerning the peculium of slaves, and the sons of families; and also the action wherein the question is, whether the plaintiff hath made oath of his debt; and many others.

De constituta pecunia.

§ IX. De constitutâ autem pecuniâ cum omnibus agitur, quicumque vel pro se, vel pro alio, soluturos se constituerint, nullâ scilicet stipulatione interposita: nam alioqui si stipulanti promiserint, jure civili tenentur.

§ 9. A suit may be brought de pecuniâ constitutâ, against any person who hath engaged to pay money, either for himself or another, without stipulation; but, when there is a stipulation, the promise may be enforced by the civil law.

De peculio.

§ X. Actiones autem de peculio ideò adversus patrem dominumve comparavit prætor, quia licèt ex contractu filiorum servorumve ipso jure non teneatur; æquum tamen est, peculio tenus, (quod veluti patrimonium est filiorum filiarumque, item servorum,) condemnari eos.

§ 10. The prætor hath also given actions de peculio against fathers and masters, who although they are not legally bound by the contracts of their children and slaves, ought in equality to be bound to the extent of a peculium, which is, as it were, the patrimony, and separate estate of a son, a daughter, or a slave.

De actione in factum ex jurejurando.

§ XI. Item, si quis postulante adversario juraverit, deberi sibi pecuniam, quam peteret, neque ei solvatur, justissimè accommodat ei talem actionem, per quam non illud quæritur, an ei pecunia debeatur, sed an juraverit.

§ 11. Also if any man, called upon by the adverse party, make oath that the debt, which he sues for, is due and unpaid, the prætor most justly indulges him with an action upon the fact; in which no inquiry is made, whether the debt be due, but whether the oath hath been taken.

De actionibus pœnalibus.

§ XII. Pœnales quoque actiones prætor penè multas ex suâ jurisdictione introduxit; veluti adversus eum, qui quid ex albo ejus corrupisset; et in eum, qui patronum vel parentem in jus vocasset, cum id non impetrasset; item adversus eum, qui vi exemerit eum, qui in jus vocaretur, cujusve dolo alius exemerit; et alias innumerabiles.

§ 12. The prætors have also introduced many penal actions, by virtue of their authority. Thus, they have provided an action against him, who hath willfully damaged or erased an edict; against an emancipated son, or a freed-man, who hath commenced suit against his parent or patron, without previous permission from the proper magistrate; also against any person, who by force or fraud hath hindered another from appearing to the process of a court of justice; and many others.

De præjudicialibus actionibus.

§ XIII. Præjudiciales actiones in rem esse videntur; quales sunt, per quas quæritur, an aliquis liber, an libertus sit, vel servus, vel de partu agnoscendo. Ex quibus ferè una illa legitimam causam habet, per quam quæritur, an aliquis liber sit: cæteræ ex ipsius prætoris jurisdictione substantiam capiunt.

§ 13. Prejudicial actions are also real; such as those, by which it is inquired, whether a man is born free, or made free; whether he be a slave, or a bastard. But of these, that only arises from the civil law, by which it is inquired, whether a man be free born: the rest originate from the prætor's jurisdiction.

An res sua condici possit.

§ XIV. Sic itaque discretis actionibus, certum est, non posse actorem suam rem ita ab aliquo petere, si paret, eum dare oportere: nec enim, quod actoris est, id ei dari oportet; scilicet, quia dari cuiquam id intelligitur, quod ita datur, ut ejus fiat: nec res, quæ jam actoris est, magis ejus fieri potest. Planè odio furum, quo magis pluribus actionibus teneantur, effectum est, ut, extra pœnam dupli aut quadrupli, rei recipiendæ nomine, fures etiam hac actione teneantur, si appareat, eos dare oportere: quamvis sit adversus eos etiam hæc in rem actio, per quam, rem suam quis esse petit.

§ 14. Actions being thus either real or personal, it is certain, that a man cannot sue for his own property by a condiction, or a personal action in the following form, viz. If it appear, that the defendant ought to give it me: for the act of giving implies the conferring of property, and that which is already the property of the plaintiff, cannot by being given to him, become more his own, than it is already. But, in order to shew a detestation for thieves and robbers, and to accumulate the actions to which they are liable, it hath been determined, that, besides the double and quadruple penalty, they may be pursued by a condiction for the thing taken, in the form before recited, if it appear, that they ought to give it. And this, although the party injured may also bring a real action against them, by which he may demand the thing taken, as his own.

De nominibus actionum.

§ XV. Appellamus autem in rem quidem actiones, vindicationes; in personam verò actiones, quibus dare aut facere oportere intenditur, condictiones; condicere enim est denuntiare, priscâ linguâ: nunc verò abusivè dicimus, condictionem actionem in personam esse, quâ actor intendit dari sibi oportere; nulla enim hoc tempore eo nomine denuntiatio fit.

§ 15. Real actions are called vindications; and personal actions, in which it is intended, that something ought to be done or given, are called condictiones; for condicere, in old language was the same with denuntiare to denounce: but condiction is now improperly used for a personal action, by which the plaintiff contends, that something ought to be given to him; for denunciations are not in use.

Divisio secunda.

§ XVI. Sequens illa divisio est, quod quædam actiones rei persequendæ gratiâ comparatæ sunt, quædam pœnæ persequendæ, quædam mistæ sunt.

§ 16. Actions are also farther divided into those, which are given to recover the specific thing in dispute; those, which are given for the penalty only: and mixed actions.

De actionibus rei persecutoriis.

§ XVII. Rei persequendæ causâ comparatæ sunt omnes in rem actiones; earum verò actionum, quæ in personam sunt, eæ quidem, quæ ex contractu nascuntur, ferè omnes rei persequendæ causâ comparatæ videntur; veluti quibus mutuam pecuniam, vel in stipulatum deductam, petit actor; item commodati, depositi, mandati, pro socio, ex empto, vendito, locato, conducto. Planè, si depositi agatur eo nomine, quod tumultûs, incendii, ruinæ, naufragii causâ depositum sit, in duplum actionem prætor reddit, si modo cum ipso, apud quem depositum sit, aut cum hærede ejus, de dolo ipsius agitur; quo casu mista est actio.

§ 17. All real actions are given for the recovery of the thing in litigation; which is the object also of almost all the personal actions which arise from contract; as the action for a mutuum, a commodatum, or on account of a stipulation, a deposit, mandate, partnership, buying and selling, letting and hiring. But, when a suit is commenced for a thing deposited by reason of a riot, a fire, or any other calamity, the prætor always gives an action for a double penalty, besides the thing deposited, if the suit is brought against the depositary himself, or against his heir, for fraud; in which case the action is mixed.

De actionibus pœnæ persecutoriis.

§ XVIII. Ex maleficiis vero proditæ actiones, aliæ tantum pœnæ persequendæ causâ comparatæ sunt; aliæ tam pœnæ, quam rei persequendæ; et ob id mistæ sunt. Pœnam tantum persequitur quis actione furti; sive enim manifesti agatur, quadrupli, sive non manifesti, dupli, de solâ pœnâ agitur: nam ipsam rem propriâ actione persequitur quis, id est, suam esse petens, sive fur ipse eam rem possi-

§ 18. In cases of mal-feasance, some actions are for the penalty only, and some both for the thing and the penalty; which are therefore called mixed actions. But, in an action of theft, whether manifest or not manifest, nothing more is sued for than the penalty, which, in manifest theft is quadruple, and, in theft not manifest, double: for the owner may recover by a separate action what hath been stolen from him, if he demand the thing stolen as his own, not only against the thief, but against any other in possession of his property. The thief may also be sued by a condictio for the thing itself.

De mistis ; hoc est, rei et pœnæ persecutoriis.

§ XIX. Vi autem bonorum raptorum actio mista est, quia in quadruplo rei persecutio continetur ; pœna autem tripli est. Sed et legis Aquiliæ actio, de damno injuriâ dato, mista est ; non solum si adversus inficiantem in duplum agatur, sed interdum etsi in simplum quisque agat ; veluti si quis hominem claudum aut luscum occiderit, qui in eo anno integer et magni pretii fuerit ; tanti enim damnatur, quanti is homo eo in anno plurimi fuerit, secundum jam traditam divisionem. Item mista est actio contra eos, qui relictæ sacrosanctis Ecclesiis, vel aliis venerabilibus locis, legata vel fidei-commissi nomine, dare distulerint, usque adeo ut etiam in judicium vocarentur : tunc enim et ipsam rem vel pecuniam, quæ relictæ est, dare compelluntur, et aliud tantum pro pœna ; et ideo in duplum ejus fit condemnatio.

§ 19. An action for goods taken by force, is a mixed action ; because the thing taken is included under the quadruple value to be recovered by the action ; and thus the penalty is but triple. The action, introduced by the law Aquila, for damage injuriously done, is also a mixed action ; not only when given for double value against a man denying the fact, but sometimes, when the action is only for single value ; as when a man hath killed a slave, who at the time of his death was lame, or wanted an eye, but had within the year previous to his decease, been free from any defect, and of great price ; for in this case the defendant is obliged to pay as much as the slave was worth at any time within the year preceding his death. (B. 4. t. 3.) A mixed action may also be brought against those, who have delayed to deliver a legacy, or gift in trust, given for the benefit of a church, or any other holy place, until they have been called before a magistrate for that purpose ; for then they are compelled to deliver up the thing, or to pay the money bequeathed, and as much more, by way of penalty ; and thus they are condemned in a double amount.

De mistis ; id est, tam in rem, quam in personam.

§ XX. Quædam actiones mistam causam obtinere videntur, tam in rem, quam in personam ; qualis est familiæ erciscundæ actio, quæ competit cohæredibus de dividendâ hæreditate ; item communi dividundo, quæ inter eos redditur, inter quos aliquid commune est, ut id dividatur ; item finium regundorum actio, qua inter eos agitur, qui confines agros habent. In quibus tribus judiciis permittitur judici rem alicui ex litigatoribus ex bono et æquo adjudicare ; et, si unius pars prægravari videbitur, eum invicem certâ pecuniâ alteri condemnare.

§ 20. Some actions, are also mixed as proceeding against the thing as well as against the Person : of this sort is the action familiæ erciscundæ, which may be brought by co-heirs for the partition of their inheritance ; the action de communi dividundo, given for the division of any particular things, which, exclusive of an inheritance, are in common : and likewise the action finium regundorum or an action of boundary, which takes place among owners of contiguous estates. And, in these three actions, it is wholly in the power of the judge to give the ground, or thing in dispute, to either of the parties litigant, and then to oblige that party, if necessity so require, to recompense his adversary, by paying him a sum certain, in amends for any inequality in the adjudication.

Divisio tertia.

§ XXI. Omnes autem actiones vel in simplum conceptæ sunt, vel in duplum, vel in triplum, vel in quadruplum ; ulterius autem nulla actio extenditur.

§ 21. All actions are for the single, double, triple, or quadruple value of the thing in litigation ; for no action extends farther.

De actionibus in simplum.

§ XXII. In simplum agitur, veluti ex stipulatione, ex mutui datione, ex empto, vendito, locato, conducto, mandato, et denique ex aliis quam plurimis causis.

§ 22. The single value is sued for, when an action is given upon a stipulation, a loan, a mandate, the contract of buying and selling, letting and hireing ; and also upon several other accounts.

In duplum.

§ XXIII. In duplum agimus, veluti furti nec manifesti, damni injuriæ ex lege Aquiliâ, depositi ex quibusdam causis: item servi corrupti, quæ competit in eum, cujus hortatu consiliove servus alienus fugerit, aut contumax adversus dominum factus est, aut luxuriosè vivere cœperit, aut denique quolibet modo deterior factus sit; in quâ actione earum etiam rerum, quas fugiendo servus abstulerit, æstimatio deducitur: item ex legato, quod venerabilibus locis relictum est, secundum ea, quæ supra diximus.

§ 23. The double value is sued for in an action of theft not manifest, of injury, by the law Aquilia, and sometimes in an action of deposit. Also in an action brought, on account of a slave corrupted, against him, by whose advice such a slave hath fled from his master, grown disobedient, extravagant, or become in any manner the worse; and, in this action, an estimate is to be made of whatever things the slave hath stolen from his master, before his flight. An action for the detention of a legacy, left to an holy place, is also given for double value, as we have before remarked.

In triplum.

§ XXIV. Tripli verò agimus, cum quidam majorem verâ æstimatione quantitatem in libello conventionis inserunt, ut ex hac causâ viatores, id est, executores litium ampliorem summam, sportularum nomine, exigent: tunc enim id, quod propter eorum causam damnum passus fuerit reus, in triplum ab actore consequetur; ut in hoc triplo etiam simplum, in quo damnum passus est, connumeretur. Quod nostra constituto introduxit, quæ in nostro codice fulget, ex quâ procul dubio certum est, ex lege condictitiam emanare.

§ 24. A suit may be brought for triple value, when any person inserts a greater sum, than is due to him, in the libel of convention, to the intent, that the officers of any court may exact a larger fee, or perquisite from the defendant; in which case the latter may obtain the triple value of the extraordinary fee from the plaintiff, including the fee in the triple value. The fees of officers are regulated by our constitution, and it is not to be doubted, but that the action, called condictio ex lege, may be given by virtue of that ordinance.

In quadruplum.

§ XXV. Quadrupli autem agitur; veluti furti manifesti; item de

§ 25. A suit may be commenced for quadruple value, by an action eo, quod metûs causâ factum sit; deque eâ pecuniâ, quæ in hoc data sit, ut is, cui datur, calumniæ causâ negotium alicui faceret, vel non faceret. Item ex lege condictitiâ, nostrâ ex constitutione, oritur, in quadruplum condemnationem imponens iis executoribus litium, qui contra nostræ constitutionis normam à reis quicquam exegerint.

for theft manifest, by an action for putting a man in fear, and by an action on account of money, given to bring on a litigious suit against some third person, or on account of money given to desist from it. A condictio ex lege, for the quadruple value, arises also from our constitution against those officers of courts of justice, who demand any thing from the party defendant, contrary to the regulations of the said constitution.

Subdivisio actionum in duplum.

§ XXVI. Sed furti quidem nec manifesti actio et servi corrupti à cæteris, de quibus simul locuti sumus, eo differunt, quod hæ actiones omnimodo dupli sunt; at istæ, id est, damni injuriæ ex lege Aquilia et interdum depositi, inficiatione duplicantur; in confitentem autem in simplum dantur. Sed illa, quæ de iis competit, quæ relictæ venerabilibus locis sunt, non solum inficiatione duplicatur, sed etiam si distulerit relictæ solutionem, usque quo jussu magistratuum conveniatur: in confitentem verò, antequam jussu magistratuum conveniatur, solventem, simpli redditur.

§ 26. But an action of theft not manifest, and an action on account of a slave corrupted, differ from the others, of which we have spoken, in that they always enforce a condemnation in double the value; but in an action, given by the law Aquilia for an injury done, and sometimes in an action of deposit, the double value may be exacted in case of denial; but if the defendant confesses, the single value only can be recovered. In an action brought for a legacy to pious uses, due to any holy place or society, the penalty is not only doubled by the denial of the defendant, but also by any delay of payment, which may be adjudged to have given a just cause for citing the defendant before a magistrate; but if the legacy be paid, before any citation issues at the command of the judge, the single value only can be required.

Subdivisio actionum in quadruplum.

§ XXVII. Item actio de eo, quod metûs causâ factum sit, à cæteris, de quibus simul locuti sumus, eo differt, quod ejus naturâ tacitè continetur, ut, qui judicis jussu ipsam rem actori restituat, absolvetur: quod in cæteris casibus non est ita, sed omnimodo quisque in quadruplum condemnatur; quod est et in furti manifesti actione.

§ 27. An action for putting a man in fear, differs also from other actions in quadruplum, because it is tacitly implied in the nature of this action, that the party, who hath obeyed the command of the judge, in restoring the things taken, may be dismissed; for, in all other actions for the fourfold value, every man must be condemned to pay the full penalty, as in the action of theft manifest.

Divisio quarta de actionibus bonæ fidei.

§ XXVIII. Actionum autem quædam bonæ fidei sunt, quædam stricti juris. Bonæ fidei sunt hæ: ex empto, vendito; locato, conducto; negotiorum gestorum; mandati; depositi; pro socio; tutelæ; commodati; pignoratitia; familiæ erciscundæ; communi dividundo; præscriptis verbis, quæ de æstimatione proponitur; et ea, quæ ex permutatione competit; et hæreditatis petitio. Quamvis enim usque adhuc incertum erat, inter bonæ fidei judicia connumeranda hæreditatis petitio esset, an non; nostra tamen constitutio apertè, eam esse bonæ fidei, disposuit.

§ 28. The fourth division is into actions of good faith, and actions of strict right. Those of good faith are the following; viz. actions of buying and selling, letting and hiring; of affairs transacted, of mandate, deposit, partnership, tutelage, loan, mortgage; of the partition of an inheritance, or the division of any thing or things, which belong in common to several persons; also actions in prescribed words, which are either estimatory, or derived from commutation; and lastly the demand of an inheritance: for although it hath long been doubtful to what class this action belonged; our constitution hath clearly numbered it among actions of good faith.

De rei uxoriæ actione, in ex stipulatu actionem transfusa.

§ XXIX. Fuerat antea et rei uxoriæ actio una ex bonæ fidei judiciis: sed cum, pleniorum esse ex stipulatu actionem invenientes, omnesque, quod res uxoriz antea hæ-

bebat, cum multis divisionibus, in actionem ex stipulatu, quæ de dotibus exigendis proponitur, transtulerimus, merito rei uxoriæ actione sublata, ex stipulatu actio, quæ pro ea introducta est, naturam bonæ fidei judicii tantum in exactione dotis meruit, ut bonæ fidei sit; sed et tacitam ei dedimus hypothecam. Præferri autem aliis creditoribus in hypothecis tunc censuimus, cum ipsa mulier de dote suâ experiatur, cujus solius providentiâ hoc induximus.

tion to be more full and advantageous, we abrogated the action rei uxoriæ, and transferred all its effects, with the addition of many other powers, to the action of stipulation given to recover marriage portions, we then not only thought, that this action of stipulation, as far as it related to marriage portions, deserved to be numbered with actions of good faith, but we also added to it by implication, the effect of a mortgage: and we judged it proper, that women, in whose sole behalf we have thus ordained, should be preferred to all other creditors by mortgage, whenever they themselves sue for their marriage portions.

De potestate judicis in judicio bonæ fidei, et de compensationibus.

§ XXX. In bonæ fidei judiciis, libera potestas permitti videtur judici ex bono et æquo æstimandi, quantum actori restitui debeat. In quo et illud continetur, ut, si quid invicem præstare actorem oporteat, eo compensato, in reliquum is, cum quo actum est, debeat condemnari. Sed et in stricti juris judiciis ex rescripto divi Marci, opposita doli mali exceptione, compensatio inducebatur. Sed nostra constitutio easdem compensationes, quæ jure aperto nituntur, latius introduxit, ut actiones ipso jure minuant, sive in rem, sive in personam, sive alias quascunque; exceptâ solâ depositi actione, cui, aliquid compensationis nomine opponi, sanè iniquum esse credimus; ne, sub prætextu com-

§ 30. In all actions of good faith a full power is given to the judge of calculating, according to the rules of justice and equity, how much ought to be restored to be plaintiff; and of course, when the plaintiff is found to be indebted to the defendant in a less sum, it is in the power of the judge to allow a compensation, and to condemn the defendant in the payment of the difference; and, even in actions of strict right, the emperor Marcus introduced a compensation by opposing an exception of fraud: but we have extended compensations much farther by our constitution, when the debt of the defendant is evident; so that actions of strict right, real, personal, or of whatever kind may be dimin-pensationis, depositarum rerum quis exactione defraudetur.

ished by compensation; except only an action of deposit, against which we have not judged it proper to permit any compensation to be alleged, lest the pretence of compensation should give color and encouragement to fraud.

De actionibus arbitrariis.

§ XXXI. Præterea, actiones quasdam arbitrarias, id est, ex arbitrio judicis pendentes, appellamus; in quibus nisi arbitrio judicis is, cum quo agitur, actori satisfaciat, veluti rem restituat, vel exhibeat, vel solvat, vel ex noxali causâ servum dedat, condemnari debeat.
Sed istæ actiones tam in rem, quam, in personam, inveniuntur; in rem;
veluti Publiciana, Serviana de re-bus coloni, quasi Serviana, quæ c-tiam hypothecaria vocatur; in personam; veluti quibus de eo agitur, quod vi aut metûs causâ, aut dolo malo, factum est; item cum id, quod certo loco promissum est, pe-titur: ad exhibendum quoque ac-tio ex arbitrio judicis pendet. In his enim actionibus, et cæteris similibus, permittitur judici ex bono et æquo, secundum cujusque rei, de quâ actum est, naturam, æstimare, quemadmodum actori satisfi-eri oporteat.

§ 31. Some actions moreover we call arbitrary, as depending upon the discretion of the judge: for, in these, if the party do not at the decree of the court, exhibit whatever is required, restore the thing in litigation, pay the value of it, or give up a slave in consequence of an action of mal-feasance, he ought to be condemned. Of these arbitrary actions some are real and some personal: real, as the action Publiciana, Serviana, and quasi Serviana, which is likewise called hypothecary:
others are personal, as those, by which a suit is commenced on account of something done by force, fear or fraud; or on account of something, which was promised to be paid or restored in a certain place; and the action ad exhibendum, which was given to the intent, that something particular should be exhibited, is also of the same kind:
in these and the like actions, the judge may determine, according to equity and the nature of the thing sued for, in what manner and proportion the plaintiff ought to receive satisfaction.

De pluris petitione.

§ XXXIII. Si quis agens intentione suâ plus complexus fuerit, quam ad eum pertineat, causâ cadebat, id est, rem amittebat; nec facîle in integrum restituebatur à prætore, nisi minor erat xxv annis; huic enim, sicut in aliis causis, causâ cognitâ, succurrebatur, si lapsus juventute fuerat; ita et in hac causâ succurri solitum erat. Sanè, si tam magna causa justi erroris interveniebat, ut etiam constantissimus quisque labi posset, etiam majori xxv annis succurrebatur; veluti si quis totum legatum petierit, post deinde prolati fuerint codicilli, quibus aut pars legati adempta sit, aut quibusdam aliis legata data sint; quæ efficiebant, ut plus petisse videretur petitor, quam dodrantem; atque ideò lege Falcidiâ legata minuebantur. Plus autem quatuor modis petitur; re, tempore, loco, et causâ. Re, veluti si quis pro decem aureis, quæ ei debebantur, viginti petierit; aut si is, cujus ex parte res est, totam eam, vel majorem partem, suam csse intenderit. § 33. Formerly, if a plaintiff claimed more than his due, he failed in his cause; that is, he lost his debt: nor was it easy for him to be reinstated by the prætor, unless he was under the age of 25 years: for in this, as well as in other cases, it was usual to aid minors, if it appeared that the error was owing to their youth; and if the error was such, that a skilful person might have been led into it, then even persons of full age might have been aided by the magistrate: for example, if a legatee had demanded his whole legacy, and codicils were afterwards (unexpectedly) produced, by which a part of it was revoked, or new legacies bequeathed to other persons, so that the plaintiff appeared to have demanded more than three fourths of his legacy; because it was subject to a diminution by the law falcidia; yet, in such case, the legatee would be relieved. A man may demand more than what is due to him in four several respects, viz. in respect to the thing itself; to time; to place; and to the cause. In respect to the thing; as when the plaintiff, instead of ten aurei, due to him, demands twenty: or if, when he owns but part of some particular thing, he claims the whole

tur. Loco plus petitur, veluti cum quis id, quod certo loco sibi dari stipulatus est, alio loco petit sine commemoratione illius loci, in quo sibi dari stipulatus est; verba gratiâ, si is, qui ita stipulatus fuerit, Ephesi dare spondes; Romæ purè intendat, sibi dari oportere. Ideò autem plus petere intelligitur, quia utilitatem, quam haberet promissor, si Ephesi solveret, adimit ei pura intentione: propter quam causam alio loco petenti arbitraria actio proponitur; in qua scilicet ratio habetur utilitatis, quæ promissori competitura fuisset, si illo loco solveret, qua se soluturum spondit. Quæ utilitas plerumque in mercibus maxima invenitur; veluti vino, oleo, frumento, quæ per singulas regiones diversa habent pretia. Sed et pecuniæ numeratæ non in omnibus regionibus sub iisdem usuris scænantur. Si quis tamen Ephesi petat, id est, eo loco petat, in quo, ut sibi detur, stipulatus est, purâ actione rectè agit: idque etiam prætor demonstrat; scilicet, quia utilitas solvendi, salva est promissori. Huic autem, qui loco plus petere intelligitur, proximus est, qui causâ plus petit: ut ecce, si quis ita à te stipuletur, hominem Stichum, aut decem aureos, dare spondes; deinde alterum petat, veluti hominem tantum, aut decem aureos tantum. Ideò autem plus petere intelligitur, quia in eo genere stipulationis promissoris est electio, utrum pecuniâ, an hominem,olvere malit: qui igitur pecuniâ tantum, vel ho-or a greater share than he is entitled to. In respect to time, as when the plaintiff makes his demand before the day of payment, or before the time of the performance of a condition; for, as he, who does not pay so soon as he ought, is always understood to pay less than he ought, so, by parity of reasoning, whoever sues prematurely demands more than his due. In respect to place; as when any person requires that something stipulated to be delivered at a certain place, should be delivered at some other place, without noticing the place originally stipulated; as if Titius, should stipulate in these words; do you promise to give such a particular thing at Ephesus? and should afterwards declare upon a contract to deliver at Rome; for Titius would thus be understood to demand more than his due, by endeavouring to deprive his debtor of the advantage he might have had in paying or delivering at Ephesus. It is on this account, that an arbitrary action is given to him, who would demand payment in a place different from that agreed upon; for, in that action, the advantage, which might have accrued to the debtor, by paying his debt in the place stipulated, is taken into consideration. This advantage is generally found the greatest in merchandise; as in wine, oil, corn, &c. which, in different places, bear different prices; and, indeed, money itself is not lent everywhere at the same interest. But, if a man would minem tantum, sibi dari oportere intendit, eripit electionem adversario, et eo modo suam quidem conditionem meliorem facit, adversarii verò sui deteriozem. Quà de causâ talis in eâ re prodita est actio, ut quis intendat hominem Stichum aut aureos decem sibi dari oportere, id est, ut eodem modo peteret, quo stipulatus est. Præterea, si quis generaliter hominem stipulatus sit, et specialiter Stichum petat : aut generaliter vinum stipulatus sit, et specialiter campanum petat ; aut generaliter purpuram stipulatus sit, deinde specialiter Tyriam petat ; plus petere intelligitur, quia electionem adversario tollit cui stipulationis jure liberum fuit aliud solvere, quam quod peteretur. Quinetiam licet villissimum sit, quod quis petat ; nihilominus plus petere intelligitur ; quia sæpè accidit, ut promissori facilius sit aliud solvere, quod majoris pretii est. Sed hæc quidem antea in usu fuerant : postea vero lex Zenoniana, et nostra, rem coarctavit. Et, si quidem tempore plus fuerit petitum, quid statui oporteat, Zenonis divæ memoriæ loquitur constitutio. Sin autem quantitate, vel alio modo, plus fuerit petitum, in omne, si quod fortè damnum ex hac causa acciderit ei, con-sue the performance of a stipulation at Ephesus, or at any other place, where it was agreed, that it should be performed, he may legally commence his suit by a pure action, that is without mentioning the place ; and this the prætor allows of, inas-much as the debtor does not lose any advantage. Next to him, who demands more than his due, in regard to place, is he, who demands more than his due, in regard to the cause ; as for instance, if Titius stipulate thus with you : do you promise to give either your slave Stichus or ten aurei ? and then demand either the slave specially, or the money specially ; in this case Titius would be adjudged to have demanded more than his due, the right of election being in you by whom the promise was made ; and therefore, when Titius sues either for the money specially, or for the slave, he takes away your election, and betters his own condition, by making yours worse : and it is upon this account that an action has been given, by which the party agent or plaintiff may make his demand conformable to the stipulation, and claim either the slave or the money. And further, if a man should stipulate, generally, that wine, purple or a slave, should be given him, and should afterwards sue for the wine of Campania, the purple of Tyre, or the slave Stichus in particular, he would then be adjudged to have demanded more than his due; for the power of election would thus be taken from the adverse party, who was not bound by the stipulation to pay the thing specifically demanded; and although, in any of these cases, the thing sued for should be of little or no value, yet the demandant would be thought to claim more than his due; because it is often easier for the debtor to pay the thing stipulated, although it may be of greater value than the thing demanded. Such was the law according to the ancient practice, in regard to an over-demand, viz. that the demandant should lose even that which was really due to him. But this law has been greatly restrained by the constitution of Zeno the emperor, and by our own; for, if more than is due be demanded in respect of time, the judge must be directed in his proceeding by the constitution of that emperor of glorious memory; but, if in respect of quantity, or on any other account, then the loss suffered by him, upon whom the demand is made, must be recompensed, as we have before declared, by a decree of triple damages against the plaintiff.

De minoris summæ petitione.

him; he acts safely; for the judge, in consequence of Zeno's constitution, may nevertheless condemn the adverse party, under the same process, to the payment or delivery of all, which appears of right to belong to the plaintiff.

Si aliud pro alio petatur.

§ XXXV. Si quis aliud pro alio intenderit, nihil eum periclitari placet, sed in eodem judicio, cognita veritate, errorem suum corrigere ei permittitur veluti si is, qui hominem Stichum petere deberet, Erotem petierit; aut si quis ex testamento dari sibi oportere intenderit, quod ex stipulatu debetur.

§ 35. When a plaintiff demands one thing instead of another, he risks nothing by the mistake, which he is allowed to correct under one and the same process: as if a litigant should demand the slave Erotas, instead of the slave Stichus, or should claim, as due by testament, what is found to be due upon stipulation.

Divisio sexta. De peculio.

§ XXXVI. Sunt præterea quædam actiones, quibus non semper solidum, quod nobis debetur, persequimur, sed modo solidum persequimur, modo minus; ut ecce, si in peculium filii servive agamus: nam, si non minus in peculio sit, quam persequimur, in solidum dominus paterve condemnat; si verò minus inveniatur, eatenus condemnat judex, quatenus in peculio sit. Quemadmodum autem peculium intelligi debeat, suo ordine proponemus.

§ 36. There are also some actions, by which we do not always sue for the whole, which is due to us, but for the whole, or less, as it proves to be most expedient; thus, when a suit is brought against the peculium of a son or slave, if the peculium be sufficient to answer the demand, the father or master must be condemned to pay the whole debt; but, if the peculium be not sufficient, the judge can condemn the defendants only to the extent of its value. We will hereafter explain, in its proper place, what we mean by the term peculium.

De repetitione dotis.

§ XXXVII. Item, si de dote in judicio mulier agat, placet, eatenus maritum condemnari debere, qua-

§ 37. Also, if a woman bring suit for the restitution of her marriage portion, the man must be condemned tenus facere possit; id est, quatenus facultates ejus patiuntur. Itaque, si dotis quantitati concurrant facultates ejus, in solidum damnatur; sin minus, in tantum, quantum facere potest. Propter retentionem quoque dotis repetitio minuitur; nam ob impensas, in res dotales factas, marito quasi retentio concessa est, quia ipso jure necessariis sumptibus dos minuitur; sicut ex latioribus digestorum libris cognoscere licet.

to pay as far as he is able; i. e. as far as his ability or solvency will permit: therefore, if the portion demanded and the ability of the man be equal, he must be adjudged to satisfy the whole demand; but, if his ability be less than the claim, he must nevertheless be condemned to pay as much as he is able. But the claim of a woman may in this case be lessened by a retention; for the husband is permitted to retain an equivalent for whatever he hath necessarily expended upon the estate given with his wife, as a marriage portion; but this will fully appear by a perusal of the digests, to which the reader is referred.

De actione advrsus parentem, patronum, socium, et donatorem.

§ XXXVIII. Sed et, si quis cum parente suo patronove agat, item si socius cum socio judicio societatis agat, non plus actor consequitur, quam adversarius ejus facere potest. Idem est, si quis ex donatione sua convenitur.

§ 38. If any person sue his parent, patron, or partner, the plaintiff cannot obtain sentence for a greater sum, than his adversary is able to pay; it is the same when a donor is sued on account of his donation.

De compensationibus.

§ XXXIX. Compensationes quoque oppositæ plerumque efficiunt, ut minus quisque consequatur, quam ei debeatur. Nam ex bono et æquo habitâ ratione ejus, quod invicem actorem ex eadem causâ præstare oportet, poterit judex in reliquum eum, cum quod actum est, condemnare; sicut jam dictum est.

§ 39. When a compensation is alleged by the defendant, it generally happens, that the plaintiff recovers less than his demand; for it is in the power of the judge, as we have before declared, to give an equitable deduction from the demand of the plaintiff of whatever he owes to the defendant, and to condemn the defendant to the payment only of the remainder; as it hath already been observed.

De eo, qui bonis cessit.

§ XL. Cum eo quoque, qui creditoribus suis bonis cessit, si postea aliquid adquisierit, quod idoneum emolumentum habeat, ex integro in id, quod facere potest, creditores experiunter. Inhumanum enim erat, spoliatum fortunæ suis in solidum damnari.

§ 40. Creditors also, to whom a debtor hath made a cession of his goods, may afterwards, if he hath gained any considerable acquisition, bring a fresh suit against him, for as much as he is able to pay, but not more; for it would be inhuman to condemn a man in solidum, who hath already been deprived of his whole fortune.

TITULUS SEPTIMUS.

QUOD CUM EO, QUI IN ALIENA POTESTATE EST, NEGOTIUM GESTUM ESSE DICITUR.

D. xiv. T. 5. C. iv. T. 16.

Scopus et nexus.

QUIA tamen superius mentionem habuimus de actione, quâ in peculium filiorum servorumque agitur, opus est, ut de hac actione et de cæteris, quæ eorundem nomine in parentes dominosve dari solent, diligentius admoneamus. Et quia, sive cum servis negotium gestum sit, sive cum iis, qui in potestate parentum sunt, eadem fere jura servantur, ne verbosa fiat disputatio, dirigamus sermonem in personam servi dominique, idem intellecturi de liberis quoque et parentibus, quorum in potestate sunt; nam, si quid in his propriè servetur, separatim ostendemus.

We have already mentioned the action which may be brought against the peculium, or separate estate of a son or slave; it is now necessary to speak of it more fully, and also of some other actions, which are allowed to children and slaves against their parents and masters. But, as the law is almost the same, whether an affair be transacted with a slave, or with one who is under the power of his parent, to avoid prolixity we will treat only of slaves and their masters, leaving what we say of them to be understood also of parents and children under power; for whatever is peculiar to children and parents, we shall point out separately.

De actione quod jussu.

§ I. Si igitur jussu domini cum servo negotium gestum erit, in solidum prætor adversus dominum actionem pollicetur; scilicet quia is, qui ita contrahit, fidem domini sequi videtur.

§ 1. For any business negotiated by a slave acting under the command of his master, the prætor will give an action against the master for the whole value of the transaction; for whoever contracts with a slave, is presumed to have done it on a confidence in the master.

De exercitoria et institoria actione.

§ II. Eâdem ratione prætor duas alias in solidum actiones pollicetur; quarum altera exercitoria, altera institoria, appellatur. Exercitoria tunc habet locum, cum quis servum suum magistrum navi præposuerit, et quid cum eo, ejus rei gratiâ, cui præpositus erit, contractum fuerit. Ideò autem exercitoria vocatur, quia exercitor is appellatur, ad quem quotidianus navis quæstus pertinet. Institoria tunc locum habet, cum quis tabernæ fortè, aut cuilibet negotiationi, servum suum præposuerit, et quid cum eo, ejus rei causa, cui præpositus erit, contractum fuerit. Ideò autem institoria appellatur, quia, qui negotiationibus præponuntur, institores vocantur. Istas tamen duas actiones prætor reddit, et si liberum quis hominem, aut alienum servum, navi aut tabernæ aut tabernæ aut cuilibet negotiationi præposuerit; scilicet, quia eadem æquitatis ratio etiam eo casu interveniat.

§ 2. The prætor also gives two other actions in solidum upon the same motive; the one exercitoria, the other institoria. The action exercitoria takes place, when a master hath made his slave commander of a vessel, and some contract hath been entered into with the slave in that capacity. This action is named exercitoria, because he to whom the daily profits of a ship belong, is called exercitor. The action institoria is made use of, when a master hath given his slave the management of a shop, or committed any particular affair to his direction, on account whereof some one hath been induced to enter into a contract with the slave; and this action is called institoria, because all persons, to whom a negotiation is committed, are denominated institores. The prætor hath likewise been induced, by the same equity, to give these two actions against any man, who employs a free person, or the slave of another, in the management of a ship, a warehouse, or any particular affair.

De tributoria.

§ III. Introduxit et aliam actionem prætor, quæ tributoria vocatur; namque, si servus in peculii mercede, sciente domino, negotietur, et quid cum eo ejus rei causâ contractum erit, ita prætor jus dicit, ut, quicquid in his mercibus erit, quodque inde receptum erit, id inter dominum, si quid ei debetur, et cæteros creditores, pro ratâ portione distribuatur: et ideo tributoria vocatur, quia ipsi domino distributionem prætor permittit. Nam, si quis ex creditoribus queratur, quasi minus ei tributum sit, quam oportuerit, hanc ei actionem accommodat, quæ tributoria appellatur.

§ 3. The prætor hath also introduced another action called tributoria; for, if a slave with the knowledge of his master, trade upon his peculium, and contracts are thereupon made with him, the prætor ordains, that the merchandize, or money, arising from his traffic, shall be distributed between the master, (if he has any just claim,) and the rest of the creditors in a ratable proportion; and it is called tributoria because the master himself is permitted to make the distribution: but, if any creditor complain, that too small a share hath been allowed him, the prætor will give this action, called tributoria.

De peculio, et de in rem verso.

§ IV. Præterea introducta est actio de peculio, deque eo, quod in rem domini versum erit; ut quamvis sine voluntate domini negotium gestum erit, tamen, sive quid in rem ejus versum fuerit, id totum præstare debeat; sive quid non sit in rem ejus versum, id eatenus præstare debeat, quatenus peculium patitur. In rem autem domini versum intelligitur, quicquid necessario in rem ejus impenderit servus, veluti si mutuatus pecuniam creditoribus ejus solverit, aut ædificia ruentia fulserit, aut familiæ frumentum emerit, vel etiam fundum, aut quamlibet aliam rem necessariam mercatus erit. Itaque, si ex decem puta aureis, quos servus tuus à Titio mutuo accepit, creditori tuo quinque aureos solve- rit, reliquos verò quinque quolibet modo consumpserit, pro quinque quidem in solidum damnari debes; pro cæteris verò quinque eatenus, quatenus in peculio sit. Ex quo scilicet apparet, si toti decem aurei in rem tuam versi fuerint, totos decem aureos Titium consequi posse; licet enim una sit actio, quæ de peculio, deque eo, quod in rem domini versum sit, agitur; tamen duas habet condemnationes. Itaque iudex, apud quem de eâ actione agitur, ante dispicere solet, an in rem domini versum sit; nec aliter ad peculii æstimationem transit, quam aut nihil in rem domini versum intelligatur, aut non totum. Cum autem quaeritur, quantum in peculio sit, antededucitur, quicquid servus domino, eivè, qui in potestate ejus sit, debet; et, quod superest, id solum peculium intelligitur. Aliquando tamen id, quod ei debet servus, qui in potestate domini sit, non deducitur ex peculio; veluti si is in ipsius peculio sit; quod eo pertinet, ut, si quid vicario suo servus debeat, id ex peculio ejus non deducatur.

§ 4. The action concerning a peculium, and things converted to the profit of the master, hath likewise been introduced by the prætor; for although business hath been transacted by a slave, without consent of his master, yet, where the profit arising is converted to the master's benefit, he ought to be answerable: and, although the master should derive no emolument, he ought to be answerable to the amount of the peculium. Whenever any thing is necessarily expended by a slave upon the master's affairs, it is understood to be a conversion to his benefit; as if a slave who hath borrowed money, should pay the debts of his master, repair his buildings, purchase an es-

tate, provision, or any other useful thing: therefore, if out of ten aurei, borrowed by a slave, he should pay only five to his master's creditors, and squander the rest, the master would be liable to the payment in solidum of the five aurei, but, as to the other five, he could be obliged to pay only so much as the peculium would answer: hence it will appear, that if all the ten aurei had been converted to the master's emolument, the lender might have recovered the whole; for although it is one and the same action, against a peculium, and for the recovery of what a slave hath converted to his master's use, yet it carries with it two different condemnations: hence, the judge does not estimate the value of the peculium, until he has examined how much if any hath been expended for the service of the master: but, when the judge proceeds to the valuation of the peculium, a deduction is made of what the slave owes to his master, or to any other under the power of his master, and the remainder only is considered as peculium. But it sometimes happens that what one slave owes to another under the power of the same master, is not deducted; as when the slave who is the creditor, composes a part of his debtor's peculium; for, if a slave be indebted to his vicarial slave, this debt cannot be deducted from the peculium.

De concursu dictarum actionum.

§ V. Cæterum dubium non est, quin is quoque, qui jussu domini

§ 5. It is nevertheless certain that he, who hath contracted with contraxerit, cuique institoria vel exercitoria actio competit, de peculio, deque eo, quod in rem domini versum est, agere possit. Sed erit stultissimus, si, omissâ actione, quâ facillimè solidum ex contractu consequi possit, se ad difficultatem perducatur probandi, in rem domini versum esse, vel habere servum peculium, et tantum habere, ut solidum sibi solvi possit. Is quoque, cui tributoria actio competit, æquè de peculio, et de in rem verso, agere potest; sed sanè huic modo tributoria expedit agere, modo de peculio, et de in rem verso. Tributoria idè expedit agere, quia in ea domini conditio præcipua non est; id est, quod domino debetur, non deducitur, sed ejusdem juris est dominus, cujus et cæteri creditores; at, in actione de peculio, ante deducitur, quod domino debetur; et in id, quod reliquum est, creditori dominus condemnatur. Rursus de peculio idè expedit agere, quod in hac actione totius peculii ratio habetur; at in tributoriâ ejus tantum, quo negotiatur; et potest quisque tertiâ fortè parte peculii, aut quartâ, vel etiam minimâ, negotiari; majorem autem partem in prædiis aut scænebri pecunia habere. Prout ergo expedit, ita quisque vel hanc actionem, vel illam, eligere debet. Certè, qui potest probare, in rem domini a slave at the command of the master and is intitled either to the action institoria or exercitoria, is also intitled to the action de peculio, and de in rem verso: but it would be highly imprudent in any party to relinquish an action, by which he could easily recover his whole demand, and, by recurring to another, reduce himself to the difficulty of proving, that the money he lent to the slave was converted to the use of the master, or that the slave is possessed of a peculium sufficient to answer the whole debt. He also, to whom the action tributoria is given, is equally intitled to the action de peculio, and de in rem verso; but it is expedient, in some cases, to use the one, and in some cases the other: but the action tributoria is generally preferable, because, in this, the condition of the master is not principally regarded; i. e. there is no previous deduction made of what is due to him, his title being esteemed in the same light with that of other creditors; but, in the action de peculio, the debt due to the master is first deducted, and he is condemned only to distribute the remainder among the creditors. Again, in some cases, it may be more convenient to bring the action de peculio, because it affects the whole peculium, whereas the action tribu- versum esse, de in rem verso agere debet.

toria regards only so much of it as hath been made use of in traffic; and it is possible, that a slave may have trafficked only with a third, a fourth, or some very small part, and that the rest consists of lands, slaves, or money, lent at interest. Therefore it behooves every man to choose that remedy, which may be most beneficial to him; but, if the creditor can prove a conversion to the use of the master, he ought to proceed by the action de in rem verso.

De filiis-familias.

§ VI. Quæ diximus de servo et de domino, eadem intelligimus et de filio et filiâ, et nepote et nepte, et patre avove, cujus in potestate sunt.

§ 6. What we have said, concerning a slave and his master, takes place equally in regard to children under power, and their parents.

De senatus-consulto Macedoniano.

§ VII. Illud propriè servatur in eorum persona, quod senatus-consultum Macedonianum prohibuit mutuas pecunias dari eis, qui in potestate parentis sunt: et ei, qui crediderit, denegatur actio tam adversus ipsum filium filiamve, nepotem neptemve, (sivè adhuc in potestate sint, sivè morte parentis, vel emancipatione, suæ potestatis esse cæperint,) quam adversus patrem avumvè, sivè eos habeat adhuc in potestate, sivè emancipaverit. Quæ idè senatus prospexit, quia sæpe onerati ære alieno crepitarum pecuniarum, quas in luxuriam consumeabant, vitæ parentum insidiabantur.

§ 7. But children are, in some respects, particularly regarded by the Macedonian decree of the senate, which prohibits money to be lent them, while under power of their parents; for creditors are not suffered to bring any action, either against the children, even after they are emancipated, or against their parents, who emancipated them. This caution was adopted by the senate, because young heirs, loaded with debts contracted for luxury, have laid snares against the lives of their parents.

De actione directa in patrem vel dominum.

§ VIII. Illud in summa admonendi sumus, id, quod jussu patris

§ 8. In fine, we may observe, that whatever hath been contracted dominive contractum fuerit, quodque in rem ejus versum erit, directo quoque posse à patre dominove condici, tanquam si principaliter cum ipso negotium gestum esset. Ei quoque, qui exercitoria vel institutoria actione tenetur, directo posse condici placet, quia hujus quoque jussu contractum intelligitur.

for at the command of a parent or master, and converted to their use, may be recovered by a direct action against the father or master in the same manner, as if the contract had been originally made with them. And he, who is liable to the action institutoria or exhibitoria, may also be sued by a direct action, inasmuch as the contract is presumed to have been made at his command.

TITULUS OCTAVUS.

DE NOXALIBUS ACTIONIBUS.

D. ix. T. 4. C. iii. T. 41.

De servis. Summa.

EX maleficiis servorum, veluti si furtum fecerint, aut bona rapuerint, aut damnum dederint, aut injuriam commiserint, noxales actiones proditæ sunt; quibus domino damnato permittitur aut litis estimationem sufferre, aut ipsum hominem noxæ dedere.

Noxal actions are given on account of the offences of slaves; as when a slave commits a theft or robbery, or does any damage or injury. And, when the master or owner of a slave is condemned upon this account, it is in his option either to pay the estimate of the damage done, or deliver up his slave as a recompence.

Quid sit noxa et noxia.

§ I. Noxa autem est ipsum corpus, quod nocuit; id est, servus: noxia ipsum malefium, veluti furtum, rapina, damnum, injuria.

§ 1. Noxa is the slave, the offender. Noxia is the offence, whether theft, damage, rapine or injury.

Ratio harum actionum.

§ II. Summâ autem ratione permissum est noxæ deditioe fungi; namque erat iniquum, nequiliam eorum ultra ipsorum corporum dominis damnosam esse.

§ 2. It is reasonably permitted to the master to deliver up the offending slave: for it would be unjust to make the master liable, beyond the body of the slave himself.

Effectus noxæ deditiois.

§ III. Dominus, noxali iudicio servi sui nomine conventus, servum actori noxæ dedendo liberatur; nec minus in perpetuum ejus servi dominium à domino transfertur: sin autem damnum ei, cui deditus est, servus resarcierit quæsitâ pecuniâ, auxilio prætoris, inuito domino, manumittitur.

§ 3. In a noxal action brought against a master, he may clear himself by giving up his slave to the plaintiff, in whom the property will become absolutely vested; but, if the slave can satisfy his new master in money for the damage, he may be manumitted on application to the prætor, though his new master should be unwilling.

De origine harum actionum.

§ IV. Sunt autem constitutæ noxales actiones, aut legibus, aut edicto prætoris; legibus, veluti furti ex lege xii tabularum, damni injuriæ ex lege Aquilia; edicto prætoris, veluti injuriarum, et vi bonorum raptorum.

§ 4. Noxal actions are appointed either by the laws, or by the edict of the prætor. By the laws, as for theft, by the law of the twelve tables; for injurious damage, by the law Aquilia; for injuries and goods taken by force, by the prætor's edict.

Qui conveniuntur noxali actione.

§ V. Omnis autem noxalis actio capit sequitur; nam, si servus tuus noxam commiserit, quamdiu in tuâ potestate sit, tecum actio est: si autem in alterius potestatem pervenerit, cum illo incipit actio esse: at, si manumissus fuerit, directo ipse tenetur, et extinguitur noxæ deditio. Ex diverso quoque directa actio noxalis esse incipit; nam, si liber homo noxiam commiserit, et is servus tuus esse cœpe-

§ 5. No real actions follow the person; thus, the master is liable while the slave belongs to him; if the slave become subject to a new master, then he becomes liable; but, if the slave be manumitted, he may be prosecuted by a direct action; and the noxæ deditio, is extinguished. But an action, which was at first direct, may afterwards become noxal; for if a free man, guilty of malfeasance, become a slave, (and our rit, (quod quibusdam casibus effici primo libro tradidimus,) incipit tecum esse noxalis actio, quæ ante directa fuisset.

first book shews in what cases this may happen,) then the direct action against the slave, is changed into a noxal action against the master.

Si servus Domino noxiam commiserit, vel contra.

§ VI. Si servus domino noxiam commiserit, actio nulla nascitur; namque inter dominum et eum, qui in potestate ejus est, nulla obligatio nasci potest. Ideòque, si in alienam potestatem servus pervenerit, aut manumissus fuerit, neque cum ipso, neque cum eo, cujus nunc in potestate sit, agi potest: unde, si alienus servus tibi noxiam commiserit, et is postea in potestate tuâ esse cœperit, interdicitur actio; quia in eum casum deducta sit, in quo consistere non potuit. Ideòque, licet exierit de tuâ potestate, agere non potes; quemadmodum si dominus in servum suum aliquid commiserit, nec, si manumissus aut alienatus fuerit servus, ullam actionem contra dominum habere potest.

§ 6. Although a slave commit mal-feasance against his master, yet no action is given; for no obligation can arise between a master and his slave; and if the slave pass under the power of another master, or is manumitted, no action lies either against him or his new master; whence it follows, that, if the slave of another should commit mal-feasance against you, and become your slave, the action is forbidden: for the case has arisen in which it cannot be brought. Therefore, although a slave hath passed out of your power, you cannot sue him: neither can a slave, who hath been aliened or manumitted, bring any action against his late master.

De filiis-familiarum.

§ VII. Sed veteres quidem hoc in filiis-familiarum masculis et fœminis admisere; nova autem hominum conversatio hujusmodi asperitatem rectè respuendam esse existimavit, et ab usu communi hoc penitus recessit. Quis enim patiatur, filium suum, et maxime filiam, in noxam alii dari? ut penè per filii corpus pater magis quam filius perichitetur; cum in filiabus etiam pudicitiae favor hoc benè excludat.

§ 7. The ancients indeed admitted this law of the forfeiture of the person, even in cases of children, whether male or female: but later times have rightly thought, that such rigorous proceeding, ought to be exploded; and it hath therefore passed wholly into disuse: for who could suffer a son, and more especially a daughter, to be delivered up as a forfeiture to a stranger? for, in the case of a son, the punishment of the father would be greater, than that of the son; and, in the case of a daughter, the rules of modesty forbid the practice. It hath therefore prevailed, that noxal actions should apply to slaves only: and, we find it often laid down in the old books, that sons of a family may be sued for their own misdeeds.

De actione, si quadrupes ex l. xii. tab.

ANIMALIUM nomine, quæ ratione carent, si qua lasciviâ, aut pavore, aut feritete, pauperiem fecerint, noxalis actio lege xii tab. prodita est: quæ animalia, si noxæ dedantur, proficiunt reo ad liberationem; quia ita lex xii tabularum scripta est, ut puta, si equus calcitrosus calce percusserit, aut bos, cornu petere solitus, cornu petierit. Hæc autem actio in iis, quæ contra naturam moventur, locum habet; cæterum, si genitalis sit feritas, cessat actio. Denique, si ursus fugerit à domino, et sic nocuerit, non potest quondam dominus conveniri, quia desiit dominus esse, ubi fera evasit. Pauperis autem est damnum sinè injuriâ facientis datum; nec enim potest animal injuriam

A noxal action is given by the law of the 12 tables when damage is done by brute animals, through wantonness, fright, or furiousness; and when delivered up in atonement for the damage done, the defendant is cleared from the action: for it is thus written in the law of the 12 tables, if a horse, apt to kick, should strike with his foot; or if an ox, accustomed to gore, should wound any man with his horns, &c. But a noxal action takes place only when animals act contrary to their nature; for, when the ferocity of a beast is innate, no action can be given; so that, if a bear break loose from his master, and mischief be done, the master cannot be sued; for he ceased to be the master as soon as the beast escaped. The word pauperies denotes a damage, by which no injury is intended; for an animal, void of reason, cannot be said to have committed an injury. Thus much as to noxal actions

De actione ædilitia, concurrente cum actione de pauperie.

§ I Cæterum sciendum est, ædilitio edicto prohiberi nos canem, verrem, aprum, ursum, leonem, ibi habere, qua vulgò iter fit; et, si adversus ea factum erit, et nocitum libero homini esse dicatur, quod bonum et æquum judici videtur, tanti dominus condemnetur; cæterarum verò rerum, quanti damnum datum sit, dupli. Præter has autem ædilitias actiones, et de pauperie locum habebit; nunquam enim actiones, præsertim pœnales, de eâdem re concurrentes, alia aliam consumit.

§ 1. It must be observed, that the edict of the Edile forbids any man to keep a dog, a boar, a bear, or a lion, where there is a public passage or highway: and if this prohibition be disobeyed, and any freeman receive hurt, the master of the beast may be condemned at the discretion of the judge; yet, in other cases of damage, the condemnation must be in double the amount. Besides the Edilitian action, an action for damage, called pauperies, may also take place against the same person: for actions, especially penal actions, may concur on account of the same thing, without the one destroying the other.

DE IIS, PER QUOS AGERE POSSUMUS.

Per quos agere liceat.

NUNC admonendi sumus, agere, posse quemlibet hominem aut suo nomine aut alieno. Alieno, veluti procuratorio, tutorio, curatorio; cum olim in usu fuisset, alterius

We must now remark, that any man may commence a suit, in his own name, or in that of another, as of a proctor, a tutor, or a curator; but anciently, one person could not nomine agi non posse, nisi pro populo, pro libertate, pro tutelâ. Præterea lege Hostiliâ permissum erat furti agere eorum nomine, qui apud hostes essent, aut reipublicæ causâ abessent, quivè in eorum cujus tutelâ essent. Sed, quia hoc non minimam incommoditatem habebat, quod alieno nomine neque agere, neque excipere actionem licebat, cœperunt homines per procuratores litigare. Nam et morbus et ætas et necessaria peregrinatio, itemque alie multæ causæ, sæpe hominibus impedimento sunt, quo minus rem suam ipsi exequi possint.

sue in the name of another, unless in a public cause, in a cause to establish freedom, or in a cause of tutelage. It was afterwards permitted by the law Hostilia, that an action of theft might be brought in the names of captives: or of persons absent upon the affairs of the republic; or who were under the care of tutors. But, as it was found in later times to be highly inconvenient, that any man should be prohibited, either from suing, or defending in the name of another, it by degrees became a practice to sue by proctors; for ill health, old age, the necessity of travelling, and many other causes, continually prevent mankind from being able to prosecute their own affairs in person.

Quibus modis procurator constituatur.

§ I. Procurator neque certis verbis, neque præsentis semper adversario, imò et plerumque eo ignorante, constituitur: cuicumque enim permiseris rem tuam agere, aut defendere, is tuus procurator intelligitur.

§ 1 A proctor may be appointed without any certain form of words, nor is the presence of the adverse party required; indeed it is generally done without his knowledge. Whoever is employed to sue or defend for another, is understood to be a proctor.

Quibus modis tutores vel curatores constituuntur.

§ II. Tutores et curatores quemadmodum constituuntur, primo libro expositum est.

§ 2. We have already explained in the first book, how tutors and curators may be appointed.

TITULUS UNDECIMUS.

DE SATISDACTIONIBUS.

D. ii. T. 8. C ii. T. 57.

De iudicio personali.

SATISDACTIONUM modus alius antiquitati placuit, alium novitas per usum amplexa est. Olim enim, si in rem agebatur, satisdare possessor compellabatur, ut, si victus esset, nec rem ipsam restitueret, nec litis æstimationem, potestas esset petitori aut cum eo agendi, aut cum fide-jussoribus ejus; quæ satisfactio appellatur judicatum solvi: unde autem sic appelletur, facile est intelligere; namque stipulabatur quis, ut solveretur sibi, quod fuisset judicatum; multo magis is, qui in rem actione conveniebatur, satisdare cogeatur, si alieno nomine iudicium accipiebat. Ipse autem, qui in rem agebat, si suo nomine petebat, satisdare non cogeatur. Procurator vero, si in rem agebat, satisdare jubebatur, rem ratam dominum habiturum: periculum enim erat, ne interùm dominus de eadem re experiretur. Tutores verò et curatores eodem modo, quo procuratores, satisdare debere verba edicti faciebant. Sed aliquando his agentibus satisfactio remittebatur. Hæc ita erant, si in rem agebatur.

In taking security, the ancient practice differs from the modern; for merely in a real action, the defendant, in possession, was compelled to give security, so that, if he lost his cause, and could neither restore the thing itself, nor pay the value of it, the demandant might be enabled either to sue him, or his bail: and this species of bail is termed judicatum solvi: nor is it difficult to understand, why it is so called; for as every demandant stipulated, that the things adjudged to him should be paid, it was still more reasonable, that the person sued in a real action should be obliged to give security, if he received judgment in the name of another. A plaintiff in a real action suing in his own name, was not called to give security: but a proctor was ordered to give security, that his acts would be ratified by his principal, rem ratam dominum habiturum; for the danger was, lest the client should bring a fresh suit for the same thing; and by the words of the edict even tutors and curators were compellable to give security, as well as proctors, though it was sometimes remitted when they were plaintiffs. Such was the practice in real actions.

De judicio personali.

§ I. Si verò in personam, ab actoris quidem parte, eadem obtinebant, quæ diximus in actione, quâ in rem agitur; ab ejus verò parte, cum quo agitur, siquidem alieno nomine aliquis interveniret, omnimodo satisfaceret; quia nemo defensor in alienâ re sinè satisfactione idoneus esse creditur. Quod si proprio nomine aliquis judicium accipiebat in personam, judicatum solvi satisfacere non cogebatur.

§ 1. The rules as to security, on part of the plaintiff, which were observed in real, obtained also in personal actions; and, if the defendant proceeded in another's name, he was obliged to give caution; for no one was reputed a competent defendant in the cause of another, unless security was given: but, whenever another man was convened in a personal action if the defendant stood suit in his own name he was not compelled to give bail judicatum solvi i. e. fully to comply with the judgment of the court.

Jus novum. De reo.

§ II. Sed hodie hæc aliter observantur. Sive enim quis in rem actione convenitur, sive personali, suo nomine, nullam satisfactionem pro litis æstimatione dare compellitur; sed pro suâ tantum personâ, quod in judicio permaneat usque ad terminum litis; vel committitur suæ promissioni cum jurejurando, quam juratoriam cautionem vocant; vel nudam promissionem, vel satisfactionem, pro qualitate personæ suæ, dare compellitur.

§ 2. But at present a different practice prevails; for, a defendant sued in his own name, either in a real or personal action, is not compellable to give security for the payment of the estimation of the suit, but only for his own person; to wit, that he will remain in judgment until the cause is determined; and this security is sometimes given by sureties; sometimes by a promise upon oath, which is called a juratory caution; and sometimes by a simple promise without oath, according to the quality of the defendant.

De procuratore actoris.

§ III. Sin autem per procuratorem lis vel infertur vel suscipitur, in actoris quidem personâ, si non mandatum actis insinuaturn est, vel præsens dominus litis in judicio procuratoris sui personam confirmaverit,

§ 3. But, where a suit is commenced or defended by a proctor, if the proctor of the plaintiff, does not either enrol a mandate of appointment in the acts of court, (that is, file his power of attorney) or cause ratam rem dominum habiturum, satisfactionem procurator dare compellitur: eodem observando et si tutor vel curator, vel aliæ tales personæ, quæ alienarum rerum gubernationem receperunt, litem quibusdam per alium inferunt.

his client to nominate him publicly, he is obliged to give security, that his client will ratify his proceeding. Such is the rule also if a tutor, curator, or agent, commences suit by a proctor.

De procuratore rei præsentis.

§ IV. Si verò aliquis convenitur, siquidem præsens procuratorem dare paratus est, potest vel ipse in iudicium venire, et sui procuratoris personam per judicatum solvi satisfactionem solemnī stipulatione firmare; vel extra iudicium satisfactionem exponere, per quam ipse sui procuratoris fidejussor existat pro omnibus judicatum solvi satisfactionis clausulis: ubi et de hypothecā suarum rerum convenire compellitur, sive in iudicio promiserit, sive extra iudicium caverit, ut tam ipse quam hæredes ejus obligentur. Alia insuper cautelā, satisfactione propter personam ipsius exponendā, quod tempore sententiæ recitandæ in iudicium veniet, vel, si non venerit, omnia dabit fidejussor quæ in condemnatione continentur, nisi fuerit provocatum.

§ 4. When a party is sued, and is ready to nominate a proctor, he may appear in open court, and confirm the nomination by giving the caution judicatum solvi under the usual stipulation; or he may appear out of court, and become himself the surety, that his proctor will perform all the covenants in the instrument of caution; and whether this be done in court, or out of court, he must make his estate chargeable, that his heirs, as well as himself, may be bound. And a farther caution or security must be given, that he will either appear in person at the time of pronouncing sentence, or that his surety, in case of non-appearance, shall be bound to pay whatever the sentence exacts, if no appeal be interposed.

De procuratore rei absentis.

§ V. Si verò reus præstò ex quâcunque causâ non fuerit, et alius velit defensionem ejus subire, nulla differentia inter actiones in rem vel personales introducenda, potest hoc facere; ita tamen ut satisfactionem judicatum solvi pro litis æstimatione præstet. Nemo enim

§ 5. When a defendant does not put in an appearance, then any other person, who is willing, may take upon himself the defence for him, and this may be done either in a real or personal action without distinction, if the caution judicatum solvi be entered into for the payment of the estimation of the suit; for no man, according to the ancient rule already mentioned, can be said to defend the cause of another legally, unless security be given.

Unde hæc forma discenda.

§ VI. Quæ omnia apertius et perfectius quotidiano judiciorum usu in ipsis rerum documentis apparent.

§ 6. But such formalities may be more perfectly learned, from the usage and practice of courts.

Ubi hæc forma observanda.

§ VII. Quam formam non solum in hac regiâ urbe, sed etiam omnibus nostris provinciis, (etsi propter imperitiam fortè aliter celebratur,) obtinere censemus: cum necesse sit, omnes provincias caput omnium nostrarum civitatum, id est, hanc regiam urbem, ejusque observantiam, sequi.

§ 7. We have judged it expedient, that these forms shall prevail, not only in Constantinople, but also in all our other provinces, (although through ignorance they may have practiced differently;) for it is necessary, that all the provinces should be guided by the example of the capitol of our dominions, and follow the practice of our royal city.

TITULUS DUODECIMUS.

DE PERPETUIS ET TEMPORALIBUS ACTIONIBUS, ET QUÆ AD HÆREDES ET IN HÆREDES TRANSEUNT.

C. iv. T. 11.

De perpetuis et temporalibus actionibus.

HOC loco admonendi sumus, eas quidem actiones, quæ ex lege, senatusve consulto, sive ex sacris constitutionibus, proficiscuntur, perpe-

. All those actions, which took their rise from the law, the decrees of the senate or the constitutions were anciently considered as always in tuo solere antiquitus competere, donec sacræ constitutiones tam in rem, quam in personam, actionibus certos fines dederunt: eas vero, quæ ex propriâ prætoris jurisdictione pendent, plerumque intra annum vivere; nam et ipsius prætoris intra annum erat imperium. Aliquando tamen et in perpetuum extenduntur, id est, usque ad finem constitutionibus introductum; quales sunt eæ, quas bonorum possessori, cæterisque, qui hæredis loco sunt, accommodat. Furti quoque manifesti actio, quamvis ex ipsius prætoris jurisdictione profiscatur, tamen perpetuò datur; absurdum enim esse existimavit, anno eam terminari.

force; but the later emperors have by their ordinances fixed certain limits both to real and personal actions. Actions, given by virtue of the prætor's authority, are generally limited to one year; for such is the duration of his office; but sometimes the prætorian actions are made perpetual; that is they are extended to the limits introduced by the constitutions: such are those actions, which the prætor gives to the possessors of goods, and to others, who hold the place of heirs. The action of manifest theft is also perpetual, although it proceed from the mere authority of the prætor; for it was thought absurd, to limit this action to a year.

De actionibus, quæ in hæredes transeunt vel non.

§ I. Non autem omnes actiones, quæ in aliquem aut ipso jure competunt, aut à prætore dantur, et in hæredem sequè competunt, aut dari solent. Est enim certissima juris regula, ex maleficiis pœnales actiones in hæredem rei non competere; veluti furti, vi bonorum raptorum, injuriarum, damni injuriæ: sed hæredibus hujusmodi actiones competunt, nec denegantur; exceptâ injuriarum actione, et si qua alia similis inveniatur. Aliquando tamen, etiam ex contractu actio contra hæredem non competit; veluti cum testator dolosè versatus sit, et ad hæredem ejus nihil ex eo dolo pervenit: pœnales autem actiones, quas supra diximus, si ab ipsis principalibus personis fuerint con-

§ 1. Not all actions in general, which either the law, or the prætor, allows also against a man, will be also allowed against his heirs: for it is a sure rule of law, that penal actions, arising from mal-feasance, will not lie against the heir of an offender; such as theft, rapine, injury, or damage injuriously done: but these actions will pass to heirs, and are never denied, but in an action of injury, and in other cases of a similar nature. Sometimes even an action of contract will not lie against an heir; as when a testator acts fraudulently, and nothing comes to the possession of the heir by reason of the fraud: but, if the penal actions, of which we have already spoken, are once contested by the printestatæ, et hæredibus dantur et contra hæredes transeunt.

cial parties concerned, they will afterwards pass both to, and against, the heirs of such parties.

Si, pendente judicio, reus actori satisfecerit.

§ II. Superest, ut admoneamus, quod, si ante rem judicatam is, cum quo actum est, satisfaciat actori, officio judicis convenit eum absolvere; licet in eâ causâ fuisset judicii accipiendi tempore, ut damnari deberet; et hoc est, quod antea vulgo dicebatur, omnia judicia absolutoria esse.

§ 2. Lastly it is the duty of the judge to dismiss the defendant, if before sentence he should fully satisfy the plaintiff, although pending the suit, his cause seemed so bad, that he deserved to be condemned; and upon this account it was anciently a common saying, that all actions were dismissible.

TITULUS DECIMUS-TERTIUS.

DE EXCEPTIONIBUS.

D. xlv. T. 1. C. viii. T. 36.

Continuatio. Ratio exceptionum.

SEQUITUR, ut de exceptionibus dispiciamus. Comparatæ autem sunt exceptiones defendendorum eorum gratiâ, cum quibus agitur; sæpè enim accidit, ut licet ipsa persecutio, quâ actor experitur, justa sit, tamen iniqua sit adversus eum, cum quo agitur.

It follows, that we should treat of exceptions. Exceptions have been introduced into causes for the defence of the party cited; for it often happens, that a suit, which in itself is just, may yet become unjust, when commenced against a wrong person.

De exceptione quod metus causa, de dolo, in factum.

§ I. Verbi gratiâ, si metu coactus, aut dolo inductus, aut errore lapsus, stipulanti Titio promissisti, quod non debueras promittere, palàm est, jure civili te obligatum esse, et actio, quâ intenditur, dare te oportere, efficax est; sed iniquum

§ 1. If you for example compelled by fear, or induced by fraud or mistake, make an imprudent promise to Titius, under stipulation; yet it is evident, you are bound by the civil law, and Titius may have an efficacious action: but it may be est, te condemnari: ideoque datur tibi exceptio, quod metus causâ, aut doli mali, aut in factum, composita ad impugnandam actionem.

unjust, that a condemnation should follow, and therefore you are permitted to plead exceptive matter calculated to defeat the action, by setting forth, that the promise was extorted by fear or fraud, or otherwise by alleging the peculiar circumstances of the case; (and these are called exceptions in factum compositæ; i. e. exceptions on the fact.)

De non numerata pecunia.

§ II. Idem juris est, si quis quasi credendi causâ pecuniam à te stipulatus fuerit, neque numeraverit. Nam, eam pecuniam à te petere posse eum, certum est; dare enim te oportet, cum ex stipulatione tenearis. Sed, quia iniquum est, eo nomine te condemnari, placet, exceptione pecuniæ non numeratæ, te defendi debere; cujus tempora nos (secundum quod jam superioribus libris scriptum est) constitutione nostrâ coarctavimus.

§ 2. So is the law in case any one should obtain your promise to repay money that you never received. It is certain, he may sue you for the money, for you are bound by the stipulation. But as it would be unjust, that you should be condemned upon that account, you are allowed to plead the exception pecuniæ non numeratæ, of money not paid. But by our express constitution we have shortened the time allowed for bringing this exception, as we have already observed in the former book.

De pacto.

§ III. Præterea debitor, si pactus fuerit cum creditore, ne à se pecunia peteretur, nihilominus obligatus manet; quia pacto convento obligationes non omnino dissolvuntur; quâ de causâ efficax est adversus eum actio, quam actor intendit, si paret, eum dare oportere: sed, quia iniquum est, contra pactionem eum condemnari, defenditur per exceptionem pacti conventi.

§ 3. Moreover, although a creditor agree not to sue his debtor, yet the debtor remains bound; for obligations are not to be wholly dissolved by a mere agreement: and therefore an action in this form, si paret, eum dare oportere, would be efficacious against the debtor; but, as it would be unjust, that the debtor should be condemned to make payment, notwithstanding the agreement, he is therefore permitted to defend himself by an exception of compact.

De jurejurando.

§ IV. Æque, si debitor creditore deferente juraverit, nihil se dare oportere, adhuc obligatus permanet; sed, quia iniquum est, de perjurio queri, defenditur per exceptionem jurisjurandi. In iis quoque actionibus, quibus, in rem agitur, æquæ necessariae sunt exceptiones; veluti si petitore deferente possessor juraverit, eam rem suam esse, et nihilo minus petitor eandem rem vindicet; licet enim verum sit, quod intendit, id est, ejus esse; iniquum tamen est, possessorum condemnari.

§ 4. If an oath be administered to a debtor at the instance of his creditor, and he swears, that nothing is due, yet he still remains bound: but, as it would not be right, that the plaintiff should afterwards complain of perjury, the debtor may defend himself by alleging his own oath by way of exception. Exceptions are equally necessary in real actions; as when the party in possession at the request of the demandant swears, that the thing in dispute is his own, and the demandant will nevertheless endeavour to recover it: for although the demandant's allegation be true; viz. that the thing claimed appertains to him, yet it is unjust, that the possessor should be condemned.

De re judicata.

§ V. Item, si judicio tecum actum fuerit, sive in rem, sive in personam, nihilominus obligatio durat; et ideo ipso jure de eadem re postea adversus te agi potest: sed debes per exceptionem rei judicatæ adjuvari.

§ 5. If you have been sued either upon a real or personal action, the obligation nevertheless remains; and therefore, in strict law, you may again be sued upon the same account; but you may plead the former trial in bar, and be aided by the exception Rei judicatæ.

De cæteris exceptionibus.

§ 6. It may suffice to have given these instances of exceptions in general; but in how many and in what various cases they are necessary, may be learned from the larger books of the digests, or pandects.

Divisio prima.

§ VII. Quarum quædam ex legibus, vel iis, quæ legis vicem obtinent, vel ex ipsius prætoris jurisdictione, substantiam capiunt.

§ 7. Some exceptions proceed from the laws themselves, or from regulations that hold the place of laws; others from the authority of the prætor.

Divisio secunda.

§ VIII. Appellantur autem exceptiones aliæ perpetuæ et peremptoriæ, aliæ temporales et dilatorias.

§ 8. Some exceptions are called perpetual and peremptory: others are temporary and dilatory.

De peremptoriis.

§ IX. Perpetuæ et peremptoriæ sunt, quæ semper agentibus obstant, et semper rem, de quâ agitur, perimunt; qualis est exceptio doli mali, et quod metùs causâ factum est, et pacti conventi, cum ita convenerit, ne omnino pecunia peteretur.

§ 9. The perpetual and peremptory are those, which always obstruct the plaintiff, and destroy the force of the action—of this sort is the exception of fraud, of fear, and of compact, when it is agreed that the money shall not be sued for.

De dilatoriis.

§ X. Temporales atque dilatoriæ sunt, quæ ad tempus nocent, et temporis dilationem tribuunt; qualis est pacti conventi, cum ita convenerit, ne intra certum tempus ageretur, veluti intra quinquennium; nam, finito eo tempore, non impeditur actor rem exequi. Ergo ii, quibus intra certum tempus agere volentibus objicitur exceptio aut pacti-conventi, aut alia similis, differre debent actionem, et post tempus agere; ideo enim dilatoriæ istæ exceptiones appellantur. Alioqui, si intra tempus egerint objectaque sit exceptio, neque eo iudicio quicquam consequerentur propter

§ 10. Temporary and dilatory exceptions are those, which operate for a time, and create delay; such is an agreement not to sue within a certain time, as five years; but at the expiration of that time the creditor may proceed: and therefore those, against whom this exception pacti conventi or any other similar can be objected, must delay their action, and sue when the time is expired; hence, these exceptions are termed dilatory: and formerly, if the plaintiff had sued before the time, and exception was taken, it not only barred the claim for that time, but prevented the plaintiff from proexceptionem, neque post tempus olim agere poterant, cum temerè rem in iudicium deducebant et consumeabant; quâ ratione rem amittebant. Hodie autem non ita strictè hoc procedere volumus; sed eum, qui ante tempus pactionis vel obligationis litem inferre ausus sit, Zenonianæ constitutioni subjacere censemus, quam sacratissimus legislator de iis, qui tempore plus petierint, protulit: et inducas, quas ipse actor sponte indulserit, vel quas natura actionis continet, si contempserit, in duplum habeant ii, qui talem injuriam passi sunt; et, post eas finitas, non aliter litem suscipiant, nisi omnes expensas litis antea acceperint: ut actores, tali poenâ perterriti, tempora litium doceantur observare.

ceeding at the expiration of the time agreed on; for he was reputed to have lost his right, by having rashly commenced suit. But we have been willing to mitigate this rigor, so that whoever presumes to commence a suit before the time limited by agreement, shall be subject to the constitution of Zeno concerning those, who demand more than their due; and, if a plaintiff break in upon the time, which he has spontaneously granted, or contemns the limits which the nature of some actions allow, the defendant thus injured, becomes intitled to twice the time before allowed, and, even when that is expired, cannot be obliged to enter an appearance, until he has been reimbursed the whole of his expenses; and this we have ordained in terrorem, that plaintiffs may be taught to observe the proper time of commencing their suits.

De dilatoriis ex persona.

§ XL. Præterea etiam ex personâ sunt dilatoriæ exceptiones, quales sunt procuratoriæ; veluti si per militem, aut mulierem, agere quis velit: nam militibus nec pro patre, vel matre, vel uxore, nec ex sacro rescripto, procuratorio nomine experiri conceditur; suis vero negotiis superesse sinè offensâ militaris disciplinæ possunt. Eas verò exceptiones, quæ olim procuratoribus propter infamiam vel dantis, vel ipsius procuratoris, opponerantur, cum in iudiciis frequentari nullo modo perspeximus, conquirere

§ 11. Dilatory exceptions may also be personal, as those against proctors, where a suitor employs a soldier, or a woman to act for him; for soldiers are not permitted to act as proctors even in behalf of a father, a mother, or a wife, although they obtain the sanction of an imperial rescript; but they may superintend their own affairs, without offending against military discipline. But we have put a stop to the exceptions of infamy, which were formerly made, both against proctors and their constituents, having observed them to be little practised, and fearing, lest by such altercations, an inquiry into the merits of causes should be retarded.

DE REPLICATIONIBUS.

De replicatione.

INTERDUM evenit, ut exceptio, quæ primâ facie justa videtur, tamen iniquè noceat: quod cum accidit, aliâ allegatione opus est, adjuvandi actoris gratiâ; quæ replicatio vocatur, quia per eam replicatur atque resolvitur jus exceptionis; veluti cum pactus est aliquis cum debitore suo, ne ab eo pecuniam petat, deinde postea in contrarium pacti sunt, id est, ut creditori petere liceat: si creditor agat, et excipiat debitor, ut ita demum condemnetur, si non convenerit, ne eam pecuniam creditor petat, nocet ei exceptio; convenit enim ita: namque nihilominus hoc verum manet, licet postea in contrarium pacti sint. Sed, quia iniquum est, creditorem excludi, replicatio ei dabitur ex posteriore pacto convento.

Sometimes an exception, which appears at first view to be valid, is not so; and when this happens, an additional allegation is necessary in aid of the plaintiff, called a replication, because the force of the exception is replicated, that is, unfolded, and destroyed by it; as if a creditor should covenant with his debtor not to sue him, and the contrary should afterwards be agreed between them, in consequence of which the creditor brings an action, to which the debtor excepts, alleging the agreement of his creditor not to sue: in this case the exception would be of weight, as such an agreement was actually made, although another was made afterwards to a contrary effect: but, as it would be unjust, that a creditor should be thus concluded, he is allowed to plead the subsequent compact, by way of replication.

De duplicatione.

§ I. Rursus interdum evenit, ut replicatio, quæ primâ facie justa est, inique noceat; quod cum accidit, aliâ allegatione opus est, adjuvandi rei gratiâ; quæ duplicatio vocatur.

§ 1. It also sometimes happens, that a replication at first appears conclusive, though it be not so; in this case another allegation, called a duplication, may be offered by the defendant. (Rejoinder.)

De triplicatione.

§ II. Et, si rursus ea primâ facie justa videatur, sed propter aliquam causam actori iniquè noceat, rursus aliâ allegatione opus est, qua actor adjuvetur; quæ dicitur triplicatio.

§ 2. And when a duplication carries with it an appearance of justice, but is wrongfully urged against the plaintiff, he may also, in his turn, put in another allegation, which is termed a triplication. (Surrejoinder.)

De cæteris exceptionibus.

§ III. Quarum omnium exceptionum usum interdum ulterius, quam diximus, varietas negotiorum introducit; quas omnes apertius ex digestorum latiore volumine facile est cognoscere.

§ 3. But in the great variety of business, the use of these exceptions is extended still farther, than we have mentioned; of which a fuller knowledge may be obtained from the larger volumes of the digests. (Rebutter, Surrebutter.)

Quæ exceptiones fidejussoribus prosunt vel non.

§ IV. Exceptiones autem, quibus debitor defenditur, plerumque accommodari solent etiam fidejussoribus ejus; et rectè: quia, quod ab iis petitur, id ab ipso debitore peti videtur; quia mandati judicio redditurus est eis, quod ei pro eo solverint. Quâ ratione, et si de non petendâ pecunia pactus quis cum eo fuerit, placuit, perinde succurrendum esse per exceptionem pacti conventi illis quoque, qui pro eo obligati sunt, ac si etiam cum ipsis pactus esset, ne ab eis pecunia

§ 4. The exceptions, by which a debtor may defend himself, are generally and properly allowed to be used by his bondsmen; for a demand made upon them, is, as it were, a demand upon the debtor himself, who is compellable by an action of mandate to pay over to his sureties whatever they have been obliged to pay upon his account: and therefore, if a creditor hath covenanted with his debtor not to sue him, the bondsmen may be aided by an exception of competeretur. Sanè quædam exceptiones non solent his accommodari. Ecce enim debitor, si bonis suis cesserit, et cum eo creditor, experiatur, defenditur per exceptionem, si bonis cesserit: sed hæc exceptio fidejussoribus non datur; ideò scilicet, quia, qui alios pro debitore obligat, hoc maximè prospicit, ut, cum facultatibus lapsus fuerit debitor, possit ab iis, quos pro eo obligavit, suum consequi.

pact, just as if the promise had been made to them. But some exceptions cannot be used in behalf of sureties; for although, when a debtor hath made cession of his goods, he may defend himself by pleading a cessio bonorum, as an exception to a suit brought by a creditor; the same exception cannot aid the bondsmen; for whoever demands sureties always means to recover his debt from them, in case of failure in the principal debtor.

TITULUS DECIMUS-QUINTUS.

DE INTERDICTIS.

D. xliii. T. 1. C. viii. T. 1.

Continuatio et definitio.

SEQUITUR, ut dispiciamus de interdictis, seu actionibus, quæ pro his exercentur. Erant autem interdicta formæ atque conceptiones verborum, quibus prætor aut jubebat aliquid aut fieri prohibeat; quod tunc maximè fiebat, cum de possessione aut quasi possessione inter aliquos contendebatur.

We are now led to treat of interdicts, or of those actions, which supply their place. Interdicts, were certain forms of words, by which the prætor either commanded or prohibited something to be done; and were chiefly used, when any contention arose concerning possession, or quasi-possession.

Divisio prima.

§ I. Summa autem divisio interdictorum hæc est, quod aut prohibitoria sunt, aut restitutoria, aut exhibitoria. Prohibitoria sunt, quibus prætor vetat aliquid fieri; veluti; vim sinè vitio possidenti, vel mortuum inferenti, quo ei jus erat

§ 1. The first division of them is into prohibitory, restoratory, and exhibitory interdicts. Prohibitory are those, by which the prætor forbids something to be done, as when he forbids force to be used against a lawful possessor; or against a person who is burying another, where he hath a right; or when he forbids an edifice to be raised in a sacred place, or hinders a work from being erected in a public river, or on the banks which may render it less navigable. The restoratory, direct something to be restored, as the possession of goods to the universal successor, who has been kept out of possession by one, who hath no right; or when the prætor commands possession to be restored to him, who hath been forcibly ejected. And the exhibitory interdicts are those, by which the prætor commands some exhibit to be made, as of a slave, for example concerning whose liberty a cause is depending; or of a free-man, from whom a patron would exact the service due to him; or of children to their parent, under whose power they are. Some nevertheless imagine, that interdicts can with propriety be only prohibitory, because the word interdicere signifies to denounce and prohibit; —and that the restoratory and exhibitory interdicts might more properly be called decrees: yet by usage they are all termed interdicts, because they are pronounced between two, [inter duos dicuntur,] the demandant and the possessor.

inferendi; vel in sacro loco ædificari, vel in flumine publico ripæve ejus aliquid fieri, quo pejus navigetur. Restitutoria sunt, quibus restitui aliquid jubet; veluti bonorum possessori possessionem eorum, quæ quis pro hærede, aut pro possessore, possidet ex eâ hæreditate; aut cum jubet, ei, qui vi de possessione dejectus sit, restituipossessionem. Exhibitoria sunt, per quæ jubet exhiberi; veluti eum, cuius de libertate agitur; aut libertum, cui patronus operas indicere velit; aut parenti liberos, qui in potestate ejus sunt. Sunt tamen, qui putent, interdicta ea propriè vocari, quæ prohibitoria sunt; quia interdicere sit denuntiare et prohibere; restitutoria autem et exhibitoria propriè decreta vocari: sed tamen obtinuit, omnia interdicta appellari; quia inter duos dicuntur.

Divisio secunda.

§ II. Sequens divisio interdictorum hæc est; quod quædam adipiscendæ possessionis causâ comparata sunt, quædam retinendæ, quædam recuperandæ.

§ 2. The second division of interdicts is into those, which are given for the acquisition, the retention, or the recovery of a possession.

De interdictis adipiscendæ.

§ III. Adipiscendæ possessionis causâ interdictum accommodatur bonorum possessori, quod appellatur, Quorum bonorum; ejusque vis et potestas hæc est, ut, quod ex iis bonis quisque, quorum possessio alicui data est, pro hærede aut pro possessore possideat, id ei, cui bonorum possessio data est, restituere debeat. Pro hærede autem possidere videtur, qui putat se hæredem esse. Pro possessore is possidet, qui nullo jure rem hæreditariam, vel etiam totam hæreditatem, sciens ad se non pertinere, possidet. Ideo autem adipiscendæ possessionis vocatur interdictum, quia ei tantum utile est, qui nunc primum conatur adipisci possessionem; itaque, si quis adeptus possessionem amiserit eam, hoc interdictum ei inutile est. Interdictum quoque Salvianum adipiscendæ possessionis causâ comparatum est; eoque utitur dominus fundi de rebus coloni, quas is pro mercedibus fundi pignori futuras pepigisset.

§ 3. An interdict for obtaining possession called Quorum Bonorum, is given to him, to whom the prætor commits possession of the goods of a deceased person; and it obliges all persons, who retain goods as heirs or possessors, to restore such goods to those, to whom the possession hath been committed by the magistrate: and note, that he is reputed to possess as heir, who conceives himself so to be; and he is deemed the possessor, who without authority retains a part or the whole, of an inheritance, knowing the possession does not belong to him. An interdict of acquisition is so called, because, it is useful to him only, who first endeavours to acquire the possession; and therefore it would be useless to one, who had acquired a possession, and afterwards lost it. The Salvian interdict, is also appointed for the acquisition of possession; and is used by proprietors of farms, against goods which their tenants have pledged, for the payment of rent.

De interdictis retinendæ.

§ IV. Retinendæ possessionis causâ comparata sunt interdicta, Uti possidetis, et utrubi; cum ab utrâque parte de proprietate alicujus rei controversia sit, et ante quærat, uter ex litigatoribus possideat, et uter petere debeat: namque, nisi ante exploratum fuerit utrius eorum possessio sit, non potest petitoria acto instituti; quia et civilis

§ 4. The interdicts Uti possidetis and Utrubi have been introduced for the purpose of retaining possession; for in a controversy, concerning property, it is necessary to inquire, which of the parties is in possession, and who ought to be plaintiff; for, until the possession be ascertained, an action of demand cannot be instituted; and both civil and et naturalis ratio facit, ut alius possideat, et alius a possidente petat. Et, quia longè commodius est, et potius possidere, quam petere, ideo plerùmque, et ferè semper, ingens existit contentio de ipsa possessione. Commodum autem possidenti in eo est, quod, etiam si ejus res non sit, qui possidet, si modo actor non potuerit suam esse probare, remanet in suo loco possessio; propter quam causam, cum obscura sunt utriusque jura, contra petitorem judicari solet. Sed interdicto quidem Uti possidetis de fundi vel ædium possessione contenditur: Utrubi verò interdicto de rerum mobilium possessione, quorum vis ac potestas plurimam inter se differentiam apud veteres habebat: nam Uti possidetis interdicto is vincebat, qui interdicti tempore possidebat; si modo nec vi, nec clàm, nec precariò, nactus fuerat ab adversario possessionem: etiamsi alium vi expulerat, aut clàm arripuerat alienam possessionem, aut precariò rogaverat aliquem, ut sibi possidere liceret. Utrubi verò interdicto is vincebat, qui majore parte anni nec vi, nec clàm, nec precariò, ab adversario possidebat. Hodie tamen aliter observatur; nam utriusque interdicti potestas (quantum ad possessionem pertinet) exæquata est, ut ille vincat et in re soli, et in re mobili, qui possessionem, nec vi, nec natural law teach us that, when one party is in possession, the other must be claimant; but as it is more advantageous to be possessor, than demandant, there is generally great contention for the possession; for although the possessor is not in reality the true proprietor, yet the possession will still remain in him, if the plaintiff does not prove the thing in litigation to be his own: and therefore, when the rights of parties are not clear, the sentence is always against the demandant. By the interdict Uti possidetis, the possession of a farm or house is contended for; and, by the interdict Utrubi, the possession of things moveable is disputed. These interdicts anciently differed much in their force ad effects; for, by Uti possidetis, the party in possession at the bringing of the interdict, prevailed, if he had not obtained the possession from his adversary, by force, clandestinely, or precariously: but it was not material in what manner the possessor had obtained the possession from any other person; and, by the interdict Utrubi, that party prevailed who had been in possession for the greatest part of the year preceding the contest, if he had not acquired that possession clandestinely, precariously, or by force. But the present practice is otherwise; for the force of either interdict, as to possession is now made equal ; so that in any cause, either concerning things moveable or immoveable, that party prevails, who was in possession at the commencement of the suit, if it be not shown that he gained such possession by force, by clandestine means, or precariously ; (that is under the adversary himself.)

De retinenda et acquirenda possessione.

§ V. Possidere autem videtur quisque, non solum si ipse possideat, sed et si ejus nomine aliquis in possessione sit, licet is ejus juri subiectus non sit ; qualis est colonus et inquilinus. Per eos quoque, apud quos deposuerit quis, aut quibus commodaverit, ipse possidere videtur ; et hoc est, quod dicitur, retinere possessionem posse aliquem per quemlibet, quis ejus nomine sit in possessione. Quinetiam animo quoque solo retineri possessionem placet ; id est, ut, quamvis neque ipse sit in possessione neque ejus nomine alius, tamen si non reliquendæ possessionis animo, sed postea reversurus indè decesserit, retinere possessionem videatur. Adipisci vero possessionem per quos aliquis potest, secundo libro exposuimus ; nec illa dubitatio est, quin animo solo adipisci possessionem nemo possit.

§ 5. A man is considered in possession, not only when he is himself so, but when any other person, although not under his power, holds possession in his name ; as a farmer, or a tenant. A man may also possess, by means of those, to whom he hath committed the thing in litigation, either as a deposit or a loan ; and this is meant when it is said that a man may retain possession by means of another, who possesses in his name. It is moreover held, that a possession may be retained, by the mere intention only ; for, although a man is neither in possession himself, nor any other for him, but has quitted the possession of certain lands with an intent to return to them again, he shall nevertheless be deemed to continue in possession. We have already explained, in the second book, by what persons a man may acquire possession ; and, although it may be retained by intention only, yet this is not sufficient for the acquisition of possession.

De interdicto recuperandæ, et affinibus remediis.

§ VI. Recuperandæ possessionis causâ solet interdici, si quis ex possessione fundi vel ædium vi dejectus fuerit; nam ei proponitur interdictum Unde vi, per quod is, qui dejectus, cogitur ei restituere possessionem, licet is ab eo, qui vi dejecit, vi, clam, vel precario, possideat. Sed ex constitutionibus sacris, (ut supra diximus,) si quis rem per vim occupaverit, siquidem in bonus ejus est, dominio ejus privatur; si aliena, post ejus restitutionem, etiam æstimationem rei dare vim passo compellitur. Qui autem aliquem de possessione per vim dejecerit, tenetur lege Juliâ de vi privatâ, aut de vi publicâ. Sed de vi privatâ, si sinè armis vim fecerit; sin autem armis eum de possessione vi expulerit, de vi publicâ tenetur. Armorum autem appellatione non solum scuta et gladios et galeas, sed et fustes et lapides, significari intelligimus.

§ 6. The interdict for recovery of possession is generally employed, when any one hath been forcibly ousted from the possession of his house or estate; who then becomes entitled to the interdict Unde vi, by which the intruder is compelled to restore him to possession, although he, who had been thus forcibly ousted, was himself in possession by clandestine means, by force, or precariously. But, as we have said before, the imperial constitutions provide, that, whoever seizes a thing by force, if it be his own, he shall lose his property in it; and, if it belong to another, he shall be compelled not only to make restitution, but to pay the full value to the party, who suffered the force. But whoever ousts another out of possession by force, is likewise subject to the law Juliâ de vi privatâ or de vi publicâ; if the seizing or intrusion was effected without weapons, then the offender is only liable to the law de vi privatâ; but, if by an armed force, he is then subject to the law de vi publicâ. We comprehend not only shields, swords, and helmets under the term arms, but also clubs and stones.

Divisio tertia.

§ VII. Tertia divisio interdictorum est, quod aut simplicia sunt, aut duplicia. Simplicia sunt, veluti in quibus alter actor, alter reus est; qualia sunt omnia restitutoria, aut exhibitoria; nam actor is est, qui

§ 7. The third division of interdicts is into simple and double: the simple are those, in which there is both a plaintiff and a defendant; and of this sort are all restoratory and exhibitory interdicts: for the desiderit aut exhiberi aut restitui; reus autem is est, à quo desideratur, ut restituat, aut exhibeat. Prohibitoriorum autem interdictorum alia simplicia sunt, alia duplicia. Simplicia sunt, veluti cum prætor prohibet in loco sacro, vel in flumine publico, ripæve ejus, aliquid fieri: nam actor est, qui desiderat, ne quid fiat; reus est, qui aliquid facere conatur. Duplicia sunt, veluti Uti possidetis interdictum, et Utrubi. Ideò autem duplicia vocantur, quia par utriusque litigatoris in his conditio est; nec quisquam præcipuè reus vel actor intelligitur, sed unusquisque tam rei, quam actoris partes sustinet.

plaintiff, is he, who requires something to be exhibited or restored; and the defendant is he, from whom the exhibition or restitution is required. But of the prohibitory interdicts some are simple, some double; simple, when the prætor forbids something to be done in a sacred place, on a public river, or upon the banks of it; and the demandant, actor or plaintiff, is he, who desires, that some act should not be done, and the defendant is he, who endeavors to do it. The interdicts Uti possidetis and Utrubi are instances of the double interdicts; double, because in these the condition of either litigant is equal, the one not being understood to be more particularly the plaintiff or the defendant, than the other: inasmuch as each sustains the part of both.

De ordine et vetere exitu.

§ VIII. De ordine et vetere exitu interdictorum supervacuum est hodie dicere; nam quoties extra ordinem jus dicitur, (qualia sunt hodie omnia judicia,) non est necesse reddi interdictum: sed perindè judicatur sinè interdictis, ac si utilis actio ex causâ interdicti reddita fuisset.

§ 8. It would be superfluous at this day to speak of the order, and ancient effect of interdicts; for when judgments are extraordinary, (as all judgments now are) an interdict becomes unnecessary. Judgments are therefore now delivered without interdicts, in like manner, as if a beneficial action were given in consequence of an interdict.

TITULUS DECIMUS-SEXTUS.

DE PENA TEMERE LITIGANTIIUM.

De pœnis in genere.

NUNC admonendi sumus, magnam curam egisse eos, qui jura sustinebant, ne facile homines ad litigandum procederent; quod et nobis studio est. Idque eo maximè fieri potest, quod temeritas tam agentium, quam eorum, cum quibus agitur, modo pecuniariâ pœnâ, modo jurisjurandi religione, modo infamiæ metu coerceatur.

Our magistrates have ever been careful to hinder men from engaging inconsiderately in law suits: and it hath been our study also. The better to prevent such suits, the rashness of both plaintiffs and defendants hath been properly restrained, by pecuniary punishments, the coercion of an oath, and the fear of infamy.

De jurejurando et pœna pecuniaria.

§ 1. Ecce enim jusjurandum omnibus, qui conveniuntur, ex constitutione nostrâ defertur; nam reus non aliter suis allegationibus utitur, nisi prius juraverit, quod, putans se bonâ instantiâ uti, ad contradicendum pervenit. At, adversus inficientes, ex quibusdam causis duplici actio constituitur; veluti si damni injuriæ, aut legatorum locis venerabilibus relictorum, nomine agatur. Statim autem ab initio pluris quam simpli est actio; veluti furti manifesti, quadrupli; nec manifesti, duplici: nam ex his, et aliis quibusdam causis, sive quis neget, sive fateatur, pluris quam simpli est actio. Item actoris quoque calumnia coercetur; nam etiam actor pro calumniâ jurare cogitur ex nostrâ constitutione, quod non calumniandi animo litem movisset, sed existimando, se bonam causam habere.

§ 1. By virtue of one of our constitutions, an oath must be administered to every man against whom an action is brought; for a defendant may not plead, until he hath first sworn, that he proceeds upon a firm belief that his cause is good. But actions lie, in particular cases, for double and triple value against those who deny the cause of action; as when a suit is commenced on account of injurious damage, or for a legacy left to a sacred place, as a church, hospital, &c. There are also actions, upon which more than the simple value is recoverable at the time of their commencement; as upon an action of theft manifest, which is for fourfold the value; an action of theft not manifest, for double the value; because in these, and some other cases, the action is at first given for more than the simple value, whether the defendant denies or confesses the charge brought against him. The calumny of the plaintiff is also under restraint; for he too is compelled by our constitution to swear, that he did not commence the suit with an intention to calumniate: but upon thorough confidence that he had a good cause: and, the advocates on both sides are likewise compellable to take a similar oath, the substance of which is set forth in another of our constitutions. This practice hath been introduced in the place of the ancient action of calumny, which compelled the plaintiff to pay the tenth part of his demand as a punishment, but is now disused; and, instead of it, we have introduced the before-mentioned oath, and have ordained, that every rash litigant, who hath failed in his proof, shall be compelled to pay his adversary the damages and costs of suit.

Utriusque etiam partis advocati iurandum subeunt, quod aliâ nostrâ constitutione comprehensum est. Hæc autem omnia pro veteri calumniæ actione introducta sunt, quæ in desuetudinem abiit; quia in partem decimam litis actores multabat, quod nusquam factum esse invenimus: sed pro his introductum est et præfatum iurandum, et ut improbus litigator et damnum et impensas litis inferre adversario suo cogatur.

De infamia.

§ II. Ex quibusdam judiciis damnati ignominiosi fiunt; veluti furti, vi bonorum raptorum injuriarum, de dolo; item tutelæ, mandati, depositi, directis, non contrariis actionibus: item pro socio, quæ ab utrâque parte directâ est; et ob id quilibet ex sociis, eo judicio damnatus, ignominiâ notatur. Sed furti quidem, aut vi bonorum raptorum, aut injuriarum, aut de dolo, non solum damnati notantur ignominiâ, sed et pacti; et rectè: plurimum enim interest, utrum ex de-

§ 2. In some cases the parties condemned become infamous, as in actions of theft, rapine, injury, or fraud. Also in an action of tutelage, mandate, or deposit, if it be a direct, and not a contrary action. An action of partnership has also the same effect; for it is direct in regard to all the partners; and therefore any one of them, who is condemned in such action, is branded with infamy. Not only those, who have been condemned in an action of theft, rapine, injury, or licto aliquis, an ex contractu, debitor sit.

fraud, are rendered infamous; but those, also, who have bargained to prevent a criminal prosecution; and this is a right; for there is a wide difference between a debtor, on account of a debtor upon contract.

De in jus vocando.

§ III. Omnium autem actionum instituendarum principium ab eâ parte edicti proficiscitur, quâ prætor edicit de in jus vocando. Utique enim in primis adversarius in jus vocandus est; id est, ad eum vocandus, qui jus dicturus sit. Quâ parte prætor parentibus et patronis item parentibus liberisque patronorum, et patronarum, hunc præstat honorem, ut non aliter liceat liberis liberisque eos in jus vocare, quam si id ab ipso prætore postulaverint et impenetraverint. Et si quis aliter vocaverit, in eum pœnam sulidorum quinquaginta constituit.

§ 3. All actions take their rise from that part of the prætor's edict, in which he treats de in jus vocando of calling parties into court: for the first step in matters of controversy, is to cite the adverse party to appear before the judge, who is to determine the cause. In the same part of the edict the prætor hath treated parents and patrons, and even the parents and children of patrons and patronesses, with so great respect, that he does not suffer them to be called into judgment by their children or their freedmen, until application hath been first made to him, and leave obtained; and, if any man presume to cite such person otherwise, he is subject to a penalty of fifty solidi.

TITULUS DECIMUS-SEPTIMUS.

DE OFFICIO JUDICIS.

De officio judicis in genere.

SUPEREST, ut de officio judicis dispiciamus. Et quidem in primis illud observare debet judex, ne aliter judicet, quam legibus, aut constitutionibus, aut moribus, proditum est.

It remains, that we inquire into the office and duty of a judge; whose first care it ought to be not to determine otherwise, than the laws, the constitutions, or the customs and usages direct.

De judicio noxali.

§ I. Ideoque, si noxali judicio aditus est, observare debet, ut, si condemnandus videtur dominus, ita debeat condemnare: Publium Mavium Lucio Titio in decem aureos condemno; aut noxam dedere.

§ 1. And therefore, if a suit be commenced by a noxal action, the judge ought always to observe the following form of condemnation, if the defendant ought to be condemned: e. g. I condemn Publius Mævius to pay Lucius Titius ten aurei, or to deliver up the slave, who did the damage.

De actionibus realibus.

§ II. Et, si in rem actum sit eoràm judice, sive contra petito rem judicaverit, absolvere debet possessorem; sive contra possessorem, jubere ei debet, ut rem ipsam restituat cum fructibus. Sed si possessor neget, in præsenti se restituere posse, et sinè frustratione videbitur tempus restituendi causa petere, indulgendum est ei; ut tamen de litis æstimatione caveat cum fidejussore, si intra tempus, quod ei datum est, non restituerit. Et, si hæreditas petita sit, eadem

§ 2. When a real action is brought before a judge, and he pronounces against the demandant, the possessor ought then to be acquitted; if against the possessor, he must be admonished to restore the very thing in dispute, together with all its produce. But, if the possessor should allege, that he is unable to make immediate restitution, and petition for longer time, without any seeming intention to frustrate the sentence, he is to be indulged; provided he gives security for the full payment circa fructus interveniunt, quæ diximus intervenire de singularum rerum petitione. Illorum autem fructuum quos culpa suâ possessor non perceperit, sive illorum, quos perceperit, in utraque actione eadem ratio penè habetur, si prædo fuerit. Si verò bonæ fidei possessor fuerit, non habetur ratio neque consuptorum, neque non perceptorum. Post inchoatam autem petitionem etiam illorum fructuum ratio habetur, qui culpâ possessoris percepti non sunt, vel percepti consumpti sunt.

of the condemnation and costs of suit, if he should fail to make restitution within the time appointed. And, if an inheritance be sued for, a judge ought to determine in the same manner as to the profits, as he would in a suit for some particular thing only; for, if the defendant appear to have been a possessor malæ fide, then almost the same reasoning prevails in both actions as to the profits, whether they were taken or neglected by the possessor: but, if the defendant be a possessor bonæ fide, then no account is expected, either of produce consumed or not collected before the suit. But all produce must be accounted for from the date of the action, whether used or neglected.

De actione ad exhibendum.

§ III. Si ad exhibendum actum fuerit, non sufficit, si exhibeat rem is, cum quo actum est; sed opus est, ut etiam rei causam debeat exhibere, id est, ut eam causam habeat actor, quam habiturus esset, si, cum primum ad exhibendum egisset, exhibita res fuisset: ideòque, si inter moras exhibendi, usucapta sit res à possessore, nihilominus condemnabitur. Præterea fructuum medii temporis, id est, ejus, quod post acceptum ad exhibendum judicium, ante rem judicatam, intercesserit, rationem habere debet iudex. Quod si neget reus, cum quo ad exhibendum actum est, in præsentem se exhibere posse, et tempus exhibendi causâ

§ 3. If a man proceed by an action ad exhibendum, it is not sufficient, that the defendant should exhibit the thing in question, but he must also be answerable for all profits and emoluments accruing from it; that the plaintiff may be in the same state, as if his property had been restored to him when he first brought his action: and therefore, if the possessor, during his delay to surrender the thing in dispute, shall gain a prescriptive title to it, he shall nevertheless be condemned to restitution. Moreover it is the duty of the judge to take an account of the mesne profits accruing between the suit and the sentence. But, when the defendant declares, that petat, idque sinè frustratione postulare videatur, dari ei debet, ut tamen caveat, se restitutum. Quod si neque statim jussu judicis rem exhibeat, neque postea se exhibiturum caveat, condemnandus sit in id, quod actoris interesset, si ab initio res exhibita esset.

he is not able instantly to produce the thing adjudged, and prays a farther time, without apparent affectation of delay, time should be allowed, on his giving security for restitution. But, if he neither obey the command of the magistrate by instantly producing the thing adjudged, nor in giving sufficient security for the production of it at a future day, he must be condemned in the full damages, which the plaintiff hath sustained by not having the article delivered to him at the commencement of the suit.

Familie erciscundæ.

§ IV. Si familie erciscundæ judicio actum sit, singulas res singulis hæredibus adjudicare debet; et, si in alterius personâ prægravare videatur adjudicatio, debet hunc invicem cohæredi certâ pecuniâ (sicuti jam dictum est) condemnare. Eo quoque nomine cohæredi quisque suo condemnandus est, quod solus fructus hæreditarii fundi perceperit, aut rem hæreditariam corruerit, aut consumperit. Quæ quidem similiter inter plures quoque quam duos cohæredes subsequuntur.

§ 4. When a suit is commenced for the partition of an inheritance, the judge must decree to each heir his respective portion; and, if the partition, when made, be more advantageous to the one than to the other, the judge ought as we have before observed, to oblige him, who has the largest part, to make a full recompense in money to his co-heir: it therefore follows, that every co-heir, who hath taken the profits of an inheritance to his sole use, and consumed them, is liable to be compelled to make restitution. And this is the law whether there are two heirs, or many.

Communi dividundo.

§ V. Eadem interveniunt, esti communi dividundo de pluribus rebus actum sit. Quod si de unâ re, veluti de fundo; siquidem stæ fundus commodè regionibus divi-

§ 5. The law is the same, when a suit is brought communi dividundo, for one particular thing only, it being but a part or parcel of an inheritance, as a field, or any piece sionem recipiat, partes ejus singulis adjudicare debet : et, si unius pars prægravare videtur, is invicem certâ pecuniâ alteri condemnandus est. Quod si commodè dividi non possit, vel si homo fortè aut mulus erit, de quo actum sit, tunc totus uni adjudicandus est, et is invicem alteri certâ pecuniâ condemnandus est.

of ground, which, if it can be conveniently divided, ought to be adjudged to each claimant in equal portions ; and if the share of one be larger than the others, the party having the largest portion, must be condemned to make a recompense in money. But, if the thing sued for be of such a nature, that it cannot be divided, as a slave, or a horse, it must be given entirely to one of the co-partners, who must be ordered to make satisfaction in money to the other.

Finium regundorum.

§ VI. Si finium regundorum actum fuerit, dispicere debet judex, an necessaria sit adjudicatio ; quæ sanè uno casu necessaria est, si evidentioribus finibus distinguere agros commodius sit, quam olim fuissent distincti : nam tunc necesse est, ex altero agro partem aliquam alterius agri domino adjudicari ; quo casu conveniens est, ut is alteri certâ pecuniâ debeat condemnari. Eo quoque nomine condemnandus est quisque hoc judicio, quod fortè circa fines aliquid malitiosè commisit ; verbi gratiâ, quia lapides finales furatus est, vel arbores finales excidit. Contumaciæ quoque nomine quisque eo judicio condem-

§ 6. When the action finium regundorum is brought for the determination of boundaries, the judge ought first to examine, whether it be absolutely requisite to proceed to an adjudication ; in one case it is undoubtedly so ; viz. when it becomes expedient, that grounds should be divided by more conspicuous boundaries than formerly ; for necessity then requires, that a part of one man's ground should be adjudged to another, in which case it is incumbent upon a judge to condemn him, whose estate is enlarged, to pay out an equivalent to the other, whose estate is diminished. By this action, that any one may be prosecuted, who hath committed fraud in relation to boundaries, either by removing stones, or cutting down trees, which were landmarks. The same action will also subject any man to condemnation on account of contumacy, if he refuse to suffer his lands to be measured at the command of a judge.

De adjudicatione.

§ VII. Quod autem istis judiciis alicui adjudicatum fuerit, id statim ejus fit, cui adjudicatum est.

§ 7. Whatever is adjudged to a party in any of these actions, instantly becomes the property of him, to whom it was adjudged.

TITULUS DECIMUS-OCTAVUS.

DE PUBLICIS JUDICIIS.

De differentia a privatis.

PUBLICA judicia neque per actiones ordinantur; neque omnino quicquam simile habent cum cæteris judiciis, de quibus locuti sumus: magnaue diversitas eorum est et in instituendo et in exercendo.

Public judgments are not introduced by actions; nor are they in any thing similar to the judgments, of which we have been treating. They also differ greatly from one another in the manner of being instituted and prosecuted.

Etymologia.

§ I. Publica autem dicta sunt, quod cuivis ex populo executio eorum plerumque datur.

§ 1. They are called public, because they may be sued to execution by any of the people.

Divisio.

§ II. Publicorum judiciorum quædam capitalia sunt, quædam non capitalia. Capitalia dicimus, quæ

§ 2. Of these judgments some are capital, others not. We term those capital, by which a criminal is pro-ultimo supplicio afficiunt homines, vel etiam aquæ et ignis interdictione, vel deportatione, vel metallo. Cætera, si quam infamiam irrogant cum damno pecuniario, hæc publica quidem sunt, sed non capitalia.

hibited from fire and water, or condemned to death, to banishment, or to the mines. Others, by which men fined and rendered infamous, are public indeed, but not capital.

Exempla. De læsa majestate.

§ III. Publica autem judicia hæc sunt. Lex Julia majestatis, quæ in eos, qui contra imperatorem vel rempublicam aliquid moliti sunt, suum vigorem extendit. Cujus pœna animæ amissionem sustinet, et memoria rei etiam post mortem damnatur.

§ 3. The following are public judgments. The law Julia majestatis extends its force against those, who have undertaken any enterprise against the emperor or the republic. The penalty is the loss of life, and the memory of the offender becomes infamous after his death.

De adulteriis.

§ IV. Item lex Julia de adulteriis coercendis, quæ non solum temeratores alienarum nuptiarum gladio punit, sed et eos, qui cum masculis nefandam libidinem exercere audent. Sed eâdem lege etiam stupri flagitium punitur, cum quis sinè vi vel virginem vel viduam honestè viventem stupraverit. Pœnam autem eadem lex irrogat stupratoribus; si honesti sunt, publicationem partis dimidiæ bonorum; si humiles, corporis coercionem cum relegatione.

§ 4. The law Julia, for the suppression of adulteries, not only punishes with death those who violate the marriage bed of others, but those also, who commit acts of detestable lewdness with persons of their own sex. It also inflicts punishment upon all who are guilty of the crime called stuprum: that is, the debauching a virgin, or a widow of honest fame, without force. The punishment of this crime in persons of condition is the confiscation of a moiety of their possessions; offenders of low degree, undergo corporal chastisement with relegation.

De sicariis.

§ V. Item lex Cornelia de sicariis, quæ homicidas ultore ferro persequitur, vel eos, qui hominis occidendi causâ cum telo ambulant.

§ 5. The law Cornelia de sicariis punishes those, who commit murder, with death, and those also, who carry weapons, with intent to kill.

Telum autem, ut Cajus noster ex interpretatione legum duodecim tabularum scriptum reliquit, vulgò quidem id appellatur, quod arcu mittitur; sed et nunc omne significat, quod manu cujusque jacitur. Sequitur ergò, ut lignum, et lapis, et ferrum, hoc nomine contineantur; dictum ab eo, quod in longinquum mittitur, a Græca voce τηλε figuratum. Et hanc significationem invenire possumus et in Græco nomine; nam, quod nos telum appellamus, illi βελος appellant ἀπο τε βουλευσθαι. Admonet nos Xenophon; nam ita scribit: Και τα βελη ὅμωσ φερετο, λογχα, τοξευματα, σφενδοναι, πλωσοι δε και λιθοι. Sicarii autem appellantur à sicâ, quod significat ferreum cultrum. Eâdem lege et venefici capite damnantur, qui artibus odiosis, tam venenis, quam susurris magicis, homines, occiderint; vel mala medicamenta publicè vendiderint.

The term telum, according to Caius's interpretation, commonly signifies an arrow made to be shot from a bow, but it is now used to denote any missile weapon, or whatever is thrown from the hand; hence a club, a stone, or a piece of iron, may be comprehended under that appellation. The word telum is evidently derived from the Greek adverb τηλε, procul, because thrown from a distance. And we may trace the same analogy in the Greek word βελος for what we call telum, the Greeks term βελος, from βουλευσθαι to throw; and of this we are informed by Xenophon, who writes thus: Darts also were carried, spears, arrows, slings and a multitude of stones. Assassins and murderers are called sicarii from sica, which signifies a short crooked sword or ponyard. The same law also inflicts a capital punishment upon those, who practice odious arts, or sell pernicious medicaments, occasioning the death of mankind, as well by poison, as by magical incantations.

De parricidiis.

§ VI. Alia deinde lex asperrimum crimen novâ pœnâ persequitur, quæ Pompeia de parricidiis vo-catur; quâ cavetur, ut, si quis parentis aut filii, aut omnino affectionis ejus, quæ nuncupatione parentum continetur, fata præparave-rit, (sivè clâm, sivè palâm, id au-sus fuerit,) nec non is, cujus dolo malo id factum est, vel conscius

§ 6. The law Pompeia inflicts a new punishment upon those who commit parricide, the most execrable of all crimes. This law ordains that whoever, either publicly or privately, hastens the death of a parent or a child, or of any person com-prized under the tie, or denomination of a parent, shall be punished as a parricide; and he also, who criminis existit, licet extraneus sit. pœnâ paricidii puniatur; et neque gladio, neque ignibus, neque ulli solemnî pœnæ subjiciatur, sed insutus culeo cum cane, et gallo galinaceo, et viperâ, et simiâ, et inter eas ferales angustias comprehensus, (secundum quod regionis qualitas tulerit,) vel in vicinum mare, vel in amnem projiciatur; ut omnium elementorum usu vivus carere incipiat, et ei cœlum superstiti, et terrâ mortuo, auferatur. Si quis autem alias cognatione vel affinitate personas conjunctas necaverit, pœnam legis Corneliæ de sicariis sustinebit.

hath advised, or been privy to the transaction, although a stranger. A criminal, in this case, is not put to death by the sword, by fire, nor by any ordinary punishment; the law directs, that he shall be sewed up in a sack, with a dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, and, being put up in this horrid enclosure, shall be thrown either into the sea, or an adjacent river, according to the situation of the place, where the punishment is inflicted: thus he is deprived of the very elements, while living; so that his living body is denied the benefits of the air, and his dead body the use of the earth. But, if a man be guilty of the murder of any other person, related to him, either by cognation or affinity, he is only subject to the punishment inflicted by the law Cornelia de sarcariis.

De falsis.

§ VII. Item lex Cornelia de falsis, quæ etiam testamentaria vocatur, pœnam irrogat ei, qui testamentum vel aliud instrumentum falsum scripserit, signaverit, recitaverit, subjecerit, vel signum adulterinum fecerit, sculpsit, expresserit, sciens, dolo malo. Ejusque legis pœna, in servos ultimum supplicium est; quod etiam in lege Corneliâ de sicariis et veneficiis servatur: in liberos verò deportatio.

§ 7. The law Cornelia de falsis, which is also called testamentaria, punishes those who fraudulently write, sign, recite, or clandestinely offer for signature a false will, or any other instrument; or make, engrave or stamp, or in any manner counterfeited the seal of another. The punishment by this law upon slaves is death; as it is by the law Cornelia concerning assassins and poisoners; upon freemen, deportation.

De vi.

§ VIII. Item lex Julia de vi pub-

§ 8. The law Julia, concerning lica seu privata adversus eos exoritur, qui vim vel armatam, vel sinè armis, commiserint; sed, siquidem armata vis arguatur, deportatio ei ex lege Julia de vi publicà irrogatur; si verò sinè armis, in tertiam partem bonorum suorum publicatio imponitur. Sin autem per vim raptus virginis, vel viduæ, vel sanctimonialis, vel alterius, fuerit perpetratus, tunc et raptores, et ii, qui opem huic flagitio dederunt, capite puniuntur, secundum nostræ constitutionis definitionem, ex qua hoc apertius possibile est scire.

public and private force, take place against all, who use force, whether armed or unarmed; but, if proof be made of an armed force, the punishment is deportation by that law; and, if the force be not accompanied with arms, the penalty is confiscation of one third part of the offender's goods: nevertheless, if a rape be committed upon a virgin, a widow, a nun, or upon any other person, both the ravishers and their accomplices are all equally subject to capital punishment, according to the decision of our constitution; from which more may be known of this subject.

De peculatus.

§ IX. Item lex Julia peculatûs eos punit, qui publicam pecuniam, vel rem sacram, vel religiosam, furati fuerint. Sed, siquidem ipsi iudices tempore administrationis publicas pecunias subtraxerint, capitali animadversione puniuntur; et non solum hi, sed etiam qui ministerium eis ad hoc exhibuerint, vel qui subtractas ab his susceperint. Alii vero, qui in hanc legem inciderint, pœnæ deportationis subjugentur.

§ 9. The law Julia de peculatu punishes those, who have been guilty of theft, in regard to public money, or anything, which is sacred; but if judges themselves, while in office commit a theft of this kind, their punishment is capital; and so is the punishment of those, who assist in such a theft, or knowingly receive the money stolen. But all other persons, who offend against this law, are only subject to deportation.

De plagiariis.

§ X. Est et inter publica judicia lex Fabia de plagiariis, quæ interdum capitis pœnam ex sacris constitutionibus irrogat, interdum leviores.

§ 10. The law Fabia against plagiaries, ranks also among public judgments; but by the imperial constitutions, offenders against this law, are sometimes punished with death, and sometimes by a milder punishment.

De ambitu, repetundis, annona, residuis.

§ XI. Sunt præterea publica judicia : lex Julia de ambitu, lex Julia repetundarum, et lex Julia de annonâ, et lex Julia de residuiis, quæ de certis capitulis loquuntur, et animæquidem amissionem non irrogant; aliis autem pœnis eos subjiciunt, qui præcepta earum neglexerint.

§ 11. There are also other public judgments; such are the Julian laws de ambitu, repetundarum, de annonâ, de residuis; which do not punish with death, but inflict other punishments upon those, who offend.

Conclusio.

§ XII. Sed de publicis judiciis hæc exposuimus, ut vobis possibile sit summo digito, et quasi per indicem, ea tetigisse; alioqui diligentior eorum scientia vobis, ex latioribus digestorum seu pandectarum libris, Deo propitio adventura est.

§ 12. Thus much we have stated on the subject of public judgments, as an index, to give a general idea of that knowledge, which, through the blessing of God, may be most fully and particularly obtained by perusing the digests with a diligent attention.

CHAPTER I

Of the succession of descendants.

If a man dies intestate, leaving a descendant of either sex or any degree, such descendant, whether he derives his descent from the male or female line, or whether he is under power or not, is to be preferred to all ascendants and collaterals. And, although the deceased was himself under paternal power, yet we ordain, that his children of either sex or any degree shall be preferred in succession to the parents, under whose power the intestate died, in regard to those things, which children do not acquire for their parents, according to our other laws: for we would maintain the laws in respect to the usufruct, which is allowed to parents: so that, if any of the descendants of the deceased should die leaving sons or daughters or other descendants, they shall succeed in the place of their own father, whether they are under his power or sui juris and shall be entitled to the same share of the intestate's estate, which their father would have had, if he had lived; and this kind of succession has been termed by the ancient lawyers a succession in stirpes: for in the succession of descendants we allow no priority of degree, but admit the grandchildren of any person by a deceased son or daughter to be called to inherit that person together with his sons or daughters, without making any distinction between males and females, or the descendants of males and females, or between those, who are under power, and those, who are not. These are the rules, which we have established, concerning the succession of descendants.

Εἰ τις τοῖνυν. Si quis igitur.] The three first chapters of this novel constitution deserve the attentive consideration of the reader, not only because they contain the latest policy of the civil law in regard to the disposition of the estates of intestates; but because they are the foundation of our statute law in that respect. Vid. Holt's cases, p. 259. Peero William's rep. p. 27. Prec. in chan. p. 593. Sir Thom. Raymond's rep. p. 496. And they are still almost of continual use, by being the general guide of the courts in England, which hold cognizance of distributions, in all those cases, concerning which our own laws have either been silent, or not sufficiently express.

Εἰς τὸν τε ἰδίᾳ γονεὺς. In proprii parentis locum succedant.] Nothing is more clear in the civil law, than that grandchildren, even when alone, (although they descend from various stocks and are unequal in their numbers,) would take the estate of their deceased grandfather per stirpes, and not per capita. Suppose therefore that Titus should die, leaving grandchildren by three different sons, already dead; to wit, three by one son, six by another, and twelve by another; each of these classes of grandchildren would take a third of the estate without any regard to the inequality of the numbers in each class. But, as to this point in England, the law reports mention no judicial determination; yet it seems probable that the courts, in which the distributions are cognizable, would order the division of an estate in such a case to be made per capita; and this, partly from a motive of equity, and partly from a consideration of the intent of the statute, relating to the estates of intestates; for the statute directs an equal and just distribution: and, when the act mentions representation, it must be understood to refer to it, in those cases only, where representation is necessary to prevent exclusion, but not to refer to it, in those cases, where all the claimants are in equal degree, and therefore can take suo quique jure, each in his own right. Si autem plurimi ascendentium vivunt, hos præponi jubemus, qui proximi gradu reperiuntur, masculos et fœminas, sive paterni, sive materni sint. Si autem eundem habeant gradum, ex æquo inter eos hæreditas dividatur, ut medieta-tem quidem accipiant omnes a patre ascendentes, quancunque fuerint; medietatem vero reliquam a matre ascendentes, quantoscunque eos invenire contigerit. Si vero cum ascendentibus inveniantur fratres aut sorores ex utrisque parentibus conjuncti defuncto, cum proximis gradu ascendentibus vocabantur, si et pater aut mater fuerint; dividenda inter eos quippe hæreditate secundum personarum numerum, uti et ascendentium et fratrum singuli æqualem habeant portionem; nullum usum ex filiorum aut filiarum portione in hoc casu valente patre sibi penitus vindicare, quoniam, pro hac usus portione, hæreditatis jus et secundum proprietatem per præsentem dedimus legem; differentia nulla servanda inter personas istas, sive fœminæ sive masculi fuerint, qui ad hæreditatem vocantur; et sive per masculi sive per fœminæ personam copulantur; et sive suæ potestatis sive sub potestate fuerit is cui succedunt.

CHAPTER II.

But, when the deceased leaves no descendants, if a father or mother, or any other parents, grand-fathers, great-grand-fathers, &c. survive him, we decree, that they shall be preferred to all collateral relations, except brothers of the whole blood to the deceased, as shall hereafter be more particularly declared. But, if many ascendants are living, we prefer those, who are in the nearest degree, whether they are male or female, paternal or maternal; and, when several ascendants concur in the same degree, the inheritance of the deceased must be so divided, that the ascendants on the part of the father may receive one-half, and the ascendants on the part of the mother the other half, without regard to the number of persons on either side. But, if the deceased leaves brothers and sisters of the whole blood together with ascendants, these collaterals of the deceased shall be called with the nearest ascendants, although such ascendants are a father or mother; and the inheritance must be so divided according to the number of persons, that each of the ascendants, and each of the brothers, may have an equal portion; nor shall the father in this case take to himself any usufruct of the portions belonging to his sons and daughters, because by this law we have given him the absolute property of one portion: and we suffer no distinction to be made between those persons, who are called to an inheritance, whether they are males or females, or related by males or females, or whether he, to whom they succeed, was, or was not, under power, at the time of his decease.

Εἰ καὶ πατὴρ ἢ μητὴρ ὦσαν. Si et pater aut mater fuerint.] By the law of England, when a person dies intestate, leaving a father, the father is solely entitled to the whole personal estate of the intestate, exclusive of all others; and anciently, [i. e. in the reign of Henry the first, vid. II. Hen. primi, Wilkins editore, p. 266] a surviving father, or mother, could have taken even the real estate of their deceased child. But this law of succession was altered soon afterwards; for we find by Glanville, that, in the time of Henry the second, a father or mother could not have taken the real estates of their deceased children, the inheritance being then carried over to the collateral line. Vid. Glanville, lib 7, cap. 1, 2, &c. 1 Peere Williams 50. And it has ever since been held as an inviolable maxim, that an inheritance cannot ascend. Co. Litt. 11. a. But this alteration in the law, made since the reign of Henry the first, did not extend to personal estate, so that, before the statute of the first of James the second, if a child had died intestate without a wife, child, or father, the mother would have been entitled to the whole personal estate, exclusive of the brothers and sisters of the intestate; but it is enacted by that statute, "that if, after the death of a father, any of his children shall die intestate, without wife or children, in the lifetime of the mother, every brother and sister, and "their representatives, shall have an equal share with her." 1 Jac. 2. cap. 17. § 6.

But, should it here be asked, whether the brother of an intestate would exclude the grand-father by the civil law? the novel appears at first sight to answer it very fully in the negative by enacting, "that, if the deceased leaves brothers and sisters together with ascendants in the right line, these collaterals shall be called with the nearest ascendants," &c. And indeed the generality of writers, namely, Gudelin, Forster, Ferriere, Domat, and others, all understand this passage, as admitting ascendants and brothers to take jointly; yet a contrary interpretation hath been given by some civilians, of whom Voet is the principal, whose argument in support of it are therefore here copied at large.

"*Illud non satis expeditum est, an etiam cum ovo aut proavo, ubi alius proximior ascendens non est, fratres germani ejus, qui defunctus est, concurre debeant, an magis avo proavove præferendi sunt, eosque excludant? Concursum enim ascendendum naturaliter gradu remotiorum, quos nullus inter medius existens excludit, cum fratribus germanis defuncti turentur plerique, moti eo, quod cum proximè ascendentibus fratres veniunt, Vid. novel 118.  "rum, supra monstratum est." Vid. Joannis "Voet. com. ad Pandectas, tom. 2. lib. 38. t.
 "17 § 18.

But this question seems now to be settled in England, in consequence of three determinations; the first of which was given in the Exchequer, in the case of Poole v. Wilshaw, on the 9th of July, 1708:—the second in the case of Norbury v. Vicars, before Mr. Fortescue, master of the rolls, in November 1749:—and the third was delivered on the 14th January, 1754, in the case of Evelin v. Evelin, by the lord chancellor, who decreed in favour of the brother in exclusion of the grand-father, having founded his opinion partly in deference to the former determinations: partly in consideration of the present common law computation of degrees, relative to real estates; and partly upon the benefit, which must accrue to the public by preferring a younger man to an older, the brother of a deceased person to the grandfather, propter spem accrescendi.

And it was also declared to be the opinion of the court, that, if the point in question had been res integra, and solely determinable by the Roman law, the decree would still have been the same; which declaration, from so high an authority, must have great weight in ascertaining of the Novel, and must incline civilians in general to think more favourably for the future of Voet's arguments, which were particularly quoted and much relied upon by the court.

SI igitur defunctus neque descendentes neque ascendentes reliquerit, primos ad hæreditatem vocamus fratres et sorores ex eodem patre et ex eadem matre natos, quos etiam cum patribus ad hæreditatem vocavimus. Si autem defuncto fratres fuerint, et alterius fratris aut sororis præmortuorum filii, vocabantur ad hæreditatem isti cum de patre et matre thiis, masculis et fœminis : et, quancumque fuerint, tantam ex hæreditate percipient portionem, quantam eorum parens futurus esset accipere, si superstes esset. Unde consequens est, ut, si forte præmortuus frater, cujus filii vivunt, per utrumque parentem nunc defunctæ personæ jungebatur, superstites autem fratres patrem solum forsan aut matrem ei jungebantur, præponantur istius filii propriis thiis, licet in tertio sint gradu, (sive a patre sive a matre sint thii, et sive masculi sive fœminæ,) sicut eorum parens præponetur, si viveret. Et ex diverso, si quidem superstes frater ex utroque parente conjungitur defuncto, præmortuus autem per unum parentem jungebatur, hujus filios ab hæreditate excludimus, sicut ipse, si viveret, ab hæreditate excludebatur. ### CHAPTER III.

Of the succession of collaterals.

If a man leaves neither descendants nor ascendants at the time of his death, we first call his brothers and sisters of the whole blood, whom we have also called to inherit with the fathers of deceased persons.

But, when there are no brothers of the whole blood with the deceased, we call those, who are either by the same father only, or by the same mother.

And, if the deceased leaves brothers and also nephews by a deceased brother or sister, these nephews shall be called to succeed with their uncles and aunts of the whole blood to the deceased; but, however numerous these nephews are, they shall be entitled only to that share, which their parent would have taken, if alive. From whence it follows, that, if a man dies and is survived by the children of a deceased brother of the whole blood, and also by brothers of the half blood, then his nephews, (that is, children of his brother, by the whole blood,) are to be preferred to their uncles and aunts; for, although such nephews are themselves in the third degree, yet they are preferred, as their parent would have been, if living. And, on the contrary, if a man dies, and is survived by a brother of the whole blood, and by children of a brother of the half blood deceased, these nephews are excluded, as their father would have been, if he had lived. But among collaterals we allow the privilege of representation to the sons and daughters of brothers and sisters, and no farther; and we grant it only to brothers and sisters' children, when they concur with their uncles or aunts, paternal or maternal: for, when ascendants are called to inherit, we by no means permit the children of a deceased brother or sister to share in the succession; although the father or mother was of the whole blood with the deceased brother. But we have so far allowed the right of representation to brothers and sisters' children, that, being only in the third degree, they are called to inherit with those, who are in the second; and this is evident, because brothers and sisters' children are preferred to the uncles and aunts of the deceased, paternal as well as maternal; although they are all in the third degree of cognation.

But, if a deceased person leaves neither brothers nor brothers' children, we then call all the other collaterals according to the prerogative of their respective degrees, preferring the nearer to the more remote; and, if many are found in the same degree, the inheritance must be divided according to the number of persons; and our laws distinguish this manner of dividing an inheritance, by calling it a division in capita.

Πρώτη μέρος την κληρονομίαν. Primos ad hæreditatem vocamus.] We must here observe in relation to the distinction between the whole blood and half blood, that in England the rules of law are different, according to the nature of the estate which is to be taken; for, in case of lands the whole blood is always preferred, and the half blood is no blood inheritable by descent. 1 Co. inst. 14 a. But, in respect to personal estate, the law has not always been fixed and certain; inasmuch as the statute of the 23d of Car. II. (for the better settlement of the estates of intestates,) takes no notice of this distinction between the whole blood and the half-blood, but directs, that distribution shall be made among all those, who are in equal degree of kindred to the intestate. But, it being certain, that brothers and sisters of the half blood are in the same degree with brothers and sisters of the whole blood, it hath been the general opinion, that brothers and sisters of the half blood were entitled, by virtue of the statute, to an equal share of the intestate's estate, with the brothers and sisters of the whole blood, although there are several precedents of judgments given, since the statute, allowing the half blood to have but an half share. But the law in this respect has been fully settled ever since the decree of the house of lords in the case of Watts and others versus Crooke, upon an appeal from a decree in chancery, which had been given in favor of the half blood, and was affirmed by the house. Vid. Shower's cases in Par. 108, and Strahan's Domat. 683. 2 Mod 204. Harris.

Οὐδενι τροπον Nullo modo.] "Sancimus, "ut, si quis moriens relinquat ascendendum "aliquem et fratres, qui possint, cum parentibus vocari, et alterius præmortui fratris filios, cum ascendentibus et fratribus vocentur "etiam præmortui fratris filii. et tantum accipiant portionem, quantum eorum futurus "erat pater accipere, si vixisset." ### PRÆMIUM, OR PREFACE.

THIS amounts to an imperial constitution, giving a Sanction, to this compilation by Tribonian and his associates.

In nomine Domini nostri Jesu Christi. This is elsewhere used, as in the second and third confirmations of the digests, in the confirmation of the code, and of several of the novels. In nomine Domini nostri Jesu Christi, ad omnia consilia omnesque actus semper progredimur. Cod. 1. 27. 2. pr. Hence the usual solemn form of beginning last wills and testaments, IN THE NAME OF GOD, AMEN. That the ancient Romans, seldom entered on a business of importance sine consilio deorum et ope invocata, I am aware; but I suspect this practice, was rather of Christian origin: 3 Coloss. 17. "Whatever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God, and the father by him." See Dr. Taylor's observations on the proemium of the Institutes, Elem. Civ. Law. qto. 28. This form of testamentary introduction, cannot be necessary, unless under some precise and positive institution; of which I know none in the English or American law. I refer to Taylor, (loc. cit.) for a full dissertation on the titles assumed by the emperor, of which the following is a concise account.

Emperor. Imperator. Originally conferred on victorious generals, but first assumed as an imperial title by Augustus Cæsar.

Cæsar. A name that belonged to the family of Julius Cæsar as a Cognomen; and adopted by the emperors from Augustus to Nero. It was then given to the next in succession (destinati imperio) who were denominated nobilissimi Cæsares: it was reassumed by the emperors, on the removal of the government from Rome to Byzantium.

Flavius. Borrowed from the Vespasian family, and retained by many of the emperors after Vespasian; it was then dropt for some time, and reassumed by the fourth predecessor of Justinian.

Justinian. The proper name of the emperor.

Allemanicus, Geticus, &c. From the nations he claimed to have subdued.

Pius. A sir-name or agnomen, first imagined for Tiberius, the heir of Augustus, but not assumed. It was afterwards used by Antoninus and his successors.

Felix. A name which Sylla first took to himself after the death of the younger Marius: among the emperors, first assumed by Commodus.

Triumphator. From having triumphed in consequence of victories over the Persians and Vandals. Victor and Triumphator, were titles commonly assumed from the time of Constantine, the Great. Justinian was also often in camp, saluted CALLINICUS by acclamation: a greek title of the same import as victorious. Triumphator, was never given for the recovery of territory, but only when there was accession by conquest. So Q. Fulvius and L. Opimius were denied a triumph, because they only recovered Capua, and Fragellæ. 2 Val. Max. 8. 4.

Augustus. A question arose in the senate, (anno urb. cond. 727) whether the title Romulus, or Augustus, should be conferred on Octavian. From 63 Dion. Cassius, it should seem, he would have preferred the former title, but on the motion of Munatius Plancus, the name Augustus was preferred; and adopted by his successors. Though it was also assumed by several of the imperial family (as by Germanicus) who were not emperors. After the time of Diocletian, it was changed into Semper Augustus.

De usu Armorum et legum. Imperiam Majestatem. Majestas, during the time of the republic, meant somewhat like the modern phrase, the majesty of the people: implying the ultimate source of political power. It was afterwards applied to delegated authority, as that of prætors, judges, &c. Then to parental authority when it included the power of life and death: Majestas Patria. xxxiv. Livy. 2. has majestas matronarum: Pliny ix. 60 majestas pueritiæ. When the people by the lex regia conferred all power on the emperor, the word majestas was applied to the authority they delegated; as majestas Augusti, Tiberii, &c. Imperatoria majestas, was introduced by Galienus, and from his time continued. (Taylor.)

§ 1. De bellis et legibus, &c. Barbaricæ gentes. A name given by the Romans to all other nations but themselves and the Greeks. The five provinces of Africa here alluded to, have been possessed by the Vandals ninety-five years. Cod. 1. 27. de off. Præf. Præt. Af.

§ 2. De Compositione Codicis et Pandectarum. In the second year of his reign, A. D. 528, Justinian began his reformation of the law.

The Justinian code was finished by Tribonian 529. A new edition (Codex repetita praelectionis) was published by Justinian in 534. In 530, the Digest was begun. On the 16th December 533 it was finished. The digest is also called the PANDECTS from παν and δεχομαι to include all. Hence the usual reference to the digest (ff): being a careless writing of the Greek letter π. On the 21st Nov. 533, the Institutes appeared in their present form.

Quasi per medium profundum euntes. The books then published on the Roman law, amounted to upwards of two thousand αρθοι ποιμηλων rolls: many camel loads.

§ 3. De tempore, auctoritatibus, &c. magistro et exquæstore sacri palatii nostri. Magister Palatii or Officiorum, was an officer, somewhat, like the lord Chamberlain, or perhaps Master of the Household of England. The officers of the lower ages of the empire were generally called magistri, as magistri libellorum, scriniorum, officiorum. Hence the master of the rolls, masters in chancery, master of the Crown office, &c. of the English system. The great officers of the republic, and of the early times of the empire, are described in several titles of the first book of the digest: the officers of the lower empire, in the first and last book of the code.

Exquæstore, is an undeclinable ablative: the other cases, exquæstor, exquæstoris, exconsulis, &c. do not appear to be used. The quæstor of the Palace, was somewhat like the lord Chancellor, as imperatoris, armarium legum, &c. That is under the emperors: for the office of quæstor at first, was of the same kind with our secretary of the treasury. (Taylor 38. 228.) Constantine instituted the office of Quæstor Palatii. The Quæstores or Inquisitors, were magistrates long known, whose jurisdiction embraced only criminal cases. (Zozimus and Procopius de bello Persico.) Antecessor, a teacher and professor of law: the Jurisperiti, were practitioners.

Post Quadriennium. Five years, seem formerly to have been the term usually (indeed universally) allowed for the study of the law. For the instructions, as to the division of time allotted for studying the various parts of the civil law, viz. the Dupondii, Edictales, Papinianistæ, Lytæ, and Prolytæ, see the constitution (omnem republicam nostram, &c.) prefixed to the digests.

§ 6. Ex quibus libris Noster Caius. Caius lived under the emperor Marcus Aurelius, and his institutes were read in the schools. Beside the institutes of Caius, there were the institutes of Paulus, of Ulpian, of Callistratus, Florentinus, and Marcian. There were also prior codes, and digests: as the digests of Alfenus, Julianus, Celsus, Marcellus, Ulpian, the Pandects of Modestinus, &c.

Constitutional authority. I have retained Harris's expression, although there may be some ambiguity attached to it in this country, where the term implies something founded on our written constitutions, or fundamental laws, paramount to legislative acts: a distinction, that does not seem likely to last very long, in states where the power of the legislature like the power of the British parliament, is omnipotent. But in this passage, the word must be understood secundum subjectam materiam, as alluding to a particular species of Roman law. Inst. L. 1 Tit. 2. § 6. page 9. of the present work.

L. 1. (page 5.) DEFINITIO Justitiæ. Justice, is used, not only for the disposition to render every man his due, but sometimes also for the act by which this is done: as when we do a man justice.

§ 1. Definitio Jurisprudentiæ. This definition is very convenient for the alliance between church and state: an alliance that I hope will never take place in these states. I know of no things that ought to be kept more distinct, because they are so, than the affairs of this world, and those of the world to come: nor do I know of any two things that despotism has so sedulously laboured to intertwine. I would not so construe the old advice, Deorum Injuriam Diis curæ, as to protect gross violations of public decorum on religious subjects, or to pass over, irritating and offensive outrages against the religious opinions, or ceremonies of any persuasion. The defendant in The people against Ruggles, 8 Johnson's New York reports, 290, deserved to be punished; but the doctrine laid down in that case by the court, may be carried to a length, that would authorize any species of ecclesiastical tyranny, and prohibit any kind of religious discussion. Nor is it strengthened by citing cases from the jurisprudence of a country where there is a religion by law established; or by quoting the present passage from the civil law. It will have little weight with those who have perused the ecclesiastical history of the times of Justinian, and the three or four centuries immediately preceding, and subsequent. Are we at this day, to regulate the rights of conscience, and modify our system of religious toleration, by the notions of a Roman emperor of the 6th century? or adopt the church-and-state law of Great Britain?

Tit. 2. De jure naturali. Jus, here, is taken for the general system of natural, national and civil law, in contra-distinction, to the positive laws of each species. I consider all law, of whatever kind, as deduced, either from extensive and long-adopted usage, furnishing presumptive evidence of general expedience—or from reasonings founded on the nature and circumstances of human society, and pointing out the conclusions best adapted to general expedience.

Jus, Jussum, Jura, Jussa, mean a rule of action including an obligation, or duty to conform to it: therein differing from advice.

Or, it may mean an attribute or quality of actions or persons; what we use synonymously sometimes with right: as the rights of a conqueror, the rights of war and peace; the right of using, enjoying, suing, defending, &c. the rights of persons, the rights of things, all of which are called Jura. Under this meaning, may be included the rights belonging to particular situations in life, as the rights of magistrates and of citizens, master and servant, parent and child, husband and wife, &c.

Or, among the Romans, it might mean the administration of justice. De in jus vocando.

The other subordinate varieties of meaning of the word Jus, appear to me, all referable to those above enumerated.

The law of nature, and of nations, is collected from, 1st the practice of civilized nations, 2dly the opinions of the best writers on the subject. The writers usually cited in the British and American courts, are Albericus Gentilis, Puffendorf, Grotius with the annotations of Barbeyrac, Vattel, Burlamaqui, Heineccius, Bynkershoek and Rutherford.

§ 2. Ab appellatione et effectibus, page 7. Quirinus. From the Sabine word Quiris, a spear: or from Quiris, Mars, reputed father of Romulus: or from Cures, Quires a Sabine city, which furnished Rome with early settlers. Ovid Fasti II. 475.

§ 3. Divisio Juris. See Pandects or Digest 1. 6. 1. de Just. et Jure. Alterum enim expresse sancitur, et scripto promulgatur: alterum tacito populi consensu introducitur. See also ff de leg. as to written and common law. All this is conformable to the doctrine of the English and American writers. For even in this country, we adopt in every state, all our legal maxims and institutions not contained in constitutional or legislative acts, as the common law of the state. Nor can common law be entirely dispensed with even in the code of the United States, notwithstanding the very able opinions of Mr. Madison and Judge Chase.

The Romans had six kinds of law; LEX, PLEBISCITUM, SENATUS-CONSULTUM, CONSTITUTIONES PRINCIPIS, EDICTA MAGISTRATUUM, RESPONSA PRUDENTUM.

The Lex, was a Populiscitum; or decree of the people, on the motion of a senator, in a meeting of the comitia curiata, or the comitia centuriata.

The Plebiscitum, was a decree of the Plebian order, as distinguished from the Patrician, on the motion of a tribune of the people, in the comitia tributa. Plebs was a part only of the people.

Senatus Consultum: this was originally either an order, vote or resolution, on business appertaining to the senatorial body: or some act of the senate confirming some act of the people; or latterly under the emperors, when the comitia were transferred e campo (martis) ad Patres, these senatorial acts, were the only remains of legislation left to the senate.

Constitutiones Principes. Placita. Decreta. Imperial constitutions.

Augustus Cæsar, having contrived to make not only all actual authority, but almost all offices centre in his own person, became at length the sole lawgiver. Sexto demum consulatu (a. u. c. 725.) potentia securus, dedit jura, queis pace et principe uteremur III. Tacit. Ann. 28.

Sometimes the imperial constitutions were promulgated, mediante senatu; this was the general course taken by Augustus, at the advice of Mæcenas; in which he was followed by Tiberius. The mode was, to suggest the law, in an oration to the senate. Hence, for some years, the senatus consulta, under the emperors, were, Jura, orationibus Principum constituta. From the time of Augustus, the Leges, the Plebiscita, and the Senatus-Consulta, properly so called, as originating with the senate, were known no more. After Vitellius, the emperors were accustomed to appoint a Quæstor to make the suggestion in a speech to the senate. What the senate complaisantly decreed upon these suggestions, became a law. After a time, the emperor in lieu of calling upon the senate to decree, claimed the right of decreeing or enacting upon his own authority, the resolutions passed in the senate, on the suggestion contained in the imperial or quæstorial orations: and this was the last stage, the expiring embers of the senatus consulta; in whose place were substituted the edicts of the emperors.

The emperors, enacted laws either by Epistolæ or rescripts, by Decreta, by Edicta, or by Constitutions.

The Epistolæ, were imperial opinions upon cases of difficulty submitted from the provinces or elsewhere.

The Decreta, were judgments given by the emperor in person, in court. Augustus and Claudius, used to sit frequently and long for this purpose.

Edicta, were laws voluntarily enacted by the emperors, sine Senatu, but they were generally such as had been sanctioned by usage, or decreed also by the senate.

Mandates, were directions to particular persons.

Interpretations of laws, were also arrogated as within their jurisdiction by the emperors. The two last are of the nature of edicts.

The Imperial Constitutions, derived their force at first from the powers conferred on Augustus in 735 A. U. C.: extended afterward to Vespasian and his successors; and about the reign of the Antonines known as the Lex Regia; by which the will of the sovereign duly promulgated, was declared to have the force and effect of law. 1 Inst. tit. 2 § 6. The distinction there taken of constitutions, is into personal and general. The personal constitutions, were properly privileges, Lex privata. These were forbidden by the twelve tables; Privilegia ne irrogantor. The same maxim obtained during all the times of the republic. Velant

leges sacratæ, velant 12 tabulæ, leges privatis hominibus irrogari. Cic. pro Dom. § 17. These privileges or personal constitutions, were sometimes annexed to the person, and sometimes were real, as relating to some property or estate: so the right accorded to executors under the Roman law, of paying funeral expences in the first place, was considered as a real, not a personal right, being allowed ex intuitu causæ, non persone.

Harris's note on the lex regia is as follows. (p. 9 of his translation.) "There has been much controversy concerning this law: vid. Grav. de Rom. imp. lib. sing. c. 24 and Hopp. in Inst. l. h. t. but the following seems at least to be a probable conjecture. The senate and people conferred various honours on Augustus at different times. In the year 724 (A. U. C.) they made him tribune for life. In 727 they exempted him from the coercion of the laws. In 731 he was created perpetual consul: and in 735 a power was given to him either of amending or making whatever laws he thought proper. These and other decrees in favour of Augustus, were afterwards generally renewed at the commencement of the reign of every new emperor, as appears plainly from Tacitus, tum senatus, omnia principibus solita, Vespasiano decrevit Tacit. Hist. 11. 3. Thus in time, all the several decrees of the senate, by being frequently renewed together, became as it were, one law, and were called Lex Imperii or Regia: and they probably gained this title in imitation of the ancient lex regia, by which the Romans conferred the supreme power upon Romulus in the infancy of their state, Liv. lib. 34 c. 6. Elementa Juris per Rob. Eden. p. 17."

Edicta magistratuum; seu Prætorum; jus honorarium. Prætor was at first a word synonymous with chief or commander (Cor. Nepos in Miltiade.) The office of Prætor (partaking of the English offices of mayor and recorder) was first created A. U. C. 387. This was the Prætor urbanus, or city magistrate. In the year A. U. C. 511. A Prætor peregrinus, was appointed, after the model of the Athenian Πολεμαρχος to decide causes, wherein aliens were concerned: though sometimes one man, held both offices either by original election, or subsequent delegation, or by substitution in case of death. (Taylor 211.) The branches of law, were afterwards so divided and subdivided certainly not without reason and foresight, that the Prætors amounted to eighteen in number. They had for the most part equitable jurisdiction. Jus prætorium, adjuvandi vel supplendi, vel corrigendi juris civilis gratia, propter utilitatem publicam introductam, Dig. 1. 1. 7. 1.

It was also their duty, at the annual commencement of their office, to publish the forms of proceeding, and the rules of court, (if I may so say) which should operate during their Prætorship. For I do not understand this practice to extend to the legal maxims, by which their decision should be guided.

Hence, the actionis civiles, were not the same with the actionis prætorie. In the time of the emperor Hadrian, Ann. 884, a selection from Prætorian determinations was made, called the Perpetual edict, and enacted as part of the Roman law: not from its own authority as jus honorarium magistratum, but under the sanction of the imperial constitution.

The Prætorian annual edicts or forms of proceeding, were published, on a Tabula gypso dealbata, or Album; a board plaistered with gypsum γυψω αληθιμμενος (the gypsum of the Greeks and Romans was the same with our plaister of Paris, that is a sulphat of lime.)

These Leges annuæ, according as their expedience was discovered were continued; and then became edicta translatitia. Occasionally also, the Curule Ædiles published edicts, which as their expedience seemed to merit, were also incorporated in the jus honorarium. See dig. de Ædilito edicto. 31. 1. 1. 38. 40. 41. 42.

Responsa prudentium. Many lawyers whose particular application and abilities, had rendered them eminent in the profession, undertook to give answers to such questions as were proposed to them.
[ *409 ] But *these answers were of no weight in the time of the Republic, nor even under Augustus, who empowered the lawyers to give their opinions, by a general commission; which yet did not procure them any great authority, Dig. 1. 2. 2. 46. But their opinions grew into considerable credit in the reign of Tiberius, who prohibited any person from presuming to give an opinion in matters of law, without a special licence. Still the answers of the lawyers had not the force of the laws, for Tiberius in his licences, laid no injunction upon his judges, to regard these answers. It is therefore highly probable that the answers of the lawyers were first considered as law, under Valentinian the third; because he confirmed the writings of Gaius, Ulpian, Paul, Papinian, and others, nominally; and forbad the judges to swerve from the opinions of these lawyers in points of law: and because many inconveniences arose from the various opinions which even these lawyers gave on the same question, the emperor ordained that the judges should be governed by a majority, and that in case of an inequality they should follow the opinion of those to whom Papinian adhered, ubi diversæ sententiæ proferuntur, potius numerus vincat auctorum: vel si numerus equalis sit, ejus partis precedat auctoritas in qua excellentis ingenii vir PAPINIANUS emineat. Cod. 1 Theod. t. 4. 1 un. de responsis prudentum. (Harris in loc.)

The Patroni were for a long time Patricians; gratis advocates, and agents. Their clients were bound to relieve them from captivity if taken, and to portion their daughters. Hence at first, the fee of a lawyer, as the fee of a counsel and a physician yet is, in England, was quiddam honorarium: afterwards, it became a profession, and fees were taken, which were regulated by the Lex Cincia.

From their vigilant watching over the cases of their clients, they were called cautores. Hence Dr. Taylor after Scaliger, fancifully derives Cavilling, Cavillari, Cavillatio, from Cavere.

Such are the various kinds of the Roman or civil law; of which the present book is a summary, containing the general principles that pervade it. Great indeed have been the obligations that Justinian's posterity owed to that emperor, for the laborious, and invaluable digest of law compiled under his auspices. A work that no succeeding age has hitherto equalled. The Russian code drawn up under the directions of the empress Catharine, and the Tuscan code of Leopold, have merit indeed; but they are trifles compared to the great work now under consideration. Something approaching to it, has been attempted by the emperor Napoleon; and the code Napoleon as *well as the in- [ *410, ] troductory orations in defence of the leading articles contained in it, have great merit.

The authors or redacteurs of the Code civil Napoleon, where Por-tronchet, Bigot-Preameneu, and Maleville, as appears by the Discours Preliminaire to the "Projet de Code civil," presented by those gentlemen as a committee appointed by government on the 24th Thermidor, year 8, and published the year after. Cambaceres indeed reported a project of a code civil to the convention some years before, which, although Portalis and the others praise sufficiently, they adopt sparingly. Cambaceres was consul in the year 9.

The British, and of course the American code, is now becoming what the Roman code was, previous to the labours of Tribonian and his coadjutors: αριθος κοιμηλων πολλων, many cart loads. Cannot the same condensed view be taken of our law, as was taken by Justinian of the Roman, and by Napoleon of the French code? I suspect the generality of the profession are of opinion this cannot be done: I am not so. Half a dozen men of talents dividing the labour, under the superintending guidance of some one person to whom the pen should be ultimately committed, might finish the work in four years, according to my view of the subject: and a consummation it would indeed be, devoutly to be wished.

Tit. 3. De jure personarum. Aut liberi sunt aut Serui. It would require a volume to enter into the great question of slavery, which has been well discussed of late years. I would observe briefly,

That throughout the whole of the Jewish History, from the days of Nimrod downwards, there was no controversy, but that captives taken in war could be made slaves, and that their posterity were considered as slaves also. All the patriarchs counted their slaves, among their goods and chattels, among their oxen, their horses, their camels, &c.

Slavery among the Jews took place

1. When a man sold himself through poverty, 25 Lev. 39.
2. When a father sold his children, 21 Ex. 7.
3. When creditors seized and sold their insolvent debtors, or their children, 2 Kings c. 4. v. 1.
4. A thief was sold when he could not pay his fine, 22 Ex. 3, 4.
5. Prisoners of war.
6. A Hebrew slave ransomed from a Gentile might be sold to another Hebrew by his master.

But the Hebrews were slaves to the Hebrews for six years only, or until the sabbatical jubilee. 21 Ex. 2. If a slave married however, he could not take away with him his wife and children, which belonged to the master. 21 Ex. 4. If from attachment to the family, the slave refused to be freed at the end of six years, or at the sabbatical year, then his master might bore his ears with an awl before the magistrate, and the slave became bound for life. The Hebrew slaves were treated more as hired servants by the Jews: not so the bondmen procured from among the heathen. But even from the heathen, they were forbidden to acquire a slave by stealth. See 21 and 25 Levit.

[ *411 ] *The Phenicians, Carthaginians, Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans, all practised slavery without any doubt being entertained of its propriety.

Vendere cum possis Captivum, occidere noli. Hor.

The situation of slaves was very bad in early times. Hector tells Andromache that she will be condemned on the fall of Troy to draw water as a slave: so Euripides introduces Hecuba as chained to the gate of Agamemnon. The Phenicians seem to have been first in the practice of kidnapping; see 14th Odyss. All nations, trading in slaves seem prone to mean and clandestine villanies; it is this spirit that has tempted the British slave traders to practice and encourage the same base method of procuring cargoes. Slaves were very ill treated among the Carthaginians. The abject state of the Helotes among the Lacedemonians has become proverbial.

Slaves were also in a bad state among the Romans. They were frequently chained to the gate of a great man's house as porters.

I copy the following summary of the circumstances of their condition from Dr. Taylor (Elem. civ. Law 429); the authorities are accurately cited.

"Slaves were held pro nullis: pro mortuis; how this is to be understood consult A. Faber (and Gothofred ad Dig. 50. 17. 32, 209.) pro Quadrupedibus: nay, were in a much worse state than any cattle

" whatsoever, as the same author (Faber) has shewn. They had no head in the state, no name, title, or register: they were not capable of being injured: nor could they take by purchase or descent: they had no heirs, and therefore could make no will: exclusive of what was called their peculium, whatever they acquired was their master's: they could not plead nor be pleaded for, but were excluded from all civil concerns whatever: they could not claim the indulgence of absence reipublicæ causa: they were not entitled to the rights and considerations of matrimony, and therefore had no relief in case of adultery: nor were they proper objects of cognation or affinity, but of quasi-cognation only: they could be sold, transferred or pawned, as goods or personal estate; for goods they were, and as such they were esteemed: they might be tortured for evidence: punished at the discretion of their lord, or even put to death by his authority: together with many other civil incapacities which I have not room to enumerate."

The first law in their favour was the lex Cornelia de sicariis, by which the killing even of a slave became punishable. Dig. 48. 8.

The jus vitæ et necis claimed by the master, was restrained by Claudius the successor of Caligula. See also Dig. 48. 8. 2.

*In 813 ab u. cond. Nero by the lex Petronia, deprived [ *412 ] masters of the power of sending their slaves to fight wild beasts at the public shews.

The Emperor Adrian, prohibited generally cruel treatment toward slaves; and he banished Umbricia a lady of quality, for five years, quod ex levissimis causis suas ancillas atrocissime tractasset.

Antoninus Pius, applied the Lex Cornelia de sicariis, specifically to the masters of slaves: and the same law was strengthened by Severus and by Constantine. Cod. L. 1. de emendant. serv.

Slaves might always induce an investigation by flying to the statues of the princes. Cod. L. 1 de his qui, &c.

The prevalence of christianity, though neither Christ nor his apostles have condemned slavery, (4 Philem. 11.) contributed gradually but greatly to amend the condition of slaves.

Athenæus (L. c.) says there were several persons at Rome who had ten and twenty thousand slaves: and in VI. 20 he states that at a time when the citizens of Athens were only 21,000, the slaves amounted to 400,000, and that the small Island of Ægina contained 470,000. In Africa, slavery has been established from time immemorial: the Arabs had African slaves, long before the settlements of the Portuguese: and though some additional aggravations have occurred from kidnapping, and incursions made for the express purpose of procuring cargoes, still the Africans, like all the nations of antiquity, were from the earliest ages in the practice of making slaves of prisoners of war : I forbear any discussion of the right of slavery, as a question too metaphysical and abstruse, to be entered upon here. Nor will my view of it, coincide equally with the sentiments of the middle and northeastern, and those of the southern states. In England, the inexpedience of the practice is considered as settled, and there appears but one opinion in that nation on the general subject of the slave trade, which is, that it ought to be abolished. The law respecting slavery is also now fixed. The case of Somerset the negro has determined that no man of whatever colour can be held as a slave in that country. But the abstract question—that which respects the right of reducing a human creature to slavery under any circumstances, has not yet been investigated so profoundly as its importance deserves. But this is not the place to investigate it, nor would it be easy shake off the bias of previous habits and prejudgments.

After the travels of Park and Hornemann, no man can reasonably pretend that the Africans have a right to complain, who from one end to the other of that quarter of the world, have exercised from the beginning, and still do exercise the right of reducing each other to [ *413 ] slavery, *with concomitant practices full as bad as any that the West Indies can furnish. Knowing these things, I cannot be greatly interested in favour of the blacks.

But I exceedingly regret the prevalence of slavery and the slave trade. All absolute power, has a direct tendency, not only to detract from the happiness of the persons who are subject to it, but to deprave the good qualities of those who possess it. I have no right to say that it makes men careless, unfeeling, and unjust, as to the sufferings of a fellow creature, because these dispositions are very frequently indeed counteracted by the natural good qualities of the master, and by the general manners of civilized society, at a period when kindness and humanity are fostered and respected by public opinion : but the whole history of human nature, in the present and every former age, will justify me in saying that such is the tendency of power on the one hand and slavery on the other. Nor can any country be so well cultivated by slave labour, as by the labour of freemen, fairly recompensed ; nor can industry be the character of such a state of society ; nor can there be any permanent feeling, either of individual or of public security. Hence, I cannot but approve of the prohibition of the slave trade, as one of the steps toward a gradual abolition of the whole system of slavery ; a system that greatly detracts from the industry, the improvement, the security, and the happiness of society, wherever it prevails.

In England, the species of slavery termed Villenage, was abolished by 12 Ch. 2. The last case concerning villenage in the books, is that of Crouche, 10th Eliz. Dyer 266. C. pl. 11. So are the Serfs par naissance in France: but under the old regime, there were Serfs held by Mortmain, and Serfs who became so by loss of their heritage: that is under one or other of the signoral customs, or droits feudaux. Such Serfs could not aliene their Serf-tenements, unless to a Serf of the same lord: they could not marry a free person, or the Serf of another lord: they could not put their sons into the clerical profession: they could not make a will to the prejudice of their lord, &c. See 1 Ferriere's Justinian 76. Somewhat of the same kind obtained in Germany, and still more in Poland. At present I apprehend this class of society no longer exists in Europe.

There is no where in the scriptures that I recollect, any direct prohibition of slavery, except as to the bondage of the Jews among themselves; but there can be no doubt, of its being contrary to the general spirit and precepts of christianity, which has contributed not a little to the abolition of villenage, as well as of slavery. In the year 1514, Henry 8th manumitted two of his villains in the following form, “*Whereas God created all men free, but afterwards [ *414 ] “the laws and customs of nations, subjected some under “the yoke of servitude, we think it pious and meritorious with God to “manumit Henry Knight, a Taylor, and John Hule a Husbandman, “our natives, as being born within the manor of Stoke Clymmsland, “in our county of Cornwall, &c.” See Barrington's observations on the statutes, 2nd edition, 249. So, Fitzherbert, in his readings on 4 Edw. 1st, Extenta Manerii, after giving the state of villenage in Henry 8th's time, says that it then began to decrease in all parts of England; and he thinks that no men should be bound but unto God, and that it is contrary to the principles of Christianity. Barrington 251. Robertson, in his hist. of Charles the 5th, v. 1 p. 324, gives a great number of instances and quotations, to prove the frequency of manumission, from a religious principle, together with the forms used on such occasions. Indeed Christianity, greatly contributed in the middle ages, to soften the barbarous manners of the times. Thus a law of Bavaria, for the protection of foreigners in Lindebrouge's collection says, Si autem aliquis tum presumptuosus fuerit ut peregrinis nocere voluerit, 14 solid. mulctetur. Deus nam dixit (Exod. 21,) peregrinum et pauperem non contristabis de rebus suis. Barrington, 22. See, also the interesting account of the TREUGA DEI. in 1. Robertson's Ch. 5 p. 343—356. Hence, seems to be derived the clause in our indictment for assault, that the Prosecutor was in the peace of God, and the King.

Sir Thomas Smith, who was secretary of state to Edward 6, and then to Elizabeth, observes that he never knew of any villains in gross, in his time, and that villains appendant to manors (villeins regardant: glebæ adscriptitii) were but very few in number: that since England had received the christian religion, men began to be affected in their consciences at holding their brethren in servitude; and that upon this scruple in process of time, the holy fathers, monks and friars, so burthened the minds of those whom they confessed, that temporal men were glad to manumit all their villains. But he adds, the holy fathers themselves did not manumit their own slaves, and the bishops behaved like the other ecclesiastics. But at last some bishops enfranchised their villains for money, and others on account of popular outcry: and at length the monasteries falling into lay hands, were the occasion that almost all the villains in the kingdom were manumitted. Smith's repub. ch. 10. Harris.

In England, although it was determined that trover would not lie for a negro, because the owner had not such an absolute property in his negro that he might kill him; (Salk. 666. Ld. Ray. 1274, [ *415 ] *Smith v. *Gould*) yet trespass per quod servitium amisit would lie; and if property were proved in the negro, he would not have been able to maintain his liberty by baptism or residence in England (5 Mod. 182 Chamberline v. Harvey) until the great case of Somerset the negro, by which it was determined that there could be no slavery in England. See the argument of Mr. Hargrave in that case, in the last volume of his edition of the state trials. Of the supposed efficacy of baptism formerly, the reader may find a very curious case in 3 Mod. 120. Sir Thomas Grantham's case.

Villains (hinds) could acquire no property, for quicquid acquiritur servo, acquiritur domino, says my Lord Coke. Co. Litt. 117. C. As to the distinctions relating to the right of the master to wages or earnings acquired by servants or apprentices, see the notes on the above cited passages in Harg. Co. Litt. and 1 Campb. Rep. Nis. Prius 527, Thompson v. Havelock. Lord Coke in his note on villenage, deduces (after St. Ambrose) the origin of slavery from the introduction of wine: non esset hodie servitus, si ebrietas non esset: Canaan being condemned to bondage for exposing the nakedness of his father Noah.

§ 4. Quibus modis servi, &c. Venundari passus est. This was permitted also by a senatus consultum in the time of Claudian, though manifestly contrary to the general rule that no man can change his condition on his own authority. Dig. 40. 12. 37. That the price paid was completely at his disposal, L. 1. and 5. Cod. de liber caus. Dig. 40. 13. Dig. 28. 3. L. 6. Cujus adds another condition, 5thly That he should neither be filius familias or manumitted, for he cannot injure the rights of the Paterfamilias or of the Patron. Dig. 40. 12 L. 1. Leo Philosophus abrogated this senatus consultum by his Novel 59.

A freeman might also become a slave, by ingratitude towards his patron, by condemnation to the mines or wild beasts, and so becoming servus Pene. By a senatus consultum Claudianum, a free woman indulging in servile amours might lose her freedom.

Nascuntur ex ancillis nostris. Cujas gives a fanciful analogy. Eodem jure ex ancillis nati servi sunt, quo nata cedunt solo. Mater enim solo comparatur, vis patris nata.

§ 5. De liberorum et Servorum Differentia. In England the people are divided into 1st The King and heir apparent. 2dly The nobility or *peerage (a) temporal, consisting of dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts and barons, (b) spiritual, consisting of archbishops and bishops. 3dly The commonalty: consisting of baronets whose titles are hereditary; knights, whose titles are personal only and not hereditary; esquires or gentlemen, acquired by birth, by office, by profession, or by courtesy; yeomanry, tradesmen, artificers, and labourers.

In this country, the title of "excellency" sometimes given to the President of the United States, and to governors of states, as well as the title "honourable" bestowed on judges and members of Congress, and "esquire" applied to justices of peace and practitioners at law, I regard as founded on courtesy and custom only. The practice of addressing the president, a governor, or a judge, as an esquire, certainly arises from neglecting the old adage that omne majus continet in se minus.

Tit. 4. De ingenui definitione p. 12. By the civil law, children born in wedlock (as in England) followed the condition of the fathers, Dig. 5. 19. If born out of wedlock (contubernio) they follow the condition of the mother. In England, a bastard being nullius filius is in all cases free, the presumption being in favour of liberty: so if a man marry a Nef, she becomes free forever after: and a child born in such wedlock is also free. See all the learning on this subject in Harg. Co. Litt. 123. b.

Tit. 5. Definitio et origo Libertinorum, &c. p. 13. In the early times of the republic Libertus was a freed man, and Libertinus his descendant. Suet. Claud. 24. 8. Isid. 4. But this distinction fell into disuse.

§ 1. Quibus modis manumittitur, p. 14. Liberty could anciently be conferred but three ways, viz. by testament: by the census: and by the vindicta, or lictor's rod. This is evident from the following passages in Tully: si neque censu, neque vindicta, neque testamento, liber factus est, non est liber. In Top.

A man was said to be liber censu, when his name was inserted in the censor's roll, with the approbation of his master at the public census. But the method of acquiring liberty by the vindicta, was more solemn and formal. For it was necessary that the master placing his hand upon the head of the slave, should say in the presence of the prætor, hunc hominem liberum esse solo: to which the prætor always replied, dico eum liberum esse more Quiritum. Then the lictor or serjeant receiving the vindicta or rod from the prætor, struck the new freed man several blows with it upon the head, face, and back, after which his name was registered in the roll of freedmen, and his head being close shaved, a cap was given to him as a token of liberty. Harris.

[ *417 ] *This is not quite accurate. The lictor gave the slave, a gentle blow on the head with the vindicta, and a box on the ear, and made him turn round thrice. Afterward under the latter emperors, in lieu of the census, the master made a public declaration of his intention to free the slave, in church. Slaves were also manumitted by letter, signed by the master in presence of five witnesses: or before his friends, five witnesses being present at the declaration. The enfranchisement by vindicta, might take place before a consul as well as a prætor; and in the provinces before a proconsul, his legate, or deputy. See dig. 1. 16. 2. cod. 7. tit. 6. de lat. lib. toll. Ib. l. 1. § 2. de his qui in eccles. and Sigonius l. 1. de antiq. Jur. Civ. Rom.

The ancient form of manumitting villains, was thus. "If any person be desirous to enfranchise his slave, let him with his right hand deliver the slave to the sheriff in a full county, proclaim him exempt from the bond of servitude by manumission, shew him open gates and ways, deliver him firearms, to wit, a lance and a sword, whereupon he becomes a free man." Harris, from Wilkins' leges anglo-saxonicae. Afterwards, manumission of villains was conferred by grant and release, of which Harris has given a form from the complete Clerk, 1676.

Alius multis modis. Enumerated cod. 7. tit. 6 de lat. lib. tollendâ.

Tit. 5. § 3. De libertinorum divisione sublata. The three classes of freed men, here mentioned, had different rights attached to their respective conditions.

1st. Freed men of the greater liberty, were Roman citizens with all privileges, but they were obliged to leave a part of their property by will to the patron. They were required to be thirty years of age, and their masters twenty, at the time of their manumission by the law Ælia Sentia; and all the usual and prescribed forms were to be strictly observed. If any of these requisites were wanting, the slave became only, 2dly Latinus Junianus, under the law Junia Norbana, enacted 771 in the consulship of Junius Silanus, and Norbanus Balbus; which confined the right of being considered as freedmen of the greater liberty, to those who had been enfranchised, by will, by census, or by the vindicta. These Latini, were not Roman citizens, they died slaves, but during life they enjoyed the other privileges of freemen, see 3 Instit. 8. 3dly, The Dedititii, were persons who, while slaves, had suffered corporeal punishment for some crime, and were named after some tributaries to the Roman people, who had revolted and were compelled to lay down their arms. Dedititii, quia se suaque omnia dedicerunt. They could never become Roman citizens. All *these distinctions [ *418 ] were destroyed by the constitutions of Justinian. Cod. 7. tit. 5. l. 1 and tit. 6. l. 1. Harris. Ferriere.

Tit. 6. § 1. De servo instituto, &c. Injuria defunctus officiator, p. 16. It was ignominious for the goods of the deceased to be sold at public auction for debts, see Cic. orat. pro. Quintio.

Ib. § 3. Quid sit in fraudem, &c. The fraudulent intent may lose its effect in this case: a man knowing himself insolvent, enfranchises his slave: by subsequent acquisition he becomes solvent: the slave in this case continues free.

In the following case, the creditors may lose the slave, although there was no fraud accompanying his manumission. A master enfranchises during known and acknowledged solvency. His house and goods are afterwards consumed by fire. The manumission cannot be set aside, for it was fair and legal when made. Ferriere.

In England, there are two statutes made to protect creditors against fraudulent conveyances and devises, 27 Eliz. ch. 4. and 3 W. and M. ch. 14, see Wilson v. Knubley, 7 East, 128.

Ib. § 5. Quæ sunt justæ causæ. See the 9th and six following laws of the digest, de manum vindic. and the 21st law of the digest qui et e quibus manum that is dig. 40. 3 and dig. 40. 9.

A son might become master of his father, if he had been left heir by a testator, to whom the whole family belonged.

Procurator. Cujas thinks this is only procurator ad lites, not adnegocia. L. 22 observ. c. 16. A mere agent ad negocia, might be under the age of 17. see L. 3. § ult. de minor. (dig. 4. 4) and dig. 14. 3. de Instit. actione.

Tit. 7. § 1. De lege Furia Caninia. This is a law passed in the time of Augustus to prevent the city being crowded with idle and disorderly persons. Suet. Aug.

Tit. 8. § 2. De Jure civ. Rom. in servos. I have already treated of the condition of slaves among the Romans.

Ad sacram statuum. It was anciently the policy of almost all kingdoms to allow of sanctuaries or places of refuge, and they are said to have been permitted in England almost as soon as Christianity was received. In the eighth year of Henry 8th, the following points (which will give the reader some idea of the power of sanctuaries) were affirmed and resolved in the case of Savage, to wit: That in England the pope without the king could not make a sanctuary: that sanctuaries must commence with a grant from the king, and then be confirmed by the pope: but that if they began by a bull from the pope, it would be insufficient, although they were afterwards confirmed by [ *419 ] *the king: that the general words Ambitus, Præcinctus, Clausura, in such grants, whether papal or regal, did only include the church, cloister, dormitory and church yard, but did not extend to the gardens, barns, stables and the like: that sanctuary de jure communi was only for forty days (which was a privilege belonging to all parochial churches and church yards) and that sanctuary for life, or as long as the person pleased (which was an usual privilege of religious houses) depended upon special grants, which were to be well proved, or otherwise were null and void. Keilway 188. Gibson's Codex 1188.

Sanctuary never extended farther in civil cases, than to save the body from execution. In criminal cases, it did not extend to treason; but it did to murder and other felonies. 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 32.

Sanctuaries lost much of their privileges by 22 Hen. 8. ch. 19. 27 H. 8. ch. 19. 32 Hen. 8. ch. 12. and ch. 20. and they were entirely abolished by 21 James 1. ch. 28. See Middleton's letter from Rome, 113. (Harris).

Major asperitas dominorum. In England the lord might rob, beat and chastise his villain at will, but was not allowed to maim him: for then, the villain might have had an appeal of mayhem against him. Le seigneur poit rob, naufrer, et chastiser son vellein a son volunt. Salve qu'il ne poit lui maim, car donques il avcra appel de mayhem envers lui. Termes de la Ley.

Tit. 9. De patria potestate, p. 22. Anciently fathers had the power of life and death over their children. This was restrained by Trajan who directed emancipation in cases of great severity. L. 1 of the Dig. si a parenti: and by Adrian L. 5 of the Dig. de Leg. Pomp. de parricid: and by Alexander Severus, L. 3. Cod. de patria potest: so Ulpian de Adulteris: Inauditum filium pater occidere non potest, sed accusare eum apud præfectum, præsidemve provinciæ debet.

A man might acquire the rights of a father by marriage, legitimation and adoption.

As to the right of a father to the acquisitions of his child, See post. Inst. l. 2. tit. 9.

Tit. 9. § 1. Definitio nuptiarum. Marriage in this passage is termed indiscriminately nuptiæ and matrimonium. There are other terms also applied to marriage, as Connubium, Conjugium, Consortium, Contubernium, Concubinatus.

Matrimonium, originally meant the union of male and female for the purpose of procuring offspring. Maris et fœminæ conjunctio, as the 2nd Tit. of the Institute has it. Nuptiæ strictly means, the marriage ceremony. Hence the expressions Justum matrimonium, **Justæ nuptiæ*, meaning that kind of marriage and marriage [ *420 ] ceremony, which was conducted according to law : and this was matrimony κατ' ἐξοχήν, matrimonium and nuptiæ soon became the popular expressions for lawful marriage.

Connubium, conjugium, consortium, are metaphorical synonymies for lawful matrimony. Connubium, a mutual submission to the marriage ceremony, from nubendo i. e. tegendo ; it being the custom of the bride to cover her head with the flammeum or veil. Dr. Taylor deduces it without sufficient reason as I think, more distantly from a Hebrew root used 27. Is. 6. signifying procreation, production. Conjugium, a mutual yoke. Consortium, a mutual lot in life ; for better for worse, as the English Church ceremony, properly states it.

The Contubernium was the matrimony of slaves, a permitted cohabitation ; not partaking of lawful marriage, which they could not contract. It was applied also to other kinds of unlawful connection. Cod. 2. 21. 4. Cod. 5. 5. 3. Cod. 5. 5. 9. Cod. 6. 59. 9. Hence there was no process of adultery in favour of a slave. Cod. 9. 9. 23. Dig. 48. 5. 6. But although civil forms might be disregarded in Contuberniis, the laws of nature as to incestuous commerce, were held in full force, for the reason assigned in Inst. 1. 15. 3. See also dig. 23. 2. 14. 2.

Concubinatus. Semi-matrimonium ; conjugium inaequale. A full description of this may be seen in the last title of dig. 25. The Greeks also allowed of this left-handed marriage, as I believe it is called in Europe : μυγάμος. Not. ad Demosth. C. Nearchi T. III. p. 624. Concubinage was entered into before witnesses, otherwise it became prostitution, dig. 25. 7. 3. The parties might dissolve the contract and cohabitation at pleasure, dig. 25. 7. 1. It did not admit of adultery. Dig. 25. 7. 3. As marriage was discouraged between officers of state in the provinces, and female inhabitants of the same province, they were permitted to take concubines of the province. Ib. l. 5. dig. 23. 2. 38 and 57. and Cod. si quacumque prædict potest.

Concubinage was regulated by Constantine. Cod. 5. 26. univ. 7. 15 ult. and Justinian, Nov. 18. 74. and 89. Concubina est mulier libera inupta quam vir cœlebs domi concubinatus causa solam habet. That the man should be unmarried, was not required by the old or prior laws relating to concubinage, but the woman only. All that was formerly required of the man, was, that he should be at least twelve years of age, dig. 25. 7. 1: and that he should not have more concubines than one. Concubinage was abolished by the emperor Leo. Nov. Leo. 91.

[A concubine did not mean in the civil law a harlot; the concubine was a person taken to cohabit in the manner, and under the character, of a wife, but without being authorized thereto by a legal marriage. Concubinage was confined to a single person, was of perpetual obligation as much as marriage itself; was a society recognized by the laws, and in general entered into between persons who, by laws of policy, were forbidden by the state to marry together for want of quality or fortune; the concubine might even be accused of adultery. Those characters show how widely mistaken we should be if we annexed the idea of immodesty and contempt to the name of concubine among the ancients, as we do in modern times. See 1 Brown's Civil Law, 80. 81. 5 Gibbon's Hist. 399, 400, 8vo. 1828.]

Concubinage, I understand, obtained not many years ago [ *421 ] in Germany, *if it does not at this day. I do not enter at large into the marriage ceremonies of the Romans; they may be sought in modern compilers, Rosinus, Adams; but after Dr. Taylor, I shall notice the three kinds of lawful marriage among that people.

Marriages were solennes, solemn; or minus solennes, less solemn. The solennes were either USU, FARRE, OR COEMPTIONE.

Marriage, Usu, by prescription, is briefly described by Servius, in his commentary on 1 Virg. Georg. 31. and 18 Aul. Gell. 6. When a woman cohabited with a man for a whole year, with a view to matrimony, (matrimonii ergo), she became his property by prescription, under a law of the 12 Tables. Till the year was expired, she was uxor, matrona, but not materfamilias. An absence of three nights would break the prescription, or usucapion; this interruption was usurpatio.

This seems to have been the oldest form of Roman marriages.

Marriage, Farre: Confarreatio. This was the most solemn form of marriage among the Romans: by it, a woman became copartner with her husband in all his sacred rites, and in all his substance, and was his sole heir at his death, if he died without children. Dion. Halic. l. c. If he left children, she succeeded to equal portions of his estate. The children were patrimi, and matrimi, and had peculiar privileges; certain priests, and the vestal virgins being chosen from among them. 4 Tacit. ann. 16. 1. Aul. Gell. 12. The ceremony could not be performed without the presence of the Pontifex maximus, or the Flamen Dialis: Servius in 1 Georg. It was attended with the ceremony of the parties mutually breaking together a cake, Farra, Panis farreus. Ten witnesses were necessary. Ulpian, tit. 9. § 1. It was dissolved by a similar ceremony, Diffarreatio. It fell into disuse, about the time of Tiberius, 4 Tac. ann. 16.

Marriage, Coemptio: or by mutual purchase. The man and the woman delivered to each other a small piece of money. Servius ad 4. Virg. Æneid. 103. Cic. orat. I. 57. The man asked the woman, will you become to me the mother of the family? To which she replied, I will. In her turn, she asked, will you become to me a father of the family? and he answered, I will. The woman then delivered her piece of money and herself, into the hands of the man. Until this period, and preceding the Domi ductio, the woman was sponsa only: after the Domi ductio, the marriage was completed. Dig. 35. 1. 15.

Coemptio, was also called conventio in manum. The wife stood in point of heirship to the husband, in place of a daughter.

Among the Romans, the foundation of marriage was the CONSENT of *the parties. Consensus, non Concubitus, facit [ *422 ] nuptias. Dig. 50. 17. 30. Dig. 35. 1. 15. Dig. 24. 1. 32. 13.

But this consent, must have been between parties willing to contract, of proper age, (that is 14 for the male, 12 for the female,) free from disabilities of relationship, able to contract, free from precontract, from legal disability, and that consent must have been ratified also by the consent of the parent. Instit. 1. 10. pr. which given afterward by Ratihabitio, would not answer the purpose of confirming the marriage. Dig. 1. 5. 11. Ib. 23. 2. 65. 1. Ib. 48. 5. 13. 6. But latterly a subsequent confirmation seems to have been valid: Cod. 4. 28. 7. Without this consent, the issue were illegitimate. Inst. 1. 11. 7. In cases of insanity or captivity, the consent of the parents was not necessary. L. 35. Cod. de nupt. L. 28. Cod. de Episcop. aud.

In England both by the canon law, (canons of 1603. Can. 62, 63. 100, 101.) and the statute law, the consent of parents is required: the want of it indeed, did not avoid the marriage, but the minister who married them was punished by 7 and 8 W. 3. ch. 35. But by the marriage act of 26 Geo. 2. ch. 33. beside punishing the minister, the marriage is declared void in many cases where the requisites of that act are not complied with. The general train of chancery decisions, is also much in favour of devises on condition of marriage with consent of Guardians, &c. See 1 Fonb. 246. 1st n. edit. or L. 1. ch. 4. § 10. n.

The legal prohibitions were PARENTAGE, (Parentela) RELATIONSHIP, PUBLIC DECORUM, RANK, POWER and AGE: of which in their order.

Parentage: Cognation: Consanguinity. The connection of persons descended from a common parent or stock. Strictly, Cognati, are relations by the mother's side: Agnati relations by the father's side. Adgnati, or Agnati, include Cognati, but not vice versâ. Dig. 38. 10. 10. Dig. 38. 7. 5. So Arrogati include the Adoptati, but not vice versâ.

This cognation may be either natural, or civil, arising from adoption ; or mixed ; of this, more in L. 3. tit. 6. post.

Relationship or affinity. Is the connection between the husband and his wife's parents, and the wife and her husband's parents. Adfines sunt viri et uxoris cognati ; dicto ab eo, quod duæ cognationes quæ diversæ inter se sunt, per nuptias copulantur ; et altera ad alterius cognationis finem accedit : namque conjungendæ adfinitatis, causa fit ex nuptiis. Dig. 38. 10. 4. 3. There are no degrees, strictly speaking, in affinity, as there are in parentage or consanguinity ; but I am considered as related to the parents of my wife, in the same degree that she is. Although affinity takes place between me and my wife's parentage, [ *423 ] and *between my wife and mine, yet this does not induce any kind of relationship or affinity, between our respective parents or consanguinei ; for their situations in society, ought not to be affected by our contracts. Hence comprivigni may intermarry. Dig. 23. 2. 34. 3. Affinity therefore can only affect the man and woman contracting: Affinis mei affinis non est mihi affinis as North said in Oxenham et ux. v. Gayre, C. B. cited Bac. Ab. tit. Marr. A, 529.

Formerly the Roman law prohibited marriage between persons in direct affinity only, Dig. 38. 10. 4. 6—7. L. 17. Cod. de nupt. but afterward the imperial constitutions forbade it between a brother-in-law, and a sister-in-law in the collateral line. L. 5. and 8. Cod. de Incest. et Inut. Nupt. 1.

The general rule is, Quocunque gradu, quis uni conjugum junctus est consanguinitate, eodem gradu junctus est alteri affinitate. Thus, I cannot marry my wife's daughter or my wife's mother, because they are to my former wife in the ascending and descending line of consanguinity ; and therefore to me in the ascending or descending line of affinity.

Perhaps the prohibitions of the civil and of the canon law, may be explained in a short compass.

A
B
|
C
|
D
|
E
|
G.

In this straight line, the letters respectively over and under each other, denote parent and child: within this line, all intermarriages are forbidden (by the law of nature as is generally agreed) whether ascending or descending. D. cannot marry either A, B or C, or E, F or G. Dig. 23. 2. ult. By this rule, all marriages are forbidden between those who are in parentum numero.

*The next rule is, that all marriages are forbidden between those collaterals who are in parentum Loco. This is the respectum Parentela.

C and D, E and F, G and H, &c. are collaterals.

Of these collaterals, those who are immediately under the common stock, cannot marry any person in the opposite collateral line.

Thus D is immediately under, or next to the common stock B. Hence D cannot marry with C, E, G or I. For like reason C cannot marry with D, F, H or K.

The next rule is that with respect to other collaterals as E and F, G and H, I and K, they may marry after the third degree, counted by the civil law mode of computation: which begins not with, but from the party in question on the one side, and counts through the common stock, to the party in question, on the other side; or leaving out the common stock, and including the parties on both sides. Thus, in what degree of relation are E and F, who are first cousins? In the fourth: and they may marry. For C counts one; B two; D three; F four. In what degree of relationship are I and H? Answer, G one; E two; C three; B four; D five; F six; H seven. The prohibitions of intermarriage between collaterals, extend by the civil law to the fourth degree, EXCLUSIVE, according to the above mode of counting. Hence first cousins by the civil law, being in the fourth degree may intermarry.

The Canon law computes, not by counting upwards, then through the common stock, and then downwards to the propositus—but beginning at the common stock, counts downward on either line, taking the longest when one is longer than the other. Thus E and F, or first cousins, are in the third degree: B one; C two; E three; or, B one; D two; F three. Hence marriage between first cousins is forbidden by the Canon law, whose prohibition extends to the fourth degree of Canon law computation INCLUSIVE. Of course, not only first, but second cousins are forbidden to intermarry by that law. The more numerous the prohibition, the more profitable were dispensations. Hence the [ *425 ] present mode of *computing canonical degrees was introduced by pope Alexander 2nd. By the old canon law and the early decretals, marriages were forbidden as far as the seventh degree, answering to the 12th of the civil law : this was reduced to the fourth degree of canon law computation (inclusive) by the council of Lateran, 1215. But Dr. Taylor says it was so in England, as appears by some constitutions he examined of Oswald, archbishop of York, in the 10th century. The English, and we after them, adopt generally the civil law regulations on this head. Blackstone's table of consanguinity, L. 2. ch. 14. P. 203. is well calculated to illustrate the comparison of the two modes of computation.

The following table, is taken from Burn's ecclesiastical law, tit. marriages.

The Levitical degrees are to be found in the 18th and 20th chapters of Leviticus, and they are these; see Haines v. Jescott, 5 Mod. 168. 1 Ld. Ray. 68. where the Levitical degrees are tabulated in a somewhat different order, following lord Coke.

A man may not marry

His mother

His sister

His son's daughter

His daughter's daughter

His father' wife's daughter

His father's sister

His mother's sister

His father's brother's wife

His son's wife

*His brother's wife

[ *428 ]

His wife's daughter

His wife's sister.

The preceding are the prohibitions of the 18th chapter.

The following are from the 20th chapter, and may be intended to embrace second marriages.

His father's wife

His wife's mother

His father's or mother's daughter

His father's or mother's sister

His uncle's wife

His brother's wife.

The above-mentioned table of kindred and affinity, (from Burns) therefore, is made up, not from the specific enumeration of prohibited degrees in the book of Leviticus, but from the principle that seems to guide the Jewish prohibition, viz. to the third degree of the Jewish and civil law computation inclusive: for the Jews calculated degrees in the same way as the Romans did, viz. from the propositus exclusive, up to and through the common stock, and down to the other party in question, inclusive. 1 Selden's uxor Hebraica, ch. 4. The English law allows marriage at the fourth degree, as computed by the Jewish and the civil law. Harison et ux. v. Dr. Burwell, Vaug. 206. 2 Ventr. 9. Gibs. Cod. 412. The prohibited degrees are not specified in 32 Hen. 8. ch. 38. which declares that all persons may lawfully marry, except such as are prohibited by God's law, but they are in the preceding statutes of 25 H. 8. c. 22. and 28 H. 8. c. 7. but Burns Eccles. Law II. 405. doubts whether the two last statutes are in force since 32 H. 8. ch. 38. The spiritual courts are confined to the Levitical degrees, Vaugh. 206. Harison et ux. v. Burwell.

[By a Statute of the State of New York, marriages between parents and children, including grand-parents and grand-children of every degree, ascending and descending, and between brothers and sisters of the half, as well as of the whole blood, are declared to be incestuous and absolutely void. The prohibition against such marriages, extends to illegitimate, as well as legitimate children and relatives. Such incestuous marriages, and also adultery and fornication, committed by such relatives with each other, are made indictable offences, and punishable by imprisonment in a State prison for a term not exceeding ten years. 2 R. S. 3d ed. p. 199. 773. This is also the law in Massachusetts. Mass. Revised Statutes, 1835, part 4, tit. 1. ch. 130.]

I have made a doubt whether a man may marry his wife's sister, his wife being dead, from the expression in the passage in Levit. "Thou shalt not take a wife to her sister to vex her, but in Hill v. Good, Vaugh. 302. and Carth. 271. 3 Keble, 166. Gibs. 412. it was determined that this case fell under the general prohibition of verse 6. including all that are near of kin: a decision indirectly confirmed by Collet's case, T. Jones, 213. Nelson's Ab. tit. Marr. 1158, 1159. 15 Vin. 256. and lately by the court of arches in England, (1811,) agreeably to former cases. Indeed the cases where marriage with a wife's sister's daughter has been deemed incestuous, are numerous. Most of them are collected in 4 Bac.

Ab. 529. See Mr. Butler's note, Co. Litt. 235. 2. 2 Burns [ *429 ] *Eccles. law, 414. et seq. But it is not forbidden by the law of Pennsylvania, see act of 1705 as to Incest.

Mr. Christian in his note 4. to 2 Blacks. 206. is right when he says "I do not know a single instance in which we have occasion to refer to the canon law: but the civil law computation is of great importance in ascertaining who are entitled to administration, and the distributive shares of intestate property." Nepos and Neptis are properly grand-children : but these terms are also applied to nephews and nieces : Præterea, nepotem ex patre aut ex sorore, a Juris-peritis imperite dici, admonent eruditi; nam fratris aut sororis filius dici solet e doctis, nepos autem respectu avi, ut filius respectu patris dicitur. Joh. Calvini Lexicon Juridicum sub voce Nepos. In this imperitiore sensu, Lord Coke uses it : see his table of consanguinity and affinity. Co. Litt. 18. Hence

Nepos : Neptis :	} collateralis :	{ Mean nephews and nieces and their lineal descend- ants.
Pronepos : Proneptis :
Abnepos : Abneptis :
Atnepos : Atneptis :
Trinepos : Trineptis :

This application of the term Nepos, may perhaps be authorized by the expression of Caius, Dig. 26. 4. 7. and in L. nemini 17. Cod. de nupt. but in both passages it is ambiguous.

The distinction of linealis and collateralis, takes away the ambiguity. No doubt, the more accurate expression for a nephew or niece, is fratris vel sorosis filius vel filia.

The next in number among the legal prohibitions to marriage among the Romans, was, offence against Public decorum.

Justinian post. § 9. states three cases of prohibition, 1st, The daughter of your wife after divorce. 2ndly, The affianced wife of a son, though not a daughter-in-law : for the Romans had their sponsalia or pre-contracts, as well as marriage contracts. The consensus sponsaliti [ *431 ] us was one thing : the consensus matrimonialis another.

Taylor, 303. 3dly, The affianced wife of a father, though not a mother-in-law. These were, quasi privigna, quasi nurus, quasi noverca. These cases are taken from Dig. 23. 2. 12. To these enumerated by Justinian, may be added, 4thly, an adopted daughter or granddaughter emancipated. Dig. 23. 2. 55. 5thly, Between an adoptive emancipated son, and a woman who has been the wife of the adoptive father. Dig. 23. 2. 14. 6thly, An adopted son, and the mother of an adopted father, so long as the adoption continues. Ib. L. 55. par. 1.

Another head of legal prohibition was Rank, of which see post. § 11. As if a senator should contract matrimony with a manumitted slave, a stage player, or any other person of lost reputation. Dig. 23. 2. 44. but this was abrogated by Justinian, Nov. 78. c. 3.

Another subject of prohibition was Power. As in the cases of, 1st, A tutor and his female pupil : a curator and his female minor. Dig. 23. 2. 59. et seq. and Cod. de interd. Matr. 2ndly, A governor of a province and a female native resident therein. Dig. 23. 2. 38 and 57. and Cod. si quacunq. prædit. potest.

The last prohibition arose from Age. As marriage between a man of 60 and a woman of 50. Dig. 1. 7. 15. 2. Dig. 19. 1. 21. Cod. 6. 58. 12. See hereon, Heineccius ad Leg. Jul. et Pap. Popp. But these prohibitions were much moderated by Justinian, except as to widows. Cod. 5. 4. 27. Cod. 6. 58. 12.

Polygamy, common among the barbarous nations of antiquity (barbarous in the Greek and Roman sense of the word) the Germans excepted, Tacit. de Mor. Germ. ch. 18. was also occasionally permitted among the Greeks, when necessity seemed to require it; as in the case of the detachment of young men from the army of Lacedemon, mentioned by Plutarch; and by the Athenians δια σπανιν αυθροων propter hominum infrequentiam. Arist. de Nobilit. ex Athen. 80. L. 13. inti. and by the Tuscans, 12 Athen. 3. and it was defended by Eurip. in Ino. tragæd. and by Plato, whose doctrine was rather a community of wives like that of the Arreoi in Otaheite, than a plurality; see also Aul. Gell. xv. 20. xviii. 2. Aristotle well considers Plato's doctrine in his politics, book 2. § 2. 4. "A work (as I most cordially agree with Dr. Taylor) which I "will venture to pronounce one of the most sterling productions of anti- "quity, and a most inexhaustible treasure to the statesman, the lawyer “and the philosopher.” (Taylor, 342.) The English reader is much indebted to Dr. Gillies for his view of Aristotle’s philosophy.

Socrates indulged in two wives, if not in pederasty which he is *introduced as speaking of in Xenophon’s memorabilia, [ *432 ] in his conversation with Alcibiades, as a thing of common course. The general reputation of this man, ranks with me among the literary paradoxes : but I most wonder at the praise bestowed on him by my deceased friend (the first man of his day in the philosophical and literary world) Dr. Priestley.

That the Jews practised polygamy, and that their laws regulated it, is well known. Deut. 21. 15. 17. In the year 1780, the Rev. Martin Madan published his “THELYPTHORA;” in which, taking for granted that the axiom of the canonists, Concubitus non consensus facit nuptias is founded on scripture, he proposed the introduction of licensed polygamy in cases of female seduction, as a remedy for prostitution. He was a man of learning, but a religious fanatic, of the sect of Calvinist-metho-dists. His arguments are deduced principally from 21 Deut. 15. 18. 22. Deut. 28, 29. 22 Ex. 16, 17. He notices very truly that marriage was first introduced among the Sacraments, and put under the custody of the priesthood, by Pope Innocent the third. He refers particularly to the cases of Hannah, Rachel and Bathsheba, who are mentioned in the bible in terms of respect, as well as Joseph, Samuel, and Solomon, who were the issue of polygamous marriages. Madan built and officiated at the lock chapel which was annexed to the Lock hospital for venereal patients, near Hyde-park corner, in London. He was the composer of that fine tune “Before Jehovah’s awful throne:” and the compiler of the best collection of popular church music now known, for the use of that chapel.

The civil law forbad polygamy. Inst. 1. 10. 6. Dig. 3. 2. 1. par. 8. Dig. 40. 2. 15. L. 2. Cod. de incest. et inut. nupt. Cic. de orat. 40. and even bina sponsalia, Dig. 3. 2. 1. fin. Polygamy was introduced by Valentinian first, as appears from Socrates, Nicephorus, Paulus Diaconus, and Jornandes, see the citations in Taylor, 347 : but it did not continue long. But licensed concubinage amounted to it, which seems to have continued for many years. Heinecc. ad leg. Jul. et Pap. Poppœam, Dig. 25. 2. 11. sub. fin. and Julius Cæsar is said by Suetonius to have instigated Helvius Cinna the tribune to introduce a law in favour of unlimited polygamy. Suet. in Jul. Cæs. § 52.

Concubinage however was discouraged by the digest, 32. 49. 4. and the law prohibited concubinage, at the same time with matrimony, as well as more concubines at a time than one. Dig. 45. 1. 121. Cod. 5. 26. unic. Cod. 7. 15. ult. Nov. 18. 74 and 89.

Christianity has settled the question of polygamy among Christians, notwithstanding the practices recorded in the old testament. 1st Corinth. ch. 7. and has settled also the subordinate situation of the [ *433 ] wife: *herein conforming to the law of nature as it appears to me. For generally speaking, there is a natural prevalence of mental energy, as well as of corporeal force in favour of the man independent of the means of acquired knowledge. But by discouraging fornication, and by denouncing polygamy and concubinage, christianity has greatly tended to ameliorate the situation of women in society, and thereby to civilize society itself. I am glad to see the wavering decisions of the British courts brought to something like system by the case of Marshall and Rutton, 8 Term Rep. 545. I consider the very able argument of judge Hide in Manby v. Scott, 1 Mod. 129. (notwithstanding some harsh observations) as embracing the soundest principles upon this subject, and placing the relative situation of the two parties upon the best footing for each of them, and as being most in unison with the law of England, the precepts of christianity, and the dictates of natural reason and civilized expedience. I apprehend it also to be conformable to the general spirit of the laws throughout this country. In Great Britain, the courts, as I think, instead of looking with a jealous eye upon every kind of pre-contract that tends to impair the unity of interest between married people, and the dependance of the wife upon the husband, have leaned somewhat too strongly in favour of pre-contract by marriage-settlement, trust estates, testamentary powers to be exercised by the wife, and by enforcing equivalent settlements on the receipt after marriage of a wife's property.

[In the State of New York, by a Statute passed in April, 1848, and amended in 1849, the real and personal property of any female thereafter married, and owned by her at the time of marriage, and the rents, issues and profits thereof, are not subject to the disposal of her husband, nor liable for his debts, but continue her sole and separate property, as if she were a single female.

Any married female may take by inheritance, or by gift, grant, devise or bequest, from any person other than her husband, and hold to her sole and separate use, and convey and devise real and personal property, and any estate or interest therein, and the rents, issues and profits thereof in the same manner and with like effect as if she were unmarried, and the same are not subject to the disposal of her husband, nor liable for his debts.]

As to marriage contracts of infants, and espousals per verba de presenti, et per verba de futuro, and Scotch and other foreign marriages, see Harg. Co. Litt. 80. a. n. 2 H. Blacks. 147. 10 East, 286. and 1 Johns. cases in N. York, 424. 2 Burr. 1079. and 2 Burns Eccles. Law, 401. 420. where the subject is discussed at length.

[The age of consent to marriage, by the civil, as well as the common law, is fixed at fourteen in males, and twelve in females. In the states of Ohio, Indiana and Michigan the age of consent fixed by statute is eighteen in males, and fourteen in females; and in Massachusetts and Illinois, it is seventeen in males, and fourteen in females.

No peculiar ceremonies are requisite, either by the common law, or by the ancient canon-law, to the valid celebration of marriage; the consent of the parties being the essence of the contract, nothing more is required. But in the year 1563 the Council of Trent made a decree, that for the future no marriage should be effectual, unless celebrated duly in facie ecclesiae, that is, in the presence of the parish priest and two witnesses. (Concil. Trident. Sessio xxiv. Decretum de reformatione Matrimonii Cap. 1.) This decree was adopted by the King of Spain in his European dominions, but was not extended to the colonies. In them, the rule established by the Partidas, that consent, joined with the will to marry, was sufficient to constitute a valid marriage, was permitted to remain unchanged. (Hallett v. Collins, 10 Howard U. S. Rep. 174. Patton v. Philadelphia, 1 Louisiana Annual Rep. 98.)

By the law of England, until the year 1836, the intervention of a priest was always indispensable to constitute a perfect marriage. In that year the statute of 6 and 7 Will. 4. c. 85, commonly called Lord John Russel's Act, enabled parties desirous of entering into wedlock to complete the contract, without any appeal to spiritual authority. Such persons therefore as object to be married by a priest may now repair to the Registrar of Marriages of the District in which they reside; and upon giving the notice and procuring the certificates prescribed by the statute, may be married, either before that officer by a verbal declaration; or in the registered places appointed for the purpose, may solemnize their marriage according to any form or ceremony they please; taking care, however, whichever mode they resort to, that two witnesses be present, and that the proceeding be completed with open doors between the hours of 8 and 12 in the forenoon.

In New York and South Carolina, as in Scotland, the intervention of a priest is not necessary to constitute a marriage. The deliberate consent of parties entering into a present agreement to take each other for husband and wife, may be declared before a magistrate, or simply before witnesses, or subsequently confessed or acknowledged; or the marriage may be inferred from continual cohabitation, and reputation as husband and wife, except in cases of civil actions for criminal conversation, and in public prosecutions for bigamy. (See 2 Kent's Commentaries, 86, 87. 4 Johns. N. Y. Rep. 52. 7 Wend. 47. 1 Hill's N. Y. Rep. 270. 2 Greenleaf on Evidence, 376. Poynter on Marriage & Divorce, 17.

Burge's Comm. on Colonial & Foreign Laws, Vol. I 172, 173, 174. Bell's Principles of the Law of Scotland, sect. 1506.)

In Maine, Massachusetts and Connecticut, it is required by Statute, that there be a publication of banns previous to the marriage; that it be solemnized by a clergyman or magistrate; and if the male is under twenty-one, or the female under eighteen, the consent of the parents or guardian must be given. In the State of New York, if the female be under the age of fourteen, the consent of the father, mother, or guardian is required. Similar legislative regulations exist in New Hampshire, New Jersey, Kentucky, and other States. The most eminent Jurists, however, concur in the opinion, that a marriage made according to the common law, without observing any of the statute regulations, would be valid. (See 2 Kent's Comm. 90, 91.)

Although in the State of New York, it is not necessary that a clergyman or magistrate should be present to give validity to a marriage; yet marriages can be registered and authenticated according to the provisions of the Revised Statutes, only when solemnized by one of the following persons; ministers of the gospel, and priests of every denomination; Mayors, Recorders and Aldermen of cities; County Judges, and Justices of the peace.]

In speaking of marriage, it may not be improper to say a few words on the subject of Divorce among the Romans. Justinian in this section of the Institutes, defines marriage to be Viri et mulieres conjunctio individuum vitæ consuetudinem continens: in conformity to the digest 23. l. 1. Conjunctio maris et Fæminæ; consortium omnis vitæ; divini et humani juris communicatio. Expressions, which must be referred to the intent of the parties at the time. It was (so far as I know) reserved for the English law to take cognizance of a pre-contract, in which the parties contemplate the possibility of a separation in express terms, and make it one of the considerations of the Deed. This was done in Rex v. Meade, 1 Burr. 542, and Rodney v. Chambers, 2 East, 283. I am sincerely glad these cases have been shaken by the lord chancellor in St. John v. St. John, 11 Ves. Jun. 526.

[ *434 ] *I am well aware, that different states of civilization require different principles of legislation on this, as well as on every other subject; that the considerations arising from the Institutions of hereditary rank, the privileges of primogeniture, and the importance attached to accumulated property, may require the admission of marriage settlements, jointures, trust-estates, and most of the many other complicated regulations which crowd the law books of England; but I know of no state of society in which the laws ought to weaken the public sentiment of the indissolubility of the marriage contract, unless upon urgent necessity, grounded upon facts judicially established. But to sanction the foresight of adultery, cruelty, or desertion, upon the very face of the marriage contract, is to sanction the crimes themselves.

Upon the subject of divorce, see Dig. 24. 2. Cod. 5. 17. and 24. and Nov. 22. and 117. Caus. 28. Quæst. 1 and 2. Grotius II. 5. 9. Puffend. VI. I. 21 et seq. Selden's Uxor Hebraica. See also Code Civil Napol. avec les Discours, Rapports, et Opinions, &c. Tom. 1. from page 329 to 432. where the subject is well discussed.

It has been said that Repudium is the proper expression for the dissolution of the sponsal contract or espousals; and Divortium for the dissolution of the Marriage contract. Dig. 50. 16. 101. and 191; but Repudium is used synonymously with divorce in Dig. 24. 2. 2. as it appears to me from the expressions employed; and certainly in Cod. 5. 17. 8. and Nov. 22. 15. and elsewhere.

Divorce, seems not properly applicable to a judicial decree declaring an unlawful marriage, void ab initio; for persons cannot well be said to be divorced, who were never legally married. But it is used exclusively in this sense in the English law, wherein divorce a vinculo matrimonii can only take place by authority of the courts, in cases where the marriage was originally void from objections of consanguinity, affinity, or impotence: for by the marriage act of 26 Geo. 2. precontract has ceased to be of the number of causes that would induce a Divorce a Vinculo Matrimonii. The other divorces for matter subsequent to marriage, operate only a separation a mensa et thoro. In cases even of Adultery, the party complaining is driven to parliament for redress.

[In the States of New York and Vermont, on a suit properly brought, the marriage contract may be declared void in the following cases; 1. If either of the parties, at the time of the marriage, had not attained the age of legal consent. 2. If the former husband or wife of the party was living, and the marriage in force. 3. If one of the parties was an idiot or lunatic. 4. If the consent of one of the parties was obtained by force or fraud. 5. If one of the parties was physically incapable of entering into the marriage state. But a marriage cannot be annulled for the first cause above mentioned, or the application of a party who was of legal age at the time of the marriage, or if the parties, after they had attained the age of consent, had for any time freely cohabited as husband and wife. It may be annulled for the second cause on the application of either party during the life of the other, but if it was contracted in good faith, and with the full belief of the parties that the former husband or wife was dead, the issue thereof shall be entitled to succeed to the estate of the parent, equally as legitimate children. It may be annulled for the third cause, on the application of any relative of the idiot or lunatic interested to avoid the marriage, or by his next friend. But any free cohabitation of husband and wife after the lunacy has ceased, will be a bar to the divorce; and the children of a marriage annulled on the ground of lunacy or idiocy, are entitled to succeed, as legitimate children. A marriage may be annulled for the fourth cause above mentioned, during the life of the parties, on the application of the party whose consent was unduly obtained, provided there has been no subsequent voluntary cohabitation as husband and wife. The custody of the issue of such a marriage is to be given to the innocent parent, and a provision for their education and maintenance may be made out of the estate of the guilty party. A marriage is to be annulled for the fifth and last cause above mentioned, only on the application of the injured party, and the suit must be brought within two years from the solemnization of the marriage.

For Adultery committed by either husband or wife, a divorce a vinculo matrimonii can be obtained in New York in three cases, and in those only; 1. If the married parties are inhabitants of the state at the time of the commission of the adultery: 2. If the marriage took place in the state, and the party injured be an actual resident at the time of the adultery committed, and at the time of commencing the suit for divorce: 3. If the adultery was committed within the state, and the injured party, at the time of commencing the suit, be an actual inhabitant of the state. If the defendant puts in an answer denying the charge, a feigned issue is to be awarded, to try the truth of the charge before a jury; and upon the trial of the issue, the fact must be sufficiently proved by testimony, independent of the confession of the party. But although the fact of adultery be established, the court may deny a divorce in the following cases: 1. Where the offence has been committed by the procurement, or with the connivance, of the complainant: 2. Where it has been forgiven by the injured party, and such forgiveness is proved by express proof, or by the voluntary cohabitation of the parties, with the knowledge of the fact: 3. Where the suit has not been brought within five years after the knowledge of the adultery: 4. Or where the complainant has been guilty of the same offence.

In New York, the jurisdiction of the Court as to absolute divorces, for causes subsequent to the marriage, is confined to the single case of adultery; but in most of the other States of the Union, in addition to adultery, intolerable ill-usage, or wilful desertion, or unheard-of absence, or habitual drunkenness, or some of them, will authorize a decree for a divorce a vinculo, or from bed and board, under different modifications and restrictions. See New York Revised Statutes, Part 2, Chap. 8, Tit. 1. Revised Statutes of Vermont, 1839, p. 322. Revised Statutes of Massachusetts, 1835, chap. 75 and 76.]

In the time of Romulus, if we may believe Plutarch (in vit.) a husband might dismiss his wife at pleasure; and in the case of adultery, or intoxication, he had the power of putting her to death, as was done by Egnatius Mercenius, who was acquitted by Romulus for it; not pardoned (condonatus) but acquitted, (absolutus.) Nay, it seems to have been a just cause of divorce if the wife drank *any [ *435 ] strong liquor. Hence perhaps the custom of "saluting the bride:" for Tertullian in his apologet. P. 7. fol. says Idcirco et oscula offerre necessitas erat ut spiritu judicarentur (i. e. Uxores.) To this purpose there are many authorities.

Anciently, the husband alone enjoyed the privilege of divorce; forbidden by Romulus to wives. In the time of Cicero however, and probably long before (Juv. Sat. 9. and Mart. 1. Ep. 41.) the wives appear to have exercised this right; thus Cælius writes to Cicero that Paula Valeria had divorced herself from her husband, the day of his return from the Province, and was to be married to D. Brutus: this too without assigning any reason, sine causa. 8. Famil. 7.

For a long time, the disputes between husband and wife were settled on a hearing before mutual relations. Dion. Halic. II. 25. Valer. Max. II. 1. 8. Suet. Tib. 35. &c. This kind of interposition sometimes took place on the exercise of paternal jurisdiction. Liv. II. 41. Val. Max. V. 8. 2. V. 9. 1. &c. &c.

It is said on many authorities (Dion. Halic. II. 25. Aul. Gell. Noct. Att. IV. 3. Plutarch in Numa et Lycurgi. Vit. et in Quæst. Rom. 14.) that no divorce took place at Rome, from the founding of the city for 420 years till Spurius Carvilius Ruga, divorced his wife for barrenness: for which he was much blamed. The practice of divorce however, for good causes, for trifling causes, and for no cause at all, soon became common. Sulpicius Gallus divorced his wife because he had seen her abroad with her head uncovered, Val. Max. VI. 3. 10. Pub. Sempronius Sophus, because his wife had been at a shew without his knowledge. Ib. n. 12. Quint. Antistius Verus, because he saw his wife conversing with a woman of low condition. Ib. n. 11. Marc Antony because he suspected his wife of an intrigue. Plut. in Vit. Ant. Julius Cæsar, because he would not have his wife to be suspected. Plut. in Vit. Jul. Cæs. Augustus, because he did not like his wife's temper. Suet. in vit. Another wife, because he quarrelled with her mother. Ib. Claudius dismissed one, for trifling faults, levibus offensis. Suet. in Vit. Presently it became the fashion both with husbands and wives, to dismiss each other without assigning any reason. These were relations and divorces bona gratia; sine causa; sine querela; sine causa sontica. Dig. 24. 1. 62. Dig. 40. 9. 14. 4. Nov. 22. 4. and 98. 2. 2. see also, cases relating to the wife's fortune, where the woman procured the divorce in Dig. 24. 3. 4. and 38. This practice was attempted to be restrained by Augustus (Suet. in vit.) but without effect. Seneca III. de Benef. 16. says that women now reckon their age, not by their years, but by their husbands; and [ *436 ] Juvenal (*no friend to the sex) fiunt octo mariti quinque per autumnos VI. 228.

Divorces however, by the law Julia de Adulteriis, required to be made with certain formalities certo modo, Dig. 38. 11. and were to be attested by seven witnesses of the age of puberty, Dig. 24. 2. 9. and certain forms of words were employed. I foras mulier. Tuas res tibi habeto, agito. Ædibus facessi. so Juvenal, Collige sarcinulas (dicit libertus) et exi. VI. 146. Bag and Baggage, according to the homely expression of the English. See Dig. 24. 2. 2. 1 and 2.

In the Repudium, the words were Condicione tua non utor. Dig. ub. sup. Conditio, is properly applicable to some state or condition previous to marriage: and sometimes for a treaty of marriage, as Dr. Taylor has shewn in several instances. Justinian prohibited all divorces unless on account of chastity, Nov. 17. 10. and ordained that the children should not be prejudiced, Nov. 117. 7. 8. By what forms (certis modis) the marriage that took place Ab Usu, by a year's cohabitation, was dissolved, I do not find. The marriage by Confarreatio, was dissolved by Diffarreatio. The separation in consequence of divorce, was Discidium; and the tabulæ nuptiales (attestation of the marriage as I construe it) and Dotales (marriage articles, settlement of jointure) were broken: the keys taken from the wife (Claves adimebantur) and the forms of expression above stated or some of them were used toward her. If the husband was absent, he sent his wife a bill of divorce nuncium remittebat: this was matrimonii RENUNCIATIO. Divorces were recorded in the public registers (Acta.)

Widows could not marry within ten months of their husband's decease. L. 2. Cod. de sec. Nuptiis. See Taylor's elements. Civ. Law. 348. et seq. and Adam's Roman Antiquities 468. where the preceding and additional authorities are collected.

The following causes of divorce I have translated from Cod. 5. 17. 8. Nov. 22. 15. and 117. 8.

A man may repudiate his wife, if she be 1st an adulteress, 2dly a sorceress, 3dly a man slayer, 4thly a kidnapper, 5thly a robber of sepulchres, or 6thly of churches, 7thly if she harbours thieves, 8thly or goes feasting with strangers, without the knowledge or against the consent of the husband, 9thly or walks out at night, against his inclination without justifiable reason, 10thly if she frequents the circus, the theatres, or the places where combats of wild beasts are shewn, against the directions of her husband, 11thly if she attempts her husband's life, by weapons or by poison, 12thly if she conceals treason, or 13thly commits perjury (or brings false accusation) against her husband, or 14thly attempts to beat him.

*So far the Theodosian code, confirmed by the 22nd Novel, [ *437 ] ch. 15. The 117th novel ch 8. adds as causes of repudiation —if the wife bathes with strangers without the knowledge of her husband, or goes to public places of amusement without his knowledge, or absents herself from home against his consent, unless at the house of her parents.

A woman may repudiate her husband, 1st For adultery, 2dly Homicide, 3dly Sorcery 4thly, Treason, 5thly Perjury, (crimen falsitatis) 6thly Robbery of sepulchres, 7thly on Churches, 8thly Theft, 9thly Harboring thieves, 10thly Bringing home prostitutes, 13thly attempting his wife's life, 14thly Beating (Flogging, Flagellis) her. The 117th novel ch. 9. adds, If the husband conceals his knowledge of any other person attempting her life: if he be accessory to another's attempt to debauch her: if he accuse her of adultery and fail in the proof.

The crime of drinking wine, seems to have been abandoned at this time as a cause of divorce: nor is any mention made of impotence on the one hand, or sterility on the other: or of age, disease, banishment, vows of chastity, or monastic orders. In Nov. 22. 13. Deportation, and interdiction from fire and water, are declared not sufficient causes for dissolving matrimony: in the succeeding chapter is also condemned the licence of a wife to take a second husband, if her first being in the army has sent her no information respecting himself during four years. This term is extended to ten years; and she is required to have made diligent enquiries after him.

I say nothing of the laws of Greece on this subject; except generally that in Sparta, divorces were very difficult, in Athens very easy. I refer to the Greek antiquities of Potter and Du Bos. Among the Jews according to Selden's uxor Hebraica, III. 17. old age, ugliness, and ill humour, were causes of divorce in a wife: so according to 24 Deut. 1, was uncleanness. That people did not permit the privilege of divorce to wives. 15. Jos. antiq. 11 and 18 Ib. 7 and 20 Ib. 15. In England, divorces are reasonably difficult, but the rights of infants seem to me superabundantly attended to, when the issue of an adulterous commerce, whereon divorce is adjudicated by the legislature, is still considered legitimate as to all the rights of succession to the estate of the injured father.

It is very much the fashion, (not void of foundation indeed) to abuse Napoleon Buonaparte. It were much to be wished that the fashion equally prevailed of imitating the many wise acts of that extraordinary man. The subject of divorce appears to me to be better settled in the Code Napoleon, than in any other system of laws ancient or modern; and the general subject is well handled in the preliminary *discourses of the orators on the occasion. [Soon after the [ *438 ] restoration of the Bourbon dynasty the law of divorce in France was changed, and in 1816 it was confined to a judicial sentence of separation from bed and board.] In this country, the facility of divorce by management, is almost equal to that under the Government of France during the revolution. The case of Jackson v. Jackson, 1 Johnson's New-York Rep. 424 is warranted by sound law, and public expedience.

In Pennsylvania, the legislature of late years, have not only miserably wasted their time in debating and deciding on particular cases (such as convicted felons) which might easily be embraced by a general law, but they have deliberately interfered with cases (ill usage for instance) notoriously within the jurisdiction of established courts. This wanton waste of the time and money of the people, this needless interference with judicial authority, and this facility given to applications for divorce, appear to me great public evils: and arising from a deeper and more systematic plan of absorbing all kind of jurisdiction, and of course all power into the legislative, than is consistent with honest views to the public good. Some of the cases in which this interference has taken place, are irresistibly ludicrous: see for instance the act to dissolve the marriage between Jacob Mayer and Catharine his wife, passed 28 March, 1808, which I presume the compiler of the index was ashamed to insert under the usual head of divorces.

§ 3. Qui sunt in potestate. In what cases the court will interfere to deliver a child whether bastard or legitimate into the custody of the father or the mother, see the King v. Soper. 5. Term Rep. 278. The King v. de Manneville, 5 East, 221. The King v. Mosley, 5 East 224. note. The King v. Hopkins and wife, 7 East 579.

Lib. 1. Tit. X. De nuptiis page 23. In the last note but one, I have nearly exhausted all I had to observe on marriage relationship and divorce: to which I refer.

§ 2. De fratribus et sororibus. p. 24. See 18. Lev. 19. Deut. ch. 27. L. 17. Cod. h. t. Dig. 45. 1. 35. 1. The Athenians and Egyptians, permitted the marriage of brothers and sisters Cor. nep. in Cim.

Filium emancipare. Otherwise the marriage would be dissolved, as brothers and sisters cannot marry. Theophr.

§ 3. De fratris et sororis filia vel nepte. The prohibition extends in England and here also I presume, to marriage generally with an illegitimate relation within the levitical degrees. Haines v. Jeffel or Jescott 1 Ld. Ray. 68. 5 Mod. 168. Comb. 356. This was the case of a bastard daughter of a sister: and it falls within the reason of the case of the daughter of a divorced wife by a second husband in section 9. of this title.

[ *439 ] Cujus enim filiam, &c. Quere, I may not marry my *aunt, my grand-mother's daughter, but I marry my cousin who is her daughter. Hence these words must be understood as cujus enim fratris vel sororis filiam. Ferriere in loc.

§ 4. De Consobrinis. P. 25. The marriage of cousin-germans (sobrinarum) diu ignorata says Tacitus, in the speech he puts in the mouth of Vitellius, whom Claudius employed to defend his marriage with his neice Agrippina. 12 Ann. 6. But this was not true: see the case of Ligustinus 42 Liv. 34. Theodosius the great, forbad the marriage of cousin-germans by a constitution not extant, which was confirmed in substance by Arcadius law 5. of the Theodosian code de incertius nuptiis, who afterwards repealed his own and his father's law by L. celebrandis 19. Cod. de nuptiis. In the west, Honorius forbad the marriage of cousin-germans L. 7. Cod. Theod. Si nupt. ex rescript. pet. After the death of Justinian, the law of Theodosius was established again. Hence the law celebrandis 19. Cod de nuptiis has been retrenched from the Theodosian Code. These fluctuations of the principle, that the 4th degree is not prohibited, most probably depended on the foresight of the benefit of dispensations.

§ 5. De Amita 25. The aunt by the father's side, matertera being the aunt on the mother's side. In this section, the adoptive paternal aunt is forbidden, but not the adoptive maternal aunt. The reason is, that adoption being the work of the paternal father only, it draws with it agnation or relationship on the father's side only. Dig. 38. 8. 1. 4 and dig. 1. 7. 23. nec avunculus nec matertera per adoptionem fieri possunt Dig. 23. 2. 12. 4. Hence a man might marry the daughter of an adoptive sister, but not of adoptive brother. For the former follows the family of the natural father of the sister, but the father of the latter hath become allied by adoption. Matertera in Dig. 23. 2. 55. 1. should be struck out. Ferriere.

§ 12. De pœnis injustarum nuptiarum. Constitutionibus. Decurions because the curia or senate of the Colonies was supposed to consist of the tenth part of the people: that is at the beginning. Dig. 50. 16: 239. Harris.

The Decurions were a kind of provincial senators and regulated all the public business of the place they lived in. It was an honourable, but an expensive and troublesome employ. This legitimation per oblationem curiæ introduced by Theodosius the younger, entitled the son to succeed to the father, but did not draw with it agnation. Lex. 3. Cod. de natur. lib. L. 9. Cod. eod. Nov. 89 ch. 2 cum seq. The last sentence of this section is of difficult meaning, for where was the necessity of granting by law the rights of litigation to *legitimate children? Ferriere thinks it relates only to the case of a child in ventre sa mere, at the time of marriage; which otherwise would have taken its civil state from the time of conception.

A third method of legitimation by imperial rescript, was introduced by Justinian, Nov. 74. c. 2 and 89 and c. 9 and 10.

Nec non is, qui, &c. By a constitution or canon of Pope Alexander, the third, it was enacted, "that children born before the solemnization of matrimony might nevertheless become legitimate by the subsequent marriage of their parents. And in consequence of this canon, all the bishops of England in the reign of Hen. 3rd, petitioned the lords, that they would consent that all such who were born before matrimony, should be legitimate, as well as those who were born after matrimony, in respect of hereditary succession, inasmuch as the church accepteth all such as legitimate." But all the earls and barons with one voice answered that they would not change the laws of England, which had hitherto been used and approved. Stat. Mert. 20 Hen. 3 Co. Litt. 245. or 2 Co. Inst. 97.

Tit. XI. § 1. Devisio adoptionis p. 28. Adoption was of two kinds, 1st. simple adoption of a filius familias, 2dly, adoption by rogation of a pater familias; so called because the parties were asked rogantur, if they were content so to do. The former took place before magistrates, Dig. 1. 7 de adoptionibus, Aul. Gell. noct. att. L. 5. c. 19. The latter by imperial letters Dig. 1. 7. 1 Aul. Gell. ub. sup. Cod. 8. 48. Ferriere. (Ferriere's other references to the Digest and the Code, do not support this position.) Adoption forms no part of the law of England: but if a person takes the child of another to bring it up, and (in popular language) adopts it as part of the family, the person thus adopting stands in loco parentis. Thus in Edmonson v. Machell 2 Term Reports 4. an aunt recovered damages per quod servitium amisit for debauching her niece. So also in Irwin v. Dearman 11 East 23. damages of the same kind were given to a man who had brought up the daughter of his friend. This may be called a quasi adoption. Bracton L. 3. ch. 29. mentions another kind, viz. where a husband rears and educates his wife's bastard, he shall be considered as heir to the husband on presumption that he might have been legitimate: hæres judicabitur, eo quod nascitur de uxore, dum tamen præsumi possint quod poterit ipsum genuisse.

§ 2. Ex nostra constitutione. Vid. Cod. 5. 27. 10. De naturalibus liberis.

Non extraneo. That is, any person out of the direct line: for persons adopted by an uncle or great uncle, are considered in the same light as if adopted by a stranger. Vinnius.

[ *441 ] *§ 3. De arrogatione impuberis, p. 29. Bonorum means not merely goods and chattels, but estate and property, Law 408. Dig. de verbor. signif. and L. 2. Cod. eod. This fourth part became due as a debt after the decease of the adoptive father, and might be recovered by a condictio de lege, Dig. 37. 6. 1. 21. The adoption of impuberes was first allowed by Antoninus Pius, provided it was under the authority of imperial letters. By Impuberes are here meant, not boys, under 14 and girls under 12, when they were at liberty to contract matrimony, but the ages of 14 and 18. See post. § 4 of this Title.

§ 9. Si is qui generare, &c. Spado, is one who is incapable of procreation; and the disability may arise either from a permanent cause, as castration, or a temporary one. Dig. 23. 3. 39. 1. Dig. 28. 2. 9. The prohibition in the other case, founded on the silly reason that a man who could not naturally be a father, could not be so by adoptive fiction, was abrogated by Leo, Nov. 36.

§ 10. Si fœmina adoptet. They might be arrogated by imperial rescript. Dig. 1. 7. 21. But the adoptive fiction was restrained here also at first: because even children by marriage could not take the name or come under the power of the mother. The emperor Leo, Nov. 26, permitted women, who never had children, and even unmarried women to adopt.

§ 12. De servo adoptato. Nastra constitutione: viz. Cod. 7. 6. 10. de lat. libert. tollend.

Tit. 12. Quibus modis jus patriæ potestatis solvitur, p. 33. There are some curious cases in the English books on the doctrine of filial emancipation, as connected with parochial settlement. The King v. Tottington, Caldecot. Sett. Cas. 287. The King v. Broad-Hembury. H. 25 Geo. 3. 2 Const. 55. 10 East, 91. The King v. Witton cum Twambrooke, 3 Term. Rep. 355. wherein Lord Kenyon's opinion is corrected in 10 East, 90. Rex v. Sowerby, 2 East, 276. The King v. Roach, 6 Term Rep. 247. Rex v. Woburn, 8 Term Rep. 479. The King v. the Inhabitants of Cowhoneyborne, 10 East, 88.

§ 1. De deportatione. Deportation was banishment for life: attended with the loss of civil rights and forfeiture of property. Relegation, was banishment for years, without the loss of civil rights. Dig. 48. 22. throughout. And so is the law of England, vid. Co. Litt. 133, throughout.

In what cases the replication of Exile, Relegation, Banishment or Abjuration, on the part of a woman suing as feme sole is necessary, see Bagget v. Frier et al. 11 East, 301, where the principle of Marshall and Rutton, 8 Term Rep. 545. and Chambers and Donaldson, 9 East, *471. are recognized. The terms exile, relegation, and [ *442 ] banishment however, are not to be found but in the marginal abstract.

§ 3. De servitute pœnæ, p. 34. Slaves of punishment, as having no certain or specified master. This kind of servitude was abolished by Justinian, Nov. 22. 8.

§ 4. De dignitate. See Cod. 12. 3. 5 de Consulibus. Nov. 70. by which emancipation was annexed to the consular, episcopal and some other dignities.

Patriciatus dignitas. In Livy's time, this belonged to the children of ancient senatorial families: but on the removal of the seat of government to Byzantium, this title was confined to persons chosen by the emperors as counsellors of state after having been Curule Ædiles.

§ 5. De Captivitate et postliminio, p. 35. The paternal power was only suspended during captivity. Dig. 14. 6. ult. Dig. 49. 15. 12. 1. The captives had a right to two fictions of law in their favour. 1st The jus postliminii; by which the period of captivity was merged, and the captive on his return, entered into all his rights, as if he had never been absent. Dig. 38. 16. 15. Dig. 14. 6. 1. 1. Dig. 26. 1. 6. ult. But he could not change or set aside, acts legally performed in his absence. Dig. 4. 6. 19. 2dly The Lex Cornelia, regarded those who died in captivity, as having died the moment preceding their captivity. . L. 6. Cod. de poss. rev.

§ 6. De emancipatione, p. 35. By the law of the 12 Tables, a son was free when his father had sold him three times. Si pater filium ter venunduit, filius a patre liber esto. The three-fold sale was thus conducted. The father sold his son to a mutual friend, who paid him a piece of money (Sestertius) in the presence of five witnesses, and of the Libripens or scale-holder. The purchaser then held the son as a slave. He then enfranchised him by the Vindicta; whereupon the son being free from slavery, again returned under power of his father, who in the same manner sold him a second time. . He was then enfranchised a second time; sold a third time to the father (for otherwise, the seller had he manumitted him, would have been entitled to the rights of a patron) who liberated him in the usual manner.

The parties to this proceeding (Emancipatio per æs et libram) were the father Pater: the friend, Pater fiduciarius: the Libripens or balance-holder: the Antestator, or person who summoned the witnesses &c. 1 Hor. Sat. 9. v. 76: the witnesses Testes. The process mancipatio; manu traditio; by the words mancupo tibi hunc filium qui meus est. The purchaser holding up the money, said hunc ego hominem ex jure Quiritium meum esse aio, isque mihi emptus est hoc ære, [ *443 ] aneaque libra * (brazen scales) and striking the scales with the money, paid it over to the pater or natural father. When all was ended, the son became libra et ære libratus, Liv. VI. 14, and sui juris. Before coin was common, money was weighed out, and assis, æs, was a pound weight, Liv. IV. 60. In emancipating a daughter or grandchild, the same formalities were repeated but once. This process was so troublesome, that at length Anastasius dispensed with the fiduciary sale, and Justinian abolished the ceremony altogether, Cod. 8. 49. 6.

§ De nepote nato post filium emancipatum, p. 37. By the civil law, second marriages were discountenanced, but not forbidden. A widow was obliged to wear mourning for her husband ten months, which was the extent of the year under Romulus. Ovid. Fast. I. 27. The year was extended by Numa to 12 months. Plut. in Vit. But the prohibition in cases of widowhood extended only to 10 months notwithstanding; that being the period in which it was supposed a posthumous child might be born: Ov. Fast. I. 33. By the constitutions however of several emperors (Gratianus, Valentinian, Theodosius, &c.) widowhood was extended to the year, and if a widow married infra annum luctus, she lost her share of her husband's effects, Cod. 5. 9. unless in case of a dispensation from the Emperor, Dig. 3. 2. 10. But widows were not compellable to mourn for their husbands: that is as I understand it, not to wear mourning, or to go through any forms or ceremonies for that purpose, Dig. 3. 2. 9. the prohibition of marriage under the stated penalties continued nevertheless. The year of mourning, was also the time adopted before the conquest, Co. Litt. 8. a. and by the Saxons: Leges Anglo-Sax. Wilk. 109. 122. 144. But there is no prohibition of marriage to widows at any time after their husband's decease, either by the divine law, the canon law, or the present law of England. 2 Burn Ecc. law, 416.

As to the law in favour of the heir, providing against a spurious posthumous offspring, De ventre in possessionem mittendo, et curatore ejus, see Dig. 27. 9. As to the English law de ventre inspiciendo, and the time at which a child may be born after access by the English law, to wit, forty weeks, it is fully discussed in Co. Litt. 123. and the notes of the editor thereupon.

§ 10. An parentes cogi possunt, &c. p. 37. Emancipation might be compelled by the son, 1st on account of improper severity on part of the father: 2dly If the father ordered the son to do any indecent act: or 3dly If he refused proper nourishment. Dig. 1. 7. 32. Dig. 35. 1. 50. Dig. 37. 12. 5. Cod. 1. 4. 12.

*And a father might force his son to be emancipated in all [ *444 ] cases which would justify disinherison. Dig. 45. 1. 132. with the commentary of Bart. and Mynsych.

Lib. 13. De Tutelis. p. 37. Males under 14, and females under 12, (impuberes) were Pupils and under Tutors. Minors under 25 (which was adult age by the civil law) were under Curators: even though the males were Patres familias. The father's power extended throughout adult age.

The English law respecting guardians (which does not like the civil law, appoint Curators for minors as a separate office) may be found fully and learnedly discussed in Co. Litt. 85 to 90. with Hargreave's notes.

§ 3. Quibus testamento tutor datur, p. 38. Tutores dare, Because after puberty, curators only can be appointed.

§ 5. De emancipatis, p. 39. Because the father having exercised his judgment and discretion, it is deemed evidence of sufficiency. So in England it will require a strong case to authorize the appointment of a receiver against an executor, which however is sometimes done, see 12 Vez. 4 Anonymous. and 13 Vez. 266. Middleton v. Dodswell, and the cases there cited. The first of these, determines, that poverty alone is not a sufficient ground to authorize the appointment of a receiver over an executor.

Tit. 14. Qui tutores, &c. p. 39. This seems contrary to the rule, Dig. 48. 5. 21. by which those who are in the power of another cannot have others under their power. But this must be understood of the same kind of power. A filius familias under the power of his father, cannot at the same time have parental authority: but other kinds of authority he may have. It may be enquired, if the son of a family, may be appointed, where is the security, for the faithful discharge of his duty? Answer: 1st, the effects of the filius familias, are always bound. 2dly, If the father assent to the tutelage; undertaken by the son, the father is bound. Dig. 26. 1. 7. and 26. 7. 21. 3dly. If the law casts the tutelage, security is required: if it be conferred by testament the testator is deemed a competent judge, in a case, where he is so much concerned on account of his children. Women could not be appointed, except mothers and grand-mothers by special rescript. Dig. 26. 1. 18. Cod. 5. 35. 2, and Nov. 118. 5. In England women may be appointed.

§ 5. De tutore dato. See Dig. 26. 2. 6. It is an established rule that words are to be understood in their common and obvious [ *445 ] meaning, *unless the context absolutely requires another. Dig. 50. 16. 201. Dig. 14. 6. 14. Dig. 23. 2. 59.

This section of Justinian, is referred to by Foster Justice, in Rex v. Taunton, St. Mary Magdalen, cited 4 Term. Rep. 798. Whether child includes grand-children, must depend upon the context: it does not appear to me that there is any rule precisely settled about it. In Wythe v. Thurlston, Amb. 555. Hussey v. Dillon, Ib. 604, and Gall v. Bennet, Ib. 681. bequest to child, was held to include grand-child. But in Cooke v. Brooking 2 Vern. 107. where there was a child and several grand-children, the latter were held not to fall under the term of the bequest. The King v. Taunton, St. Mary Magdalen, which was a case under the certificate act relating to the settlement of paupers, Burr. 402, was set aside by Lord Kenyon, in the King v. the inhabitants of Dar- lington, 4 Term Rep. 799. and in Radcliffe, and Buckley, where the modern cases are considered, 10 Vez. 195 : it is there decided that under a bequest to children, grand-children are not entitled unless the will would be inoperative without them ; a point before determined by Lord Alvanley in Reeves v. Brymer, 4 Vez. 698.

The other cases relating to the construction of words of this class, in a devise are collected by Roper on Legacies, 8 et seq. and in 6 Cruise on real property, 183, 187.

Tit. 15. § 1. Qui sunt agnati. Agnati, relations by the male side : Cognati, by the female side. Change of civil condition might destroy agnation, Dig. 26. 4. 7. and L. 4. § ult. Cod. de leg. tut. Dig. 38. 10. 10. 2. Dig. 38. 16. 2. 1. The difference between agnati and cognati was done away by Justinian Nov. 118. 4. 5.

By a law of the twelve tables, if a man died intestate without children, the law cast the inheritance upon the agnati. If he left a child, the agnati were called to the tutelage by operation also of law ; for the Romans were of opinion the next heir to the pupil was the properest person to take care of the estate, being most interested in it. By a law of Solon, the next in succession was excluded from the tutelage, from suspicion that the pupil was not safe under his care. So by the English law, guardian in socage must be next of blood who cannot inherit. Co. Litt. 68. A hard rule. Dormer's case, 2 P. W. 263.

Tit. 19. De fiduciaria Tutela, p. 46. Perfectæ sint ætatis. That is 25 years of age.

Age has been well enough divided into

*Minority.	{	Infantia	1—7	Infancy
	{	Pueritia	7—14	Childhood
	{	Pubertas	14—25	Puberty
*Majority.	{	Juventus	25—50	Youth
	{	Virilitas	50—70	Manhood	[ *446 ]
	{	Senium	70—&c.	Old-age.

According to modern notions however, youth can hardly be extended to fifty. Yet I recollect that Julius Cæsar at the age of fifty, is somewhere called νεανίσκος a young man. The ancients seem to have extended the nominal period of youth longer than the moderns, thus Aristotle regards the age of 37 as the proper time for a man to marry.

The different privileges of different ages by the law of England, is well expressed by Blackstone in his Commentaries. "The MALE at 12 may take the oath of Allegiance : at fourteen is at years of discretion, and may therefore consent or disagree to marriage ; may choose his Guardian, and if his discretion be actually proved, may make his testament of his personal estate ; at seventeen may be an executor ; and at twenty-one is at his own disposal, and may alienate his lands, goods and chattels. A FEMALE, also at seven years may be betrothed or given in marriage; at nine is entitled to Dower; at twelve is at years of maturity, and therefore may consent or disagree to marriage; and if proved to have sufficient discretion may bequeath her personal estate; at fourteen is at years of legal discretion, and may choose a Guardian; at seventeen may be executrix; and at twenty-one may dispose of herself and her lands; so that the full age in male and female is 21 years; which age is completed on the day preceding the anniversary of a person's birth, who till that time is an Infant, and so styled in law."

Minority by the French Code, extends also to the age of 21 years. I confess this appears to me a period upon the whole too early to put a young man in possession of all the rights belonging to adult age. Still more objectionable are the privileges given by the English law to intervening ages; as that a boy and a girl of 14 and 12 may consent to marriage; which however is the regulation of the civil law also.

The French provisions as to minority; tutelage, and emancipation are to be found in the 11th law or title, of the code Napoleon.

Tit. 20. De Atiliano Tutore, &c. 47. The law Attilia was a plebiscite passed 444. U. C. of the law Julia and Titia there is no certain account. This legal appointment of a Tutor, is somewhat like the appointment of Guardians by application to the Court of Chancery, Ab. ca. in Eq. 260: and the like practice obtains in Pennsylvania. It took place either when there was no legal, or no testamentary tutor, or when the latter had only conditional and qualified powers, or wished to be excused for good reasons, or suffered a change of state, or if [ *447 ] the *tutor died, or if he or the pupil were taken captive.

Marcus Aurelius appointed two Prætors, whose sole occupation was the appointment of tutors. Capitolin. in Divo Marco ch. 10. But I apprehend, this was in defect not only of testamentary tutors, but where in cases of intestacy the Tutela legitima did not take place for want of a near agnate on whom it should fall by law.

§ 7. De Tutelæ ratione reddenda. By the civil law, an action of Tutelage could not be sustained till the Tutelage expired. Dig. 27. 3. 4. But in England a minor may oblige his guardian to account by prochein ami.

Tit. 21. In quibus causis auctoritas sit necessaria, p. 49.

The general rules of the Civil law and of the English law for the protection of Infants, proceed on the same obvious principle, that no one shall be permitted to take advantage of the want of experience to which an infant is necessarily subject. But the English law or rather the feudal law, certainly goes to the utmost verge of reason and justice, when it stops the progress of a suit wherein a minor is a party and claims by descent, or defends in debt as heir, by suffering the parol to demur until the minor arrive at full age. This was unknown to the civil law where the guardian (whether tutor or curator) might conduct the cause—where a curator might be appointed compulsorily for the management of a suit on behalf of an infant—and where the infant when of age had a remedy against his tutor for fraud or negligence, and a minor had the same right of suing his curator even during his minority. This indeed is the case in England, where also the Guardian may be sued by procchein ami. See 14. Vin. Ab. 198. 2. Cro. 640. Simpson and Simpson v. Jackson, wherein it was determined that an infant may sue by procchein ami, but must defend by guardian. The same right of suit in favour of infants obtains in this country also. See Parsons v. Mills et al. 2 Massach. Rep. 80.

I apprehend that strictly, the law of Pennsylvania, will admit the parol to demur in the same cases with the English law. For although in suits where an infant is defendant and no guardian appointed, the court on motion will appoint the clerk of the court, or any indifferent person a Guardian pro lite, yet this no more interferes with the law respecting the parol demurring, than the same practice in England under Shipman and Stevens, 2 Wils. 50. Moreover, I apprehend the general law of England on this head, is judicially recognized in Pennsylvania, as the judges of the supreme court have adopted one of the exceptions to it, to wit, 6 Edw. 1 ch. 2: but they have not noticed.

*another, viz. the stat. of west. 1st: 3 Edw. 1 ch. 46. See 3 [ *449 ] Binn. 601. 662. app.

Even by the old law, the parol did not demur, in dower, or quare impedit, or waste, where the remedy was required to be speedy, nor in partition, where no title was involved: and until the act of assembly of Pennsylvania, giving new form and substance to the action of ejectment, it might have been doubted, whether any suit in this state could arise, wherein the question could be made whether the parol should demur. But now by act of 21 March, 1806, the action of ejectment is so formed, that it differs only from a real action, in as much as one verdict is not conclusive.

As to the appointment of guardians pro lite, it might be made a question whether the laws establishing the orphan's court enable the bench there to appoint compulsorily a guardian pro lite to appear in another court, and whether any other court has power to appoint to such a guardian. But the practice seems to authorize it.

With respect to the other states, I am not able to give precise information on this head.

In Virginia indeed, it is declared by an express law of 1797, ch. 98. that the parol shall not demur in any suit on account of infancy. 3

Tucker's Blackstone, p. 300. n. Their practice in common cases is to appoint a guardian pro lite on motion, with notice to the infant. Fox v. Cosby, 2 Call's Virginia reports, p. 1.

The cases relating to the privilege of infancy, may be collected from that title in Co. Litt. with Hargreave and Butler's notes, and Williams's Saunders, as to real property. The cases bearing on their civil contracts, are well collected by Bacon, in his abridgment; by Espinasse, in his Digest; and in Comyn's law of contracts. The body of chancery decisions, must be sought for in the ch. reports under that head, where among other cases relating to infancy, the rights of wards in chancery and female infants generally, are protected with an assiduous severity, carried to the full length of public expedience. If the hands of husbands be so tied up by chancery, as effectually to prevent their wasting the property acquired through the wife, their exertions for the improvement of their common fortune, are also cramped—creditors are misled by the appearance of opulence to trust the husband beyond the funds they can ultimately apply to—and women are carefully instructed in rights and interests, separate from those of their husbands. The state of society may require these protections and precautions, but it is a state of society not to be envied, in this respect at least.

[ *449 ] *Since the preceding compilations, it seems to be decided in Williamson v. Watts, 1 Camp. C. Rep. et Nis. Pri. 552. That although an infant may give a single bill without a penalty for necessities and bind himself, he cannot give a bill of exchange. Although the single bill is out of use in England, it is not so here.

The provisions of the French code, respecting tutelage and the interests of infants, will be found in the references under the article Minor. Recueil. Tom. 2. Titres 8, 9 & 10.

The following are the principal cases I have found in American reporters, as to the contracts of infants.

In 1 Dall. 166. Silver v. Shelback: it was decided that the appearance of an infant to a suit brought against him, is not a judicial act, and is fatal on error: and unless in certain cases of real actions, judgment against an infant will be reversed at full age.

Stansbury v. Marks, 4 Dall. 130. Infancy may be given in evidence on non assumpsit in Pennsylvania, owing to the intermingling of common law and equity jurisdictions in that state.

Hart v. Hosack, 1 Caines N. Y. Rep. 26. An infant of 14 years put on trial with a physician, cannot at his own will become a student, so as to charge his parent with the student's fee.

Court will not discharge an infant out of custody on that ground only, where no fraud is suggested; but will leave him to use infancy in his defence. Clemson v. Bush, 3 Binn. 413.

Weed v. Ellis, 3 Caines, 253. The guardian of an infant may arbitrate on behalf of his ward: and the plea of performance will bar the infant at full age.

Van Winkle v. Ketcham, 3 Caines, 323. The note of an infant given in course of trade cannot be enforced against him.

Conroe v. Bridshall, 1 Johns. N. Y. Rep. 123. An infant at the time of executing a bond, alleged he was full age: yet the bond was held void as against him.

Jackson ex dem. Renselear v. Whitlock, Ib. 213. Whether an infant can be disseized, and then bound to bring his action within ten years of his coming of age?

The plea of infancy can be pleaded by or on behalf of the infant only: it is a personal privilege. Van Bramer v. Cooper impleaded with Van Bramer, 2 Johns. N. Y. Rep. Same point decided in Hartness v. Thompson and others, 5 Johns. N. Y. Rep. 160. In such a case where there are several defendants and one of them an infant, the plaintiff may enter nol pros. against the infant and proceed against the rest, or the jury may find for the infant, and against the other defendants.

*Whether the deed of land by an infant to A, is avoided by [ *450 ] his deed for the same land to B, when he is at full age?

Jackson ex dem. Dunbar et al. v. Todd, 6 Johns. N. Y. Rep. 257. Knapp v. Crosby. 1 Massach. Rep. 476. Judgment cannot be taken against an infant who does not appear by Guardian.

In re Augustus le Forrestiere. 2 Mass. Rep. 419. Can an infant be naturalized in this country on his own petition? or on that of his guardian?

1 Washington's Virg. Rep. 299, Buckner v. Smith. An infant gave a bond for a gaming debt: on arriving at full age he promised to pay it: held that he was bound. 2 Hening and Munford's Vir. Rep. 289. Fitzhugh v. Anderson et al. Infancy does not stop the act of limitations.

Tabb et al. v. Archer et al. 3 Hen. and Mun. 400. Infants may contract by marriage articles which they cannot set aside on arriving at full age. Indeed, those articles enure to the benefit of the children who may be the first of that marriage. Harris and M'Henry's Maryland Reports, Vol. 1. p. 459. Lane and Gover. Infant defendant appearing by guardian, in ejectment, is liable to process for costs.

Ib. p. 67. Infant, and those claiming under him, not diverted by the cancelling of a part in chancery, if he was not made a party.

Ib. 152. Infant not barred by an adverse twenty years possession. Cheseldine v. Brewer.

Ib. 568. Infant feme sole bound by a marriage settlement at semble.

Tv. 23. De Curatoribus, p. 53. These agreed with tutors in that they might be appointed by the same magistrates, were held to security, might be excused or removed for good reasons, assigned. They differed from tutors, in that a tutor might be appointed without the consent of the pupil, which generally speaking, a curator could not be. A tutor was appointed principally to the care of the person, a curator to the care of the property. A father could not appoint a curator by will; he might declare a testamentary tutor. A tutor could not be sued by the pupil till after tutelage, a curator might be sued by the minor during his curatorship. In these several respects, the office of curator approached nearer to that of our Guardian, than a tutor. See Cujacius, observ. L. 17. ch. 7. A curator might be appointed compulsorily ad lites, in case of a payment made by a debtor to a minor creditor. Dig. 4. 4. 7. 2. or where a tutor gave in his account. L. 7. Cod. qui petant Tut.

Until the time of Caracalla and Justinian, from the difficulty that minors experienced in getting possession of their property, they were induced to apply to the courts, to have curators appointed, [ *451 ] Dig. 4. 4. *1. 3. Dig. 26. 6. 2. 4 and 5. But those emperors relaxed the practice and exonerated persons from compulsory curatorship.

Masculi quidem puberes. By the civil law, males of twenty five years of age, and females of eighteen having given sufficient proof by five or more witnesses of their prudence and morality, might obtain a licence from the emperor enabling them to manage their own affairs, under proper restrictions. For minors are not permitted by this licence to aliene, or even to mortgage their immoveable possessions, without a special decree for this purpose. Cod. 2. 45. 1, 2, 3. De his qui ven. setat, impetr.

§ 1. A quibus dentur curatores. Testamento non dantur. For a father cannot dispose of the goods of his son arrived at puberty, who at that age may make a will for himself, Dig. 28. 6. But the magistrates usually appointed the curator recommended by the father, Dig. 26. 1. 39. 1.

§ 2. Quibus dentur. Item inviti adolescentes.] Ravardus and others have accused Tribonian, as guilty of an error, in saying, that minors, after fourteen, could not be obliged to receive curators.—And, in support of their accusation, they allege the opinion of Ulpian, whose words are these.—Hodie in hanc usque ætatem adolescentes curatorum auxilio reguntur, nec ante rei suæ administratio eis committi debet, quamvis bene rem suam gerentibus. ff. 4. t. 4. l. 1.—But it must be observed, that, with regard to minors after puberty the Roman law has frequently been altered. By the law Laetoria, ann. urb. con. 550. such adults only, who behaved ill, were obliged to receive curators after proof had been made of their ill behavior. But afterwards it was enacted, by a constitution of Marcus Antoninus, Ut omnes adulti, curatores acciperent, non redditis causis: which must mean, that adults might be obliged to receive curators, although nothing could be alleged against their conduct; for it is certain, that adults might voluntarily receive curators, even before the law Lætoria. And, when Ulpian wrote, the constitution of Marcus Antoninus was as yet unrepealed; but afterwards, in the latter part of the reign of Antoninus Caracalla, it appears from Cod. 5. t. 31. l. 1. that the Roman law was again altered, and that curators could not be given, but to such minors as were willing to receive them, unless ad litem.

And in this, the law of England may be said to agree in general with the civil law: for, with us, guardianship regularly determines, when the minor has completed his fourteenth year; except, where there is a guardian by nature, or when the father of a minor has specially appointed a guardian either by deed, or will, to continue for a longer *time. And therefore a minor, after fourteen, being of course [- *452] freed from custody, is at liberty, if willing, to put himself a second time under guardianship, until he is of full age. But, if a minor, being an adult, does not consent to receive a new guardian, then no court would appoint a guardian, unless ad litem.

But, if a testator nominates a guardian, till his son arrives at full age, then the son, although above fourteen, is compelled to receive the guardian, who is thus expressly appointed for a certain time; but, if no certain time is mentioned, there is then no guardianship, if the minor is an adult. Vaugh. 185. (Harris.)

§ 3. De furiosis et prodigis. The text is here deficient and the translation follows the paraphrase of Theophilus.

In England, whose decisions I believe are generally adopted in this country, lunatics are put into commission under chancery jurisdiction: and lunacy is held to extend not merely to strict insanity, but to all cases of mental imbecility or incapacity from any cause, as disease, habitual intoxication, &c. Ridgeway v. Darwin, 8 Vez. 65. ex parte Cranmer, 12 Vez. 445. How far the court of chancery will interfere in the disposal of a lunatic's estate, what nature and extent is conceded to a commission of lunacy, and to what controul they are subject, will be found under this head in each of the volumes of Vezey, junior, from 8. to 14.

In Holland I believe curators are appointed to take care of the estate of prodigals. See the cases cited in the notes to Folliot v. Ogden. 1 Henry Blackstone's Rep. 131.

The chancery jurisdiction in cases of idiocy and lunacy in England, arises from the fiction that the king is the guardian of all such persons. 4 Co. Rep. 125.

Tit. 24. Qui satisfacere cogantur, p. 55. This was done by joint security; fide-jussore. § 2. Qui ex administratione. Sciendum. Various remedies are given to pupils and minors, who have received any damage by the male-administration or negligence of their tutors or curators.

The personal actions, to which minors are intitled, against their tutors or curators, are called Actiones tutelæ and negociorum gestorum utiles.

And the heirs of tutors and curators are also liable to the same actions ob dolum et latam culpam. Cod. 2. t. 19. l. 17.

Pupils or minors may also sue the sureties of their tutors or curators, (and even their heirs) by an action arising from the stipulation entered into by such sureties. D. 27. t. 7. ll. 3, 5. Cod. 5. t. 57. ll. 1, 2.

And lastly, as their dernier resort, minors have a right to an action called subsidiary, against any magistrate, who hath neglected to do his duty, either by taking no security, or what was not sufficient. D. 27. t. 8. l. 1. §. 6.

But the heirs of tutors, curators, sureties and magistrates, are only suable in cases of fraud in themselves, or in those, to whom they are heirs; but not merely on account of negligence. D. 27. t. 7. l. 4. C. 5. t. 75. l. 2. Claude Ferriere, h. t. (Harris.)

§ 4. De lite cum pupillo, &c. p. 58. This law is now useless, for by the 72nd Novel, Justinian prohibited the debtors and creditors of minors from being tutors or curators. (Harris.)

§ 5. De tribus tutelæ et curæ oneribus. See Dig. 27. 1. 31.

§ 6. De paupertate. Divi fratres. The emperors were stiled divi, or divine, because they were considered in every respect as gods, after the ceremony of their apotheosis had been performed. Herod. Lib. 3. The divi fratres here spoken of, are conjectured by Vinnius to *have been Marcus Aurelius, and Ælius Verus, the sons [ *454 ] of Antonius Pius.

§ 11. De Inimicitiiis, &c. p. 60. By a capital enmity, is understood such as might arise from a public accusation, affecting the life, liberty, and good name of the party accused. Dig. 50. 16. 103. But even such an accusation would not excuse a testamentary tutor, inasmuch as the appointment would imply the testator's forgiveness, unless it appeared that he acted upon another motive, and intended only to lay a burden upon the person, whom he had nominated. Tit. 26. Unde suspecti: p. 62. Crimen here means an accusation. So it is rendered by Theophilus περι της κατηγορίας. So Cicero pro Roscio; "Roscius appears to me to have three obstacles to contend with, Crimen adversariorum, et audacia, et Potentia." (Harris.)

§ 2. Qui suspecti fieri possunt, p. 63. Et possunt quidem omnes. Guardians at common law may be removed or compelled to give security, if there appears any danger of their abusing either the person or the estate of the minor. Stiles, 456. Hard. 96. 3 Chan. rep. 58. 1 Sid. 424.

But there is no instance of the removal of a statute guardian. Yet terms have frequently been imposed, so as effectually to prevent such guardian from doing any act to the prejudice of the minor. But quære whether causes may not arise for which a statute or testamentary guardian may be totally removed, notwithstanding the statute; as if he became lunatic, &c. for a guardianship being a personal is not an assignable office; nor can it go to executors or administrators. Vaugh. 180. Cas. in eq. ab. 261. So far Harris. That guardianship is not assignable, 9 Mod. 90. Reynolds v. Lady Tenham. Mellish v. Da Costa, 2 Atk. 14. It was decided in Foster v. Denny, 2 Cas. in ch. 237. that although a guardian at common law might be removed, a statute guardian could not. But I doubt whether this be law, see the cases of Roach v. Garvan, 1 Vez. Sen. 160. Duke of Beaufort v. Berty, 1 P. Will. 704. O'Keefe v. Casey, 1 Sch. and Lefroy, 106.

Guardians under the English law, were either guardians, 1st, By chivalry: or 2dly, By socage: or 3dly, By nature, as the [ *455 ] parent: or *4thly By nurture, which is nearly the same: or 5thly, By statute (to wit, by 4 and 5 Ph. and Mary Ch. 8 and 12 Ch. 2 ch. 24. which enables a father to appoint a testamentary guardian: or 6thly, By custom. Co. Litt. 88. b. To which may be added after Hargreave in his notes thereon, 7thly, By election of the infant; before a judge on the circuit, or by deed, as in the case of lord Baltimore for the custody of his Maryland estate: or 8thly, By appointment of the chancellor: or 9thly, By the ecclesiastical court: or 10thly, Ad litem.

In Pennsylvania, we have no chivalry: nor as I incline to think any tenure in the socage since the revolution, notwithstanding the terms of Penn's charter. Our tenure, being free of any rent or service, but what the state (i. e. the great mass of citizens) imposes by common consent, seems to be, allodial. We acknowledge guardianship of parents, and guardians appointed by will of the parents, and guardianship by appointment of the orphans court, without the consent of the minors if under 14 by petition of the mother or prochein ami, and with the consent of the minors if above 14, signified in open court. Our laws also, compel guardians and executors of whatever description to give security, if good cause be shown; and for like cause I apprehend they are also compellable to give additional security, or may be removed: see the laws of this state relating to the power and duties of the orphan's court.

Curators are appointed to minors by the code Napoleon; which also adopts the provision of the civil law for curators ad custodiam ventris, in favour of the heir.

Fama patroni parcendum. The action was directed to be an action on the case, in factum, in which no suggestion of fraud was permitted. Dig. 4. 3. 11.

Herbert*, 3 Term Rep. 253; where the question is discussed at length. The case of the London wharves, 1 Sir W. § II. De reb. singulorum. p. 70. Dominium is divided into three kinds by the civilians. It is either, 1st directum dominium, or usufructuary dominion. Dominium utile, as between landlord and tenant. Or it is 2dly full property and simple property. The former is such as belongs to the cultivator of his own estate, the other is the property of a tenant. 3dly Dominium acquired by the law of nations, and dominion acquired by municipal law. By the law of nations property may be acquired by occupation, by accession, by commixtion, by use or the pernanacy of the usufruct, and by tradition or delivery.

As to the dominium eminens, the right of the public in cases of emergency to seize upon the property of individuals, and convert it to public use; and the right of individuals in similar cases to commit trespass on the persons and properties of others, see the opinion of chief justice M'Kean, in Respublica v. Sparhawk, 1 Dallas, 362, and the case of Vanborne v. Dorrance, 2 Dall. Rep. 304. I am not convinced by Judge Patterson in that case, that a just compensation must always be a money price.

Lord Cawdon*, 11 East. 570, if one start a hare in my close and kill her there, it is my hare, otherwise if he hunt her into the ground of another; for then it is the hunter's. Though this indeed is not exactly the case of the text.

In Pierson v. Post, 3 Caines N. Y. Rep. 175. the question is very fully discussed, with references to the civil law doctrine, and the law as laid down by Puffendorf and Barbeyrac, and Fleta, and Blackstone; and determined that wild animals, feræ naturæ (this was the case of a fox) become the subjects of occupancy, only when they are either taken, or so disabled or circumvented as to render their capture certain: and therefore, that no action will lie against B. for killing such an animal, originally started and pursued by the plaintiff A. who was on the point of taking it. That a fox is always so considered is certain, see the opinion of the court, in Respublica v. Sparhawk, late above quoted.

I confess I do not consider the subject exactly in the same point of view. It appears to me that the question is not merely whether the animal pursued be feræ naturæ or not, but whether it be wild and noxious, without being valuable. A fox, a bear, a stag, a beaver, a raccoon, an otter, &c. are clearly wild animals; but the skin of them may be of more value than the flesh of a tame animal of equal size. If I pursue the creature for profit, I am entitled to it, if I have so conducted the chase as to put the animal in my power: any other person coming in between me and manucaption in such a case, cannot be considered as entitled to any part of the prey. Just as if a ship of war of a belligerent, pursues an enemy's vessel, and so gains upon her, being of superior force also, that the capture is certain, in such a case, another vessel of the same belligerent assisting, would not be entitled to any share of the prize money: but if the latter vessel, rendered a doubtful chance certain, and contributed to take a prize which probably would not have been taken without such assistance, then the prize cannot be claimed in toto by the first pursuer.

But if the wild animal be pursued not for profit but extirpation, *then, any intervenient person, may as I suppose, [ *458 ] lawfully assist; and no action lies against him for killing it, though started and chased by another, as was determined in Pierson v. Post. Still, a distinction may reasonably suggest itself, when the animal is pursued not for the mere purpose of extirpation, but for the pleasure of hunting, according to the usual rules and practice of those who follow that amusement. I well remember that in my time and in my immediate neighborhood in Cheshire in England, foxes were regularly imported from France to supply the demands of the Hunt. The sudden shooting of a fox just ran down after a day's chase, would in that part of the kingdom be regarded as an outrage upon the rights of the pursuers, and upon the rules of good manners, not tamely to be borne. But the law has hitherto it seems, refused to recognize the rights of Fox-hunters.

§ 14 De Apibus, p. 72. In conformity to the doctrine here laid down, it is decided in Gillet v. Mason, 7 John's. N. York Rep. 16, that Bees are feræ naturæ, and until hived and reclaimed, no property can be acquired in them: and that the finding a Bee-tree on the land of another, and marking it with the initials of the finder's name, is not such an appropriation as will be a substitute for the actual reclaiming of them: nor can the finder maintain trespass against any other person who under these circumstances cuts down the tree and takes the honey.

In Wallis v. Mease, 3 Binney, 546, it was determined that wild bees remaining on the tree where they have hived, notwithstanding the tree is upon the land of an individual, and he has confined them in it, are not the subjects of felony. This section of Justinian is there cited and assented to by Judge Brakenridge, who enters at some length into the reason of the doctrine: see 2 Blacks. Comm. 392. Bro. Abs. title Property, 37.

§ 25. De specificatione p. 75. Sabinianorum et Proculianorum.] The two sects of Sabinians and Proculians took their rise in the reign of Augustus, but were not distinguished by any particular appellation till long afterwards: for the Sabinians obtained their name from Sabinus, who was a favourite of the emperor Tiberius: and the Proculians were so called from Proculus, who flourished under Vespasian. It is generally held, that Atticus Capito, who lived in the Augustan age, and was a person remarkable for his great attachment to precedents and old customs, was the chief of the Sabinians; and that Antistius Labeo, his contemporary, who did not confine himself wholly to rules, but followed principally the dictates of reason and his own understanding, was the head of the Proculian sect. These sects continued in vogue to the reign of Marcus Aurelius, till which time, the students of the law generally attached themselves to either the one or the other. But the lawyers of that reign affected neither party in particular; for at different times they dispassionately approved the opinions of either sect, as they judged them more or less agreeable to justice and right reason: and they generally endeavoured by an equal temperature, to avoid the absurdities, into which both parties, by reason of their great dislike and opposition to each other, had frequently fallen. ff. 1. de origine juris. Hist. du droit Romain, par Claude Ferriere.

These lawyers (who from their conduct were denominated Erciscundi, from the old verb erciscere to divide) are the persons, hinted at by Justinian in this paragraph; as observing a just mean between the two parties. (Harris.)

Adrian (according to his life by Spartian) gave the treasure exclusively to the finder, if found on his own grounds, or in any religious or sacred place. But if found on another man's ground, it was divided between the finder and the owner of the ground.

Thesauros.] Treasures naturally belong to the finder; that is, to him, who moves them from the place where they are, and secures them; yet nothing forbids but that the laws and customs of any country may ordain otherwise. Plato was desirous, that notice should be given to the magistrates, and that the oracle should be consulted: and Apollonius, looking upon a treasure found as a particular blessing from heaven, adjudged it to the best man. The Hebrews gave it to the owner of the ground where it was found, as may be gathered from Christ's parable, Matt. xiii. 44. and, that the Syrians did the same, we may infer from a story in Philostratus, lib. vi. cap. 16. The laws of the Roman emperors are very various upon this subject, as appears partly from their constitutions, and partly from the histories of Lampridius, Zonarus and Cedrenus. The Germans awarded treasures found, and indeed all other αδελφοποια (i. e. things without an owner,) to their prince; which is grown so common, that it may pass for the law of nations; for it is now observed in Germany, France, Spain, Denmark, and England; where treasure-trove is understood to be any gold or silver, in coin, plate or bullion, which hath been of ancient time hidden; and wheresoever it is found, if no person can prove it to be his property, it belongs to the king, or his grantee. A concealment of treasure-trove is now only punished by fine and imprisonment; but it appears from Glanville and Bracton, that occultatio thesauri inventi fradulosa was formerly an offence punishable with death. 3 Co. chaser, or symbolical, as the keys of a house; or with us, a ship's papers. Dig. 18. 1. 74.

It is with this modification that the civil law doctrine is to be understood, that the obligation of the contract emptio venditio arises not from the delivery of the goods to the vendee, but upon the mutual consent of the parties, the one to sell, and the other to buy. Ut primum de re et pretio convenit, Emptio perfecta intelligitur quamvis nec res traditur, nec pretium numeratum, nec arrha data sit. Atque in contractibus qui consensu perficiuntur, distinguenda perfectio contractûs, à consummatione sive implemento. Emptionem et venditionem perficit solus consensus de re et pretio; consummat rei traditio et pretii numeratio, qui extremas est contrahentium finis. Simulatque autem emptio perfecta est, nascitur utrinque obligatio, teneturque emptor actione ex vendito ut, nummes quos pretii nomine pro re venditâ promisit, solvat: venditor actione ex empto, ut rem venditam tradat emptori. Vinn. l. 3. tit. 24. To this general doctrine, an exception was allowed in cases where earnest was given: in those cases, if the buyer repented, he forfeited his earnest money, and was free from the contract; if the seller repented, he forfeited the earnest money paid, and as much more. See also Inst. 2. 1. 4.

Formerly, by the general law of France, the seller might seize the thing sold, and not paid for, if he could find it in the possession of the buyer, and need not have shared it with the other creditors: and in some places of France, the seller might even pursue the article in possession of a subsequent purchaser. See Domat's Civil Law, book 4, tit. 5. sect. 2. art. 3., with the notes on that article, and on book 3. tit. 1. sect. 5. art. 3. But this right by the new commercial code of France, art. 576, 577, et seq. is confined to stoppage in transitu, under provisions very similar to our own law. See Mr. Du Ponceau's translation of the commercial code, 2 Walsh's Review, p. 191, 192.

In England, before the statute of frauds, 29 Ch. 2. chap. 3. §. 17, (which enacts, that "no contract for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, for the price of ten pounds sterling or upwards, shall be allowed to be good, except the buyer shall accept part of the goods so sold and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the bargain, or in part payment, or that some note or memorandum in writing of the said bargain be made and signed by the parties charged by such contract or their agents thereunto lawfully auther"ized") no bargain for goods was valid without earnest, delivery, or payment, except a contract to deliver at a future day appointed, and for a settled price; which might have been supported. Since that statute no verbal contract of bargain and sale unaccompanied by delivery or part delivery, payment or part payment, or earnest money (which may or may not be a part of the price, according to the intention of the parties; Pinnel's case, 5 Rep. 177., Pordage v. Cole, 1 Saund. 319., Manning v. Western, 2 Vern. 606., and Hamersly v. Knowlys, 2 Esp. N. Pr. Cas. 666., which are comments on the rude, quicquid solvitur, solvitur ad modum solventis) can be supported. It was for some time thought that executory contracts might be taken out of it; but all that class of cases relates to those sales only where the goods to be delivered are not finished, and cannot be delivered at the time of the contract; not to those which exist in solido, and are capable of present delivery. See Rondeau v. Wyatt, 2 H. Bl. 63, and Cooper v. Elston, 7 Term Rep. 14.

Thursby's assignees v. Gray's administrators. Debt on bond. Com. Pleas, Northumberland county, 1808. Spring, a storekeeper, purchased goods at public auction belonging to Thursby, and gave bond for the payment of the amount in six months; in which bond, Gray joined as surety. The bond was not demanded at the expiration of the six months either from Spring or from Gray: it thus lay till Spring became insolvent about two years from the date of the bond. It did not appear that payment had ever been demanded, either from Spring or Gray. Spring's insolvency began to be suspected about a twelvemonth before he actually failed. Previous to that time, and for a twelvemonth or more from the date of the bond, it might have been received on demand, or recovered at law, without doubt. Spring lived in Northumberland town, and Gray in Sunbury, about two miles off. Sometime after Spring's failure the assignees of Thursby brought suit on the bond against the administrators of Gray. I charged the jury that the administrators of Gray under these circumstances, were not liable. The jury brought in a verdict accordingly.

This case came on to be argued in the supreme court of Pennsylvania sitting at Sunbury in June, on the ground of misdirection of the judge in point of law, and it was held that the doctrine laid down by judge Cooper was not supported to this extent, by any case in the English books, and the verdict was set aside. This case is not reported in Binney; I am therefore unable to state the precise grounds of decision of the supreme court. But as a view of the leading cases of suretyship may be of use to a student, I have collected them. "Surety relied in equity where a bond was continued in use without his privity, he thinking the same to be paid. Bullock and Pope, 11 Car. 1. Tot-hill's reports in chancery, p. 180.

The leading principle of the following cases, is, that "the contract of a surety shall be construed according to the letter, strictly and in his favour: and shall not be extended by implication." A doctrine indeed, laid down as the result of all the cases of suretyship, nearly in the same words by Lord Mansfield in Dance et al. v. Girdler, 4 Bos. and Pull. 34. and by Buller, in Stratton v. Rastall, 2 Term Rep. 370. and by Spencer and Thompson Justices, in Ludlow v. Simond in error, 2 New York, cases in error, 29. 57.

To these may be added the analogy of all the cases, relating to the holding over a negotiable security as a bill of exchange. See also the People v. Jansen et al. 7. Johns. 332.

The above case however, of Thursby's Assignees v. Gray's administrators, seems to settle the law in Pennsylvania, that no surety in a bond can discharge himself, but by payment of principal and interest.

The case of the United States v. the administrators of Hillegas, in the Circuit Court of the United States, for the district of Pennsylvania, 3 Wash. C. C. R. 70, reviews all the authorities, and settles, that a surety is discharged by indulgence given to the principal on a new security. Add to the cases on Surety, 10 East, 39. 1 Bos. and Pull. 419. 4 Dall. 135.

This 41st Section is discussed in Ludlow v. Brown and Eddy, 1 Johns. N. Y. Rep. p. 17. which in part is a case of stoppage in transitu; a branch of law connected with, and it seems to me arising out of the doctrine laid down in the first sentence of this section, though somewhat modified. The general principle involved in the right of stoppage in transitu, is, that goods being ordered by a customer, and packed up and sent off to be delivered according to that order by the merchant may be stopped in their way or passage to the place of delivery if the merchant has reason to suspect the solvency of the consignee, or purchaser.

[ *464 ] *The first case reported in the books on this subject wherein the right of stoppage in transitu was allowed, is Wiseman v. Vandeput, 2 Vern. 203. which was confirmed in Snee and Baxter v. Prescott et al. 1 Atkins, 249. and in Birkitt v. Jenkins cited in Vale v. Bayle, Cowp. 296.

In Hodgson v. Loy, 7 Term Rep. 440, Lord Kenyon, and in ex parte Gwynne, 12 Ves. 382, Lord Erskine, state, that the right of stoppage in transitu is not founded on the right of the vendor to rescind the contract, but on an equitable lien, indulged to the vendor, from motives of reasonable expedience in the case of bargain and sale. To me, this right appears to have been suggested by the provisions of the civil law.

I believe it is considered that delivery to a common carrier, is such a delivery to the consignee, as to take away any right in the consignor to rescind the contract, though it leaves unimpaired the right of stopping in transitu ere the goods arrive at their place of destination. In the case of Walter and Fillis v. Jenks, Judge Washington determined that a vendor had a right in case of insolvency to seize his goods on board a general vessel, to which they were sent by the purchaser who had not paid for them, and for whose use they were ostensibly shipped, without any assignment of the bill of lading, though they were in fact intended for the use of a distant creditor of the purchaser: for under the circumstances they remained completely in the power of the purchaser who shipped them, and who could at any time alter their place of destination.

In the case of a sale of land, where the purchase money is not paid, the Court of Chancery considers the purchase a trustee for the seller. Pollexfen v. Moore, 3 Atk. 272., Blackburn v. Grosvenor, 1 Brown's Ch. Rep. 420.

Add to the cases of stoppage in transitu, Stubbs v. Lund, 7 Mass. Rep. 452, an instructive case, decided by a judge of no common talent. Garson v. Green, 1 Johns Ch. Rep. 308.

The cases are very numerous on this head, and it would immoderately extend this note, to abridge them all; but the leading principles already settled, are, that as between vendor or consignor, and vendee or consignee, the property of goods ordered and sent, is not altered till actual delivery; and the vendor has a right to stop them in transitu: but 1st, This is a right that exists only between the consignor and the consignee; and cannot be defeated, by the contracts, or proceedings of third persons, excepting those who claim by bonâ fide purchase and sale under the consignee. 2ndly. It can be exercised only during the transit : thus goods may be stopped in the hands of a carrier : but if delivered into the possession of the agent : or of the accustomed wharfinger of the consignee : or if to any wharfinger, who makes an entry of them in the name of the consignee, and charges him with wharfage : or if the consignor charges ware-house-room after they are packed up : or if the assignee of the consignee puts his mark upon them and exercises ownership over them : or if they are directed to be sent and are sent to any particular place, though short of the place of abode of the consignee, who then exercises the right of ordering them to an ulterior destination : (but compare Stokes v. Riviere, cited 2 Term Rep. 466, & 1 Campb. 282, with 5 East, 175,) or though there be only a part delivery to, or an actual occupancy of a part only by the consignee, his agent or his assignee, it stands for a delivery and occupancy of the whole, and destroys the right of stoppage in the transitu. But part payment does not take away this right ; nor is the vendor affected by any agreement between the consignee and the carrier, or by any lien of the latter, but the vendor may pay the carriage and retake the goods ; and hold them on his own account, or may again tender them to the vendee and bring suit thereupon for the amount, if no loss or damage hath arisen from the detention. 3dly, The assignment of a bill of lading divests the vendor of this right, as it was held at first to do in Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 Term Rep. 63, overruled in error in the exchequer chamber, 1 Hen. Blacks. 357 : and finally settled as at first decided, 6 Term Rep. 20. Newson v. Thornton : for the bill of lading is now considered in the light of a negotiable instrument. So, where the vendor gives an order to the vendee, who thereupon procures an entry of them to be made in his name as owner ; *or becomes liable for ware-house-room or wharf- [ *465 ] age ; or on the strength of that order, sells them to a third person bona fide ; or where they by any means came into possession of a bona fide purchaser under an act of ownership of the first vendee, in all these cases, the vendor's right of stopping in transitu is divested.

4thly. As to suits of trover against carriers, or assumpsit by them. Carriers are liable to trover by the vendor ; for goods while in their possession are in transit : when once delivered according to order, the carriers are discharged. As to their right of action for the carriage. It seems that unless the general rule be modified by some special agreement, the consignee is liable for freight and carriage : they are delivered to the carrier as being the goods of the consignee to be delivered to him. Hence the consignee may sue the carrier for loss or damage, for on delivery to the carrier, the property vests in the consignee, subject only to the right of the consignor to stop them in transitu. 3 Bos. and Pull. 48. 119. and Dutton v. Solomonson, ib. 582. Coxe v. Harden, 4 East, 211.

1 Johns. N. Y. Rep. Ludlow v. Bowne and Eddy. Patter v. Lansing, 1 Johns. Rep. 215.

5thly. The bankruptcy of the vendee, does not of itself operate as a countermand of the order, or avoid the sale.

The French law as laid by Pothier in his Traité du Contrat de Vente. n. 332, is conformable to this section of the Institutes: viz. that even though the goods be delivered to the purchaser, the property is not out of the owner till they are paid for, unless under a special contract of selling them on credit.

v. Bowne and Eddy, 1 Johns. N. Y. rep. 1 in error. [Subbs v. Lund, 7 Mass. Rep. 452, decided by a judge of no common talent.]

§ 43. De quasi traditione, p. 85. Acquiritur proprietas. This is called  fictio brevis manus: which takes place when goods are put into the possession of some person by way of deposit or loan, and are afterwards given or sold to the same person, he being already the possessor. Dig. 23. 3. 43. Harris.

§ 44. De traditione clavium, p. 85. The spirit of this section would embrace our law as to the delivery of possession by the delivery of documents and muniments of title.

§ 46. De habitispro derelicto, p. 85. The English law of waives, I presume does not extend to this country: in that country waives, bona waiviata belong to the prince by prerogative, 1 Blacks. Comm. 297.

§ 47. De jactis in Mare levandæ navis causa. Item. &c. p. 86. As to things Jetsam, Flotsam and Ligan, see 1 Black. Comm. 293.

Furtum committit.] None of those goods, which are called Jetsam, (from being cast into the sea while the ship is in danger) or those called Flotsam (from floating after shipwreck) or those called Ligan, (that is, goods sunk in the sea, but tied to a buoy, that they may be found) are to be esteemed wreck, so long as they remain in the sea. And by 3 Edw. 1 cap. 4. it is enacted—*That if a man, cat, or dog, escape alive out of the ship, whereby the owner of the goods may be known, neither the vessel, nor any thing therein, shall be adjudged wreck; but shall be restored to the owner, if he claims within a year *and a day.*

A man, cat, or dog, are only put for examples; but all other .[ *467 ] living things are to be understood; and, if the owner of the ship should die within the year and a day, his executors or administrators may make proof. 2. Co. Inst. 167, 168. Wood's Inst. 214. If the goods are taken away by wrong-doers, the owner may have his action: and, if the wrong-doers are unknown, he may have a commission of oyer and terminer, to inquire what persons committed the trespass, and make restitution. Harris.

Tit. 2. De servitutibus, p. 87. Servitus est jus quo res alterius, rei vel personæ servit, Dig. 8. 1. 1. Nemini res sua servit, Dig. 8. 2. 26. Dig. 7. 6. 5. Servitus, a service, is a right by which one thing is subjected to the use or convenience of another thing or person, contrary to common right; and not where one person is subject to another person; which is servitude, though sometimes called servitus: as, servitus uterina, Taylor, 426. 411. 407. Inst. 1. 3. 2. Dig. 1. 5. 4. 1. In translating this word by the word services I follow Wood's civil law, Taylor's Elem. civ. law, and Harris. I am aware that lord Mansfield in Waring v. Griffith et al. 1 Burr. 443, translates it SERVITUDE. But, he was more intent upon the substance, than the expression, and I prefer Taylor's authority as a critic, to lord Mansfield's. Cambaceres has Servitudes ou Services. Code civil Nap. Art. No. 526.

[In preferring, of the several translations, the word "services," I have against me, besides Lord Mansfield in the case cited from 1 Burr. 443, but also Gibbon, 8 Rom. Hist. 73; Mr. Du Ponceau of Philadelphia, whose opinions, on subjects of the civil law, I hold in great respect; and Mr. Jefferson, in his late learned and elaborate defence of the proceedings of the United States, in respect of Mr. Ed. Livingston's claim to the New Orleans Batture. In this tract the reader will meet with much collateral information on alluvion, servitudes, prædia rustica et urbana, and other points connected with the civil law. All these learned men translate servitudo by servitude. But to my ear, the last word seems exclusively appropriated in common language, to the situation of servants and slaves.]

§ 1. De servitibus urbanis, p. 88. In the Roman law, all houses and buildings whether in town or country are called Prædia Urbana: and all lands, whether meadow, arable, or vineyard, are called Prædia Rustica: Dig. 50. 16. 198.

Prædia urbana, city services; are affirmative or negative.

Affirmative: as that I may rest my beam on my neighbour's wall: that my house shall in part rest on his wall: that my house may project so as to throw the path upon the premises: that my eaves may overhang upon his side: that my sink or gutter may pass through his ground: that I may put out lights that overlook him: that my prospect shall be uninterrupted by his buildings, &c. all of which are noticed in the eighth book of the Digests.

Negative services are, that his eaves shall not drop upon my ground: that he shall not build so as to darken my lights, or hinder my prospect: that he shall not put out a window to overlook me: that he shall not raise his house without my permission.

Prædia rustica: rural services; are a right of passing over the grounds of another, by foot path, horse path, or carriage way: Iter, Actus, Via or Aditus. Aqueducts, a right of water course: a [ *468 ] right of drawing water, watering cattle, hunting, fishing, making lime, digging gravel, &c.

Others are personal services, such as the rent services of the feudal times.

The word service in the English law, answers perhaps more properly to Easement, than any other synonyme, and indeed is used synonymously. Jacob's Law Dict. voce Easement. But on reflection I have preferred, service. As to the law on this subject, see Reynolds v. Clarke, 2 Lord Raym. 1899. Str. 634. Peppin v. Shakespear, 6 Durn. and East, 748. Allen v. Ormond, 8 East, 4. The pleading is required to be strict.

I collect the following observations from the notes of Ferriere in Loco.

Services, are incorporeal rights incident to rural or city estates. They do not lie in livery. Dig. 41. 1. 43. 1. Dig. 8. 2. 32. 1. Dig. 8. 1. 14. 17. They cannot therefore be acquired by usucapion, which applies to things in possession only. But they can be prescribed for, and 10 years gives a title between parties present, and 20 years against absentees. But the original title must be bona fide, nec vi, nec clam, nec precario, otherwise the prescription must go beyond 100 years according to Cujacius ad Leg. 14 ff. de servitut. These services might depend on stipulation and contract. A right of way could not be for a way of less than eight feet when straight, and sixteen when crooked. Dig. 8. 3. 8.

Tit. 4. § 1. Quibus modis constituitur, p. 90. In England there are no usufructs, under that name. Estates at will and for years however are of the same nature, and usufructs might doubtless be created by compact. The use of the old English law previous to the statute for transferring uses into possession, 27 Hen. 8. ch. 10. were, as Blackstone observes, 2 Comm. 327, more analogous to the fidei-commissum or testamentary trust-estate of the Romans, than to the usufruct of an estate.

§ 2. Quibus in rebus constituitur, p. 91. Senatus censuit. Dig. 7. 5. 1. 2.

Quasi-usufruct may be of certain cloaths, as vestes seniles et funerales, or what our New England people would call a go-to-meeting coat: which is used so sparingly that it is long before it is destroyed by use.

§ 3. Quibus modis finitur, p. 91. Statuit constitutio, viz. Cod. 3. 23. 16.

It may cease by non-user for one year in respect of things moveable, *and two as to things immoveable. Dig. 8. 1. 4. [ *469 ] but by an ordinance of Justinian, three years as to things moveable.

Qua res consolidatio appellatur. This is similar to merger.

Tit. 5. § 1. Quid intersit inter usufructum, &c. p. 93. Use differs from usufruct. 1st. The latter may be divided, the former is indivisible, L. 5. ff. de usufruct. L. 19. ff. h. 1. 2ndly. The usufruct extends to all the fruit or produce of the object, the use only to the immediate want of the user. L. 12. §. 1. et seq. ff. h. 1. 3rdly. The usufructuary can lend, sell, &c. which is not an incident of use. 4thly, The usufructuary is bound to repairs and replacements, which the heir is not. Ferriere in loc.

Minus autem.] An Use, by the laws of England, is of as great an extent, as an usufruct by the Roman law. And by 27 H. 8. He, who hath the use of land, is deemed to have the land itself. But as to such uses and rights of habitation, which were among the Romans, though our laws have not treated of them in any particular manner, yet they may certainly be granted and acquired by special covenants and agreements, as was said of usufruct. Usus apud nos aequè late extenditur, atque ususfructus apud authores juris civilis; sed non video, cur idem jus tam de usu, ut illi eum intelligunt, quam de habitatione, apud nos non teneat, quod olim inter Romanos tenebat. Cowel, h. t. Wood's imp. Law. 151. Harris.

Nudum habet usum.] An usufruct is a right of enjoying all the fruits and revenues, which the estate, subject to it, is capable of producing; but an use consists only in a right to take out of the fruits of the ground what is necessary for the person, who has the use, or what is settled by his title; and the surplus belongs to the proprietor of the estate: thus those, who have the right of use in a forest or copice, can only take what is necessary for their use, or is regulated by their title. And he, who has the use of any other ground, can only take out of it what shall be necessary to supply the occasions he shall have for those kinds of fruits, which the ground produces: or the use may even be restrained to certain kinds of fruits, or revenues, without extending it to others. Thus we see in the Roman law, that he, who had only the simple use of a piece of ground, had no share of the corn or oil, which grew in it; and that he, who had the use of a flock of sheep, was restrained only to make use of them for dunging his grounds, and had no share either in the wool or lambs: and even of the milk, it is said in some places, that the usuary could take but a very small portion; and in others, that he had no right to any of it. ff. 7. t. 8. l. 12. Domat. lib. 1. t.

2. sect. 2. Harris.

[ *470 ] *§ 2. Ædium usus, p. 93. No doubt the right to assign the usufruct of a house, might be the subject of special contract under the Roman law.

In what cases a clause in a lease, prohibiting assignment or underletting, shall rank under usual and proper covenants, see Vere v. Loveden, 82 Vez. 179, and the cases there cited; also Jones v. Jones, Ib. 186. and Weatherall v. Gearing, Ib. 511. Waston v. The master of Hemsworth Hospital, 14 Vez. 333. But a prohibition of assigning without licence, ceases on licence once granted. Brummel v. Macpherson, Ib. 173, and Jones v. Jones, 12 Vez. 191.

Such a prohibiting clause however, becomes void on the bankruptcy of the lessee. Weatherall v. Gearing, 504. Agreement to let, not held a lease if any thing executory remained. 12 Vez. 413.

Nostra decisione.] Whoever hath a right of habitation in a house, or in a part of it, may assign over and let out his right to another, unless the instrument, from which he derives his title, bears some condition to the contrary: and the right of habitation, as well as that of use, if simply given, continues during the life of him, who possesses it, Cod. 3. t. 33. l. 13. de usufructu et habitatione. ff. 7. t. 8. l. 10. sect. 3. Harris.

§ 4. De Pecorum usu, p. 94. Pindar v. Wadsworth, 2 East, 155, is an action by a commoner for taking away the dung from a common: it was found that the plaintiff's injury would not amount to more than a farthing: held that the action would lie.

§ 6. Transitio, p. 94. By the civil law in Justinian's there were three modes of acquiring title in common use: to wit, legal adjudication: transfer by operation of law: and usucapion including prescription. Transfer by mancipation, and by legal cession were out of use. L. 11. Cod. de usucap. transf. Cujas ad loc. Ulpian fragm. tit. 19. Ferriere,

Et ideo constitutionem.] vid. Cod. 7. t. 31. l. un. De usucapione transformanda, et de sublata differentia rerum mancipi et nec mancipi. By the common law of England the time of prescription is that time, of which there is no memory of man, or record, to the contrary; for if there is any sufficient proof of a record or writing to the contrary, although it exceeds the memory or proper knowledge of any man living, yet it is deemed to be within the memory of man: and this is the reason, that regularly a man cannot prescribe or allege a custom against an act of parliament, because it is the highest proof and matter of record *in the law. Co. Litt. 115. But, although a prescrip- [ *471 ] tion is said to be constituted by a portion of time, which exceeds the memory of man, yet this is not always true; for our laws admit a great variety of prescriptions; which for the sake of order may be divided into two sorts;—into those, which secure us from loss and punishment; and into those, which enable us to acquire a property.

The statute of the 31st of Eliz. cap. 5. bars all popular actions on account of offences by a prescription of two years, in the case of the king, and by a prescription of one year, when there is an informer. Other penal statutes allow different periods to prescribe in — as one year; (3 H. 7. c. 1. 21 Eliz. c. 4.) — six months; (5 Eliz. c. 5.) — three months; (1 Edw. 6. c. 1.) — one month; (23 Eliz. c. 1.) &c. &c. &c. — and, by the common law, if a man is acquitted upon an indictment of murder, he may after a year and a day plead prescription against any appeal brought by the wife, or the next of kin to the party killed. Natura brevium, 624. G. — Things immoveable also, whether corporeal or incorporeal, are variously prescribed to. The most usual prescription is that, which is called emphatically the longest, and extends beyond the memory of man; for whoever will prescribe against another in regard to the maintenance of a chaplain to celebrate divine service, the repairs of a church, an annuity, or any service in his fee, he must prove them to have been time out of mind, or he does nothing. But there are prescriptions of a shorter time, as of 40 years in the case of predial tithes, by the 2nd and 3rd of Ed. VI.—of five years for lands and tenements, when a fine hath been lawfully acknowledged with the due proclamations. (4 Hen. 7. c. 24.) — of three years, when lands and tenements, gotten by forcible entry, have been so long held in quiet possession; (8 H. 6. c. 9.) — of a year and a day for a villein to assert his liberty against his lord, if the villein has continued so long in antient demesne, or in any of the king's cities and towns, without being claimed or molested. — of a year and a day for the confirmation of any deed made by one, who is in prison, unless he who made it, doth in the interim revoke it. — Also of a year and a day, to hinder the entry of him, who, having omitted to make continual claim, endeavours, after a descent cast, to recover lands and tenements, of which he hath been unjustly disseized. Co. 1. inst. page 250, &c. of continual claim. But prescriptions do not take place in all things. No man can prescribe, for example, to things not in commerce, nor to those, of which the king is properly the sole lord; nor to a custom, which is repugnant to reason or good manners. Co. Litt. lib. 2d. sect. 212. of villenage. And [ *472 ] it is a known maxim, in the *laws of England, "that no prescription in lands maketh a right." Doct. and Stud. Dial. 1. cap. 8. Cowel's inst. h. t. Wood's inst. 297, 298.

The following observations extracted from Ferriere, are worth attention; Blackstone in his note f. 2 Comm. p. 264, is accurate, when he speaks of usucapion being the same with prescription, but the observation is true under the Justinian code only.

Usucapion is the right acquired by the long possession of any thing substantial and corporeal to the exclusion of the real owner, or of a creditor by pledge. Usucapion arose from the law of the 12 tables. Prescription was, in its origin, a creature of prætorial edict. Usucapion, was perfected by one year's possession of a moveable, and two years of an immoveable chattel: prescription required ten years as against parties present, and twenty years as against parties absent. Usucapion did not, while prescription did, take place as to incorporeal hereditaments, as services incident to estates. Usucapion transferred the property of the thing itself. Prescription operated only in bar of the right of the owner or mortgager. Justinian however seems to have converted usucapion into prescription, and action therefore lies under the Justinian code, to recover the possession of prescriptive property. Cod. de usucap. transform. An original, fair and bona fide possession by the prescriber, was necessary to support this title, without knowledge at the time of any fraud or deceit upon the real owner: though if such knowledge accrued afterwards, the usucaptor or prescriber, was not therefore bound to give up the property, if he originally came by it honestly on his part. Nor could this kind of title, support a right to things originally stolen, or forcibly acquired. Nor in certain cases to fiscal or imperial property. Cod. ne rei. domin. The English law respecting goods purchased out of market overt, will coincide with the doctrine here laid down. How far sale in market overt protects property, and concerning the restrictions attending the sale and purchase of horses particularly see 2 Blacks. Comm. 449, and Wood's inst. of the laws of England, 210, 211. In Wilkinson v. King, 2 Campb. 335. it was determined that the owner of goods having sent some lead to a wharfinger's in Southwark, where lead was accustomed to be sold, *and the wharfinger sold it to a bonâ fide purcha- [ *473 ] ser, without authority from the owner, the latter might bring trover against the purchaser: because a wharf where goods of various kinds are deposited, cannot be considered as market overt for the purchase and sale of goods.

I observe the judges of the supreme court have not adopted the statutes of England as to the sale of horses, as part of the law of Pennsylvania. Nor do I find any reported decisions upon the subject. Hence I presume the general principles of the English law will prevail here: viz. that every fair is market overt for the property, for the sale whereof, the fair is held under the law authorizing it. That every store is market overt for the goods usually sold at such store, unless the sale be to a person cognizant of fraud in the storekeeper, to an infant, or to a feme covert of goods not usually purchased by feme coverts. Provided also, the sale be made in all respects in the accustomed manner.

The other part of this section contains the principles that relate to bonâ fide purchasers without notice; see the cases collected in 2 Fonblanque, 151. and Sugden, (law of vendors) 119. 476-479. 488. to which add 2 Vez. jun. 458. Jerrard v. Saunders. 9 Vez. 24. Walwyn v. Lee. The following cases determine that notice of an act illegal or not legally conducted, will not affect the purchaser, Tonkins v. Ennis, 1 Eq. Ca. They should be made under expressed apprehension of death: 2ndly. In the presence of the donee: 3rdly. They were revocable on the recovery of the sick person. A filius familias, might with the consent of his father, make a donation mortis causa, though he could not make a will. Dig. 19. 6. 25. As to their revocation, see Dig. 34. 5. 19 & 22 & 23 & 12. de rebus dubiis. These donations were invalid as against creditors: sicut legat non debentur, nisi deducta ære alieno aliquid supersit, nec mortis causa donationes debentur, sed infirmantur per æs alienum. [The requisites of a valid donation, mortis causa, are collected in a learned note to the case of Walter v. Hodge, 2 Swanston, 106, where it is stated and proved, that it requires delivery of the property or the documentary evidence of it—that it is revocable by the donor—that it is revoked by the death of the donee during his life—that it is subject to the claims of creditors—and that, on the death of the donor, the property vests absolutely in the donee and no probate is required, and the wife may be that donee.

Bonds, mortgages, bills of exchange, promissory notes and other choses in action are all considered proper subjects of a valid donation causa mortis as well as inter vivos. But that the donor's own promissory note, payable to the donee, can be the subject of a donation causa mortis, is denied by the court in the case of Parish v. Stone, 14 Pick. 207, and also in the case of Harris v. Clark, 3 Comstock, 93, which overrules Wright v. Wright, 1 Cowen's Rep. 598.

In Louisiana, no disposition mortis causa can be made, otherwise than by last will or testament. Civil Code, Art. 1563. Nor can donations inter vivos or mortis causa exceed two thirds of the property of the disposer, if he leaves at his decease a legitimate child, or a father or mother: one half if he leaves two children; and one third, if he leaves three or more. Civil Code of Louisiana, Art. 1480, 1481.]

§ 2. De simplice inter vivos donatione. Not only notorious ingratitude would give a right to reclaim the gift, Cod. de revocat. donat. but the subsequent birth of children, Dig. 35. 1. 102. It might be by writing. 2 Just. Inst. 1. 7. 2. Cod. 8. 54. 3 & 35. § 5. Delivery is incident to a gift, 2 Blacks. Comm. 441. If unaccompanied by delivery it amounts only to a contract, and this requires a consideration to support it. Ib. See also Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Vez. jun. 111. 4 Br. Ch. Ca. 286, and the Chancellor's observations on Dig. 39. 6. 27. page 293 of that case in Brown. See also the case of Hassel v. Tynte, Ambler, *318, and Kent's remarks in Noble v. Smith et al. 2 [ *475 ] Johns. N. Y. Rep. 55, who observed very truly that the dictum ascribed to lord Coke in Wortes v. Clifton, 1 Roll's Rep. 61. that by the civil law a gift of goods was not valid without delivery, but that it was valid by the English law, is untenable in both respects.

[Delivery is essential, both at law and in equity, to the validity of a parol gift of a chattel or chose in action; and it is the same whether it be a gift inter vivos, or causa mortis. There must be an actual delivery to the donee, or it must be placed in his power by delivery of the means of obtaining possession. If the thing be not capable of actual delivery, there must be some act equivalent to it. The donor must part not only with the possession, but with the dominion of the property. If the thing given be a chose in action, the law requires an assignment, or some equivalent instrument, and the transfer must be actually executed.

In Harris v. Clark, 3 Comstock 93, it was decided by four judges of the N. Y. Court of Appeals against three, that a draft of the donor, not accepted, for a specific sum, upon a third person who has in his possession funds of the donor, does not operate as an assignment or appropriation to the donee of the sum mentioned in the draft, and therefore is not valid as a gift mortis causa.

When the gift is perfect, by delivery and acceptance, it is then, by the English law, irrevocable, unless it be prejudicial to creditors, or the donor was under a legal incapacity, or was circumvented by fraud. By the civil code of Louisiana, art. 1484, 1485, the donation would be void if the donor divested himself of all his property, and did not reserve enough for his own subsistence; and he cannot deprive heirs of the portion of his estate reserved for them by law, except in cases where he has a just cause to disinherit them. Art. 1482. It is liable also to be revoked or dissolved for certain causes specified in the Code, among which are, ingratitude of the donee, and the donor's having children after the donation. Art. 1546 &c.]

§ 3. De donatione ante nuptias vel propter nuptias, p. 102. These were of two kinds, marriage presents, sponsalia largitas, and gifts in some sort by way of jointure, dotis compensande causa. Formerly (that is in early periods of the Roman law) these could only be made before marriage, Cod. L. 17. de donat. ante nupt. and Cod. L. 8. de repud: but Justinian permitted this second kind, to be made also after marriage. Lex ult. Dig. de eodem.

How far such donations will be supported as against creditors see Randall v. Morgan, 12 Vez. 74. and the cases there referred to: also Kidney v. Coussmaker, 12 Vez. 155.

[Antenuptial settlements, as also settlements after marriage, if made in pursuance of an agreement in writing entered into prior to the marriage, are valid, both against creditors and purchasers. Such a settlement is not void as a fraud upon creditors, unless both parties should concur in, or have cognizance of the intended fraud. If the settlor alone intend a fraud, and the other party be innocent of it, she is not, and cannot be affected by it. The marriage is itself a valuable consideration and sufficient to support the settlement. (Magniac v. Thompson, 7 Peters U. S. Rep. 348.) But voluntary settlements after marriage upon the wife or children without any valid agreement previous to the marriage to support them, are void as against creditors existing when the settlement was made. Such settlements however are valid against subsequent creditors, if made without any fraudulent intent, by a person not indebted at the time. (Reade v. Livingston, 3 Johns, 3 Ch. Rep. 481. Sexton v. Wheaton, 8 Wheaton 229.) In North and South Carolina and Tennessee, the registration of marriage settlements and contracts is required by statute, in order to render them valid as a lien on the property of the settlor as against creditors.]

Kearne*, in the common pleas at Northumberland, a case of a tract of land taken up in the joint names of William M<sup>r</sup> Murray and George Grant, I held that the doctrine of survivorship did not apply. These cases seemed to me, cases of partnership, rather than joint-tenancy. In June 1812, the supreme court, to which Grant v. Kearne, was removed by error, agreed in opinion with the court below, and held that the right of survivorship did not attach upon property so held. As to the difference between a pledge and a mortgage, and in what cases the creditor may dispose of the pledge, see De Main-bray v. Metcalfe, *Prec. in ch. 419. and 2 Vern. 691. Jones [ *476 ] v. Smith, 2 Vez. jun. 378. and Cortelyou v. Lansing, 2 Caines' cases in error 202. A mortgage is a pledge, of which the absolute interest vests in the creditor at a fixed time, if the debt be not satisfied. A pledge cannot be sold even during the lifetime of the debtor, unless after previous demand, and reasonable notice by the creditor, who has not the property in the pledge, but a lien only on it.

[A mortgage of goods differs from a pledge or pawn in this, that the mortgage is a conveyance of the title upon condition, and it becomes an absolute interest in law, if not redeemed by a given time. Another respect in which they differ, is, that delivery accompanies a pledge, and is essential to its validity, whereas a mortgage may, in certain cases, be valid without actual delivery.

The pledgee may, by bill in equity, bar the debtor's right of redemption, and have the chattel sold. But without any bill to redeem, the creditor, on a pledge or mortgage of chattels, may after first demanding payment of the debtor, sell at auction, or giving reasonable opportunity to the debtor to redeem, and apprising him of the time and place of sale. The creditor will be held at his peril to deal fairly and justly with the pledge, both as to the time of the notice, and the manner of the sale, which can only be at public auction, unless there be an express stipulation authorising a private sale.

All kinds of property that are vested and tangible, and also negotiable paper, may be the subject of pledge; and choses in action, resting on written contract, may be assigned in pledge. The assignment of shares in joint stock companies, such as banks, insurance and rail-road companies, by way of pledge or security for monies loaned, or advances made, is usually affected by delivery of the certificate of the company for the shares appertaining to the assignor, with a power of attorney to the assignee to make the actual transfer in the books of the company, or even by merely affixing, upon the back of the certificate, the signature and seal of the assignor which will authorise any subsequent holder of the certificate to write an assignment and a power of attorney over the signature. (Kartright v. Buffalo Commercial Bank, 20 Wendell's Rep. 91. & 22 Ib. 348.)

In Huntington v. Mather, 2 Barbour's Sup. Court. Rep. 538, the Supreme Court of New York held, that where stocks are deposited with the lender of money, as collateral security for the loan, with authority to the lender to sell, on the nonpayment of the sum borrowed; the transaction is a mortgage, and not a pledge; and on default of payment, the title to the stocks become absolutely vested in the lender, and the borrower has only a right of redemption, which right may be barred by the statute of limitations, or the lapse of time. But in the later case of Wilson v. Little, 2 Comstock's Rep. 433, the Court of Appeals of the same state held, that such a transaction was a pledge, and not a mortgage of the stock; and that the transfer of the legal title is not inconsistent with a pledge, if the debtor has a right to the restoration of the property, on payment of the debt at any time, although after it falls due.]

As to the peculium adventitium, it was modified by the Theodosian Code, de matern. bon. and de bon. qu. liber. and by the Justinian Code of the same title.

The peculium profectitium, remained subject to the father's claim according to the present section.

By the Code Civil Nap. Fathers have a right to the property of their children until the age of eighteen, or previous emancipation: that property excepted which was acquired by the personal industry of the child. Art. 372. 384. 387.

In England and in this country the father is entitled only to the earnings of the child until he be of full age. If any property descend or be given to the child, the father is no more than a trustee and must account when the son is of age. 1 Bl. Comm. 453.

The French code allows of emancipation by the father, or by the mother if the father be dead, at the age of fifteen. But a son deprived of father and mother cannot be emancipated till eighteen. An emancipated minor can do no acts but such as are merely administrative: he cannot borrow without the advice of family counsel: his bargains may be moderated when excessive. He is considered as of age as to his trading, if he enters into trade. Art. 476. 487.

§ 3. De servis p. 108. The history of slavery in England and the history of villeinage as connected with it, is well treated in Hargreave's argument in the case of James Somerset, the negro, XI. State trials p. 339. He was a heathen or unbaptized negro. I have already referred to the supposed efficacy of baptism in Sir Thomas Grantham's case, 3 Mod. 120; a superstition very creditable to the christian religion. Even so late as 5 William and Mary in the case of Gelly v. Cleve, cited in Chamberlain v. Hervey. 1 Lord Raym. 146. it was decided [ *478 ] *that trover would lie for a negro boy, for they are heathens and therefore a man may have property in them.

Since the decision of Somerset, the cases relating to slavery are few. In 3 Espinasse's Nisi Prius Reports, p. 3. Easter term, 1799, I find the case of Alfred v. the Marquis of Fitzjames. Assump. for servants wages. Plaintiff proved the time he had served, and relied on a quantum. Lord Kenyon determined, that unless there was an agreement for wages during the time of his service in England, the negro could recover none.

I have thought it expedient to add here, the reported cases respecting slavery in the American books, (except 2 Bay's S. Carolina Rep.) From which some idea may be obtained of the legal situation of negro slaves. I have not the opportunity of referring to the various acts of assembly passed on this subject in the several states to the southward of Pennsylvania, and the present notices on the subject will of course be defective, but they will be relevant so far as they extend. In the preceding part of the notes pages 410. I have treated at some length the general subject of slavery; to which this note may be considered as an addition.

To the northward and eastward of New York and Pennsylvania, slavery is so nearly abolished, that I do not think it necessary to trace the laws concerning it. In Massach. Rep. 123. Winchendon and Hatfield, and Ib. 539. Dighton v. Freetown, there are some cases as to the township settlement of slaves, but of no importance.

By an act of the general assembly of the state of New York, 22 Feb. 1788, and by another act of April, 1801, persons bringing slaves into the state of New York, are prohibited under a heavy fine from selling or transferring them as slaves, or for any period whatever. Under these acts in the case of Link v. Beuner, 3 Cains 325. A. D. 1805. a transfer of the time of a slave for 20 years, the slave to be manumitted at the age of thirty eight, was held to be a transfer of the slave himself, and invalid. This was agreeable to a former decision in Fish v. Fisher, there cited, and to one of the points in Sable v. Hitchcock, 2 Johnson's cases, 79. confirmed in error in 1802. But persons acting merely in the capacity of executors, trustees, assignees of insolvent debtors, sheriffs, &c. would not be liable to the penal clause of the act. The same point was decided in Fish v. Fisher, Ib. 89, which was the case of a slave running away from his master living in New Jersey, and pursued into New York, where he was sold: on the principle, that this might lead to the evasion of the act, which was designed to stop the importation of slaves into New York state.

*In the case of Tom a negro, the owner gave him a certificate in writing stating that from and after the decease of the owner, Tom was manumitted. After this, the owner sold and delivered the slave for a valuable consideration. Held, that notwithstanding this transfer, the negro became free at the death of his former owner, who gave him the certificate. 5 Johns. N. Y. Rép. 355. Same point settled afterward in Ketletas and Fleet. 7 Johns. N. Y. Rep. 324. In Hart v. Cleiss, 8 Johns. N. Y. Rep. 41. Where a slave is exported or attempted to be exported by a stranger, without the privity of the master, the slave does not become free, but the stranger is liable to the penalty of 250 dollars.

In Pennsylvania, by the acts of 1 March, 1780, and 29 March, 1788, all the negroes born within the state since the first of these acts, can only be held in servitude till the age of 28. Persons claiming slaves born before that act, were required to register them. Strangers, persons not inhabitants of Pennsylvania, nor meaning to become resident therein, passing through the state are protected in their rights to their attendant slaves for a period of six months. But all slaves imported into Pennsylvania by persons inhabitants of or resident within this state, or who shall come with an intention of residing in Pennsylvania, cannot claim the benefit of this clause, but their slaves on arriving here, become free. No negro or mulatto slave shall be removed, by force, or seduced out of the state, without his consent, under a penalty of two hundred dollars against the offender, with confinement to hard labour for 12 months. No husband, wife, parent or child, during the allowed term of servitude, shall be transferred, &c. so as to be separated more than ten miles.

On these acts, and the general doctrine of slavery the following decisions have taken place in Pennsylvania.

As villeinage never existed in Pennsylvania, no part of the doctrine founded on that condition is applicable here, 1 Dallas Rep. 167. Hence the common law doctrine that the child follows the condition of the father, and therefore that a bastard is always free, being founded upon the old English law respecting villeinage, is not applicable here. We follow the civil law rule, that partus sequitur ventrem. Chief Justice M'Kean noticed a species of slavery in England distinct from villeinage mentioned by Swinburne, 6th edit. 84. And this being the case of a slave born and purchased in Maryland, he supported the doctrine of the lex loci; agreeably to Smith v. Gould, 2 Salk. 666. in which there is much curious matter as to slaves, and villeins, but it does not support the chief justice's position as to the [ *480 ] lex loci: nor is the *report of the same case more in point in 2 Lord Ray. 1274, and it is not supported by Pearne v. Lisle, Ambler, 76, or Chamberlain v. Hervey, 1 Ld. Raym. 146. But I think the application of lex loci, was perfectly right in the Pennsylvania case. In Smith v. Gould, Lord Ray. 1274, it is said that if A. takes B. a Frenchman captive in war, he cannot maintain his action quare cepit B. captivum suum gallicum, which may bear upon the right of slavery as deduced from the rights attached to taking captives.

Property in a negro may be obtained by bonâ fide purchase without deed, see M'Kean, in the above case of Pirate al Belt v. Dalbey, 1 Dall. Rep. 169. A negro born before 1st March, 1780, and not recorded agreeably to the provisions of that act, is absolutely free. Respublica v. negro Betsey, 1 Dall. Rep. 469.

Where the jury make the price of a negro slave, the measure of damages in a writ of homine replegiando, if it be accepted by the master, it will in equity, and perhaps by operation of law also, emancipate the negro. Cowperthwaite v. Jones, 2 Dall. Rep. 57.

In Jack v. Eales, 3 Binney, 101, the court decided that an omission or mistake by the clerk, in the record of entry of a negro or mulatto, might be rectified according to the verdict of a jury on hearing evidence of the fact. This does not go quite so far as the case of the Commonwealth v. Blaine, wherein the entry follows the written return signed by the defendant herself; and which is under a different act of assembly. The owner ought not to be damnified by any mistake of a public officer, but in the latter case, the court decided she could not be damnified by her own, but might be allowed to set it right by testimony. The case is not yet reported, but I understand it was in substance, as follows, viz. The Commonwealth v. Sarah E. Blaine, in error determined at Chambersburgh, before Tighlman, Yeates, and Brackenridge, Sept. term, 1811.

Habeas corpus for a negro boy: defendant claimed him as her slave regularly registered under the act of assembly. It appeared that the slave was registered on the 26th June, 1807, and the affidavit accompanying the return was dated on the same day; but both in the registry and return, the slave was stated to be born on the 2nd of January, 1808, six months after the registry took place. It was contended on the part of the slave, that this registry was not within the letter or spirit of the act, which intended a record that should supercede the necessity of parol proof as to the period of the commencement of the servitude: it was meant as a protection to the slave from imposition. The time of birth of a negro child being in its nature a fact of no great notoriety, could *scarcely be expected to be ascertained by parol [ *481 ] at the distance of 28 years, when it would be impossible for the slave to find the witnesses, or know who they were if they still survived.—Hence, the necessity of recording the true period of time. The record in the present case, is untrue on the face of it; nor can it be good in part and bad in part: if the mistress can hold the slave under it, she can oblige him to serve until 28 years have elapsed from the period mentioned in the registry, which would be manifestly unjust—If the only operation of the act, is to oblige the master to make a registry of some sort no matter whether true or false, within six months after the birth, what was originally meant as a substantial benefit to the slave, may be turned into a matter of form and idle ceremony. The slave has a vested interest in his freedom, if every thing required be not complied with by the master. And farther, that agreeably to the spirit of the act, and the liberality of the times, a doubtful claim should be construed in favorem libertatis.

On the other hand it was argued, that the act in question did not change the nature of the property: that the slave was still the property of the owner; a chattel: and that everything done or to be done, respecting him, must be construed agreeably to the analogy of all laws relating to property: that a manifest ambiguity or mistake on the face of the instrument, might be explained and set right by testimony:

in the present case, no more was asked, than that an impossible date should be corrected by the real fact.

The court coinciding with this reasoning, remanded the slave into the custody of his mistress; and observed, that the registry was not conclusive on either party, but might at any time be rectified according to the true state of the facts, whether brought forward by the claimant or by the negro: and if the latter, after having served out his 28 years counting from the true time, could make out by parol or any other proof that might be in his power, that he was born at a period earlier than that mentioned in the registry, the court would discharge him. Judge Yeates said, the first decisions on the act of assembly went the length of liberating nearly all the slaves registered under it; but that the current of late decisions set entirely the other way, and that everything like strictness of form was dispensed with, to get at the merits.

The various acts of assembly of the state of Pennsylvania, respecting the class of servants called German redemptioners, (2 Smith's Pennsylvania laws, p. 329.) hardly fall under the subject now in discussion.

Since 1705 no American Indian could be made a slave in Virginia: but foreign Indians might. Dick v. Coleman, 1 Wash. 239.

Slaves are chattels, and assets for the payment of debts, where there is a deficiency of other personal estate. Walden v. Payne, 2 Wash. 7.

Slaves are real estate only in particular cases such as descents. Ib.

Nor is an executor bound by order of a county court directing a distributive division of a testator's estate, to deliver up the slaves without reserving a sufficiency to pay debts, or taking refunding bonds. Ib.

Where white persons, or native American Indians or their descendants in the maternal line, are claimed as slaves, the onus probandi lies on the claimant. Hudgins v. Wrights, 1 Hening and Munford, 134. Otherwise with respect to native Africans and their descendants.

No native American Indian could be made a slave in Virginia since 1691. Ib. and Pallas et al. v. Hill et al. 2 Hen. and Munf. 149.

A negro claiming freedom under the law of 1792, on the ground of having been brought into this state, it must appear that he was detained by compulsion and contrary to law, Henderson v. Allens, 1 Hen. and Mun. 235.

Slaves emancipated by a last will and testament, may be sold for a term of years to satisfy the debts of the testator, if there be not sufficient assets without: Patty, &c. v. Colin, &c. 1 Hen. and Mun. 519—531.

If a slave hired for a year, be sick or run away, the tenant must pay the hire; otherwise if the slave die without any fault on part of the tenant: in which case, the owner loses the hire from the time of the slave's death. George v. Elliot, 2 Hen. and Mun. 5.

*If an executor sells the slaves of a testator, without any [ *483 ] necessity for so doing induced by debts, and buy them himself, the slave may be set aside. Anderson and Starks v. Fox, 2 Hen. and Mun. 245.

A father possessed of ample fortune, having sent several slaves to his daughter, soon after her marriage, which slaves continued with her and her husband till the father's death, twenty eight months afterwards, they were held to be a gift in consideration of marriage, and the husband entitled to keep them against the creditors of the father. Hen. and Munf. ub. sup.

Evidence of a parol gift of slaves cannot be given, under the act of 1758, but such testimony may be received to prove a five year's possession, so as to bar a plaintiff's demand. Jordan v. Murray, 3 Call's Rep. 85.

2 Cranch, Adams qui tam v. Woods, 336 and the United States v. the schooner Sally, are cases under the act of Congress of March, 1794, abolishing the slave trade in 1808.

Scott v. the Negro London, 3 Cranch, 324. A slave brought into the state of Virginia, by an Act of 17 Dec. 1792, and kept there a year, shall be free, unless the owner within 60 days of his arrival in the state, shall make oath that he did not remove thither, or bring slaves there with intent of evading the laws of Virginia, as to the importation of slaves. A slave brought there, and detained for more than a twelve month, by a person claiming him, but who was not the true owner, shall not acquire his freedom by this means, to the injury of his true owner.

Spiers v. Willison, 4 Cranch, 398, and Ramsey v. Lee. Ib. 401. By act of Virginia, 1758, and by the law as it stood in 1784, no gift of a slave was valid, except made in writing and recorded.

Five years possession of a slave, will entitle the plaintiff in detinue to recover, but without prejudice to the titles of those who [ *484 ] were not *parties to the suit, Newby's admrs. v. Blakey. 3 Hen. and Mun. 57. And so in trespass, Brent v. Chapman, 5 Cranch, 358.

A person convicted under the negro act of South Carolina, of killing a negro, and committed for the forfeiture of 700l. currency, is not entitled either to prison bounds, or the insolvent debtor's Act. The State v. Gee, 1 Bay's Rep. 163.

By another act of South Carolina, if any slave shall suffer in life or limb, when no white person is present, the owner or other person who shall have the care of, or in whose possession or power such slave shall be, shall be deemed guilty of such offence, and proceeded against accordingly, without further proof, unless such owner or other person, do make the contrary appear by evidence, or exculpate himself by oath. Per Cur: this permission of exculpating by oath, is given by the act only to masters, overseers and others, having negroes under their care. They held it did not extend to the master of a vessel, who had taken up the negro on some pretext or other, and to prevent the negro's escaping, had thrown a lead line about his neck, by which he was strangled. Defendant was convicted of manslaughter and fined 50l. sterling. The State v. Welch, 1 Bay's Rep. 172.

A master permitting a negro wench to work for herself, or hire herself out, paying him certain stipulated wages, who by her industry and frugality saves as much money as enables her to purchase a negro girl in order to give her freedom, such negro girl shall be deemed free, and not the property of the master. The guardian of Sally a negro v. Beatty, 1 Bay's Rep. 261. The defendant's case was argued on the grounds of the civil law, by which as Blackstone alleges, even the price paid to the person becoming by contract for a certain price a slave for life, belongs to the master. 1 Bl. Com. 425. A doctrine however, which could not be supported on principle, even where slavery such as among the Romans was prevalent; for the slavery of the party depending on the consideration of the price given, the instant the master forcibly deprived the slave of the price, the slavery would cease. The condition in which the seller put himself, was that he might have the free use of the sum stipulated as the purchase money, and this being seized on by the master, the contract itself is put an end to.

A negro found by accident on leased premises is not liable to be distrained for rent. Bull v. Horlbeck, 1 Bay's Rep. 301.

A negro with two white men, though under their controul, is a person in law who may be deemed a rioter. The state v. Thackan and Mason. 1 Bay's Rep. 358.

In addition to the Pennsylvania cases, relating to negroes and slaves, *the reader is referred to 1 Smith's Edit. of the [ *485 ] laws of Pennsylvania, 497.

In 1798, or thereabout, Judge Rush, at Sunbury, determined in the case of the negro Tash, that the onus probandi of proving his freedom lay on the negro claimed as a slave. This would be good law in the southern states, but I doubt it in Pennsylvania, where the laws provide so sedulously for the emancipation of negroes.

Tit. 10. De testamentis ordinandis, p. 112.

I consider the right of conveying by devise, as a creature of positive law, to be permitted or modified in harmony with the institutions of the country, and according to the spirit and knowledge of the times. What right has a man over property when he is no more? or whence does he derive it? or how is he to enforce it? The earth, the air, the water, vegetables, and minerals, are manifestly placed here for common benefit. Man can but enjoy the usufruct of them while he lives: when he ceases to live, he can neither derive enjoyment from them, or exercise controul over them. He found them here, subservient to his convenience; and when dead, he must leave them to the convenience and controul of those who come after him.

All that a man can claim the right of devising, if he can claim any right at all, is the additional value he has bestowed upon natural objects, by the exertion of his skill and industry upon them; but even this he has no means of enforcing after death: and if he calls upon society to enforce the right, it must be on such terms as society thinks fit to impose. This subject is put in a strong light in Dr. Ogilvie's tract on the right to property in land : and the discourse of Bigot-Premeneu on Donations inter vivos, and the theory of the law of last wills, is well worth perusing. It contains also a good exposition of the reasons whereupon the French code has varied in some respects from the Roman, as in the rejection of Substitutions and Fidei Commissa. 2 Recueil, 361.

Society, however, has generally sanctioned the right of making last wills and testaments, 1st, From a wish to indulge the voice of nature which calls upon the dying to provide for the comforts of near and dear relations by the bequest of that property which can no longer contribute to their own enjoyment. 2ndly, To encourage industry ; by [ *486 ] *allowing the industrious to dispose by will of the fruits of their industry, and protecting that disposal, when made in conformity to the directions of law. These motives of permission, will leave great latitude as to the restrictions that may be thought necessary to fulfil the public views. Thus in a country like England, where institutions partake of the spirit of the feudal times, and where primogeniture calls for exclusive privileges, the law will be favourable to accumulations at the expence of the younger branches of a family : in such a government as ours, where no reason of this kind prevails, we might properly direct or restrict the general licence of testamentary dispositions, upon principles more agreeable to natural equity. Solon first permitted the Athenians to make a will ; from whom the Romans borrowed the law of the twelve tables, Pater familias, uti legassit super familia pecuniaque sua, ita jus esto. The modification of this rule by the Lex Falcidia, which permitted a testator to dispose arbitrarily but of three fourths or one half of his property, has been imitated, and properly as I think, by most of the civilized nations of Europe. Indeed when we consider the many capricious, not to say senseless and unjust dispositions of property that take place in countries where an unlimited right of devising is permitted—the neglect of children and relations for the sake of gratifying a selfish vanity, or a death-bed superstition—the culpable fondness of power that would extend for a century or two, or perpetuate if possible, the controul of a weak and dying man over property that he can no longer enjoy, as in the will of Mr. Thelusson—when we consider further, that those whom we bring into existence, have a right to call upon us to make that existence as comfortable as we are able, without unreasonably sacrificing our own comforts—we shall probably incline to think that some restrictions on the right of devising are neither inexpedient or unjust. Our German ancestors, refused the right altogether. Hæredes successoresque sui cuique liberi, et nullum testamentum, says Tacitus, De Mor. Germ. : and such was the law of Greece before Solon, and of Rome till the period of the twelve tables.

§ De etymologia, p. 112. Testamentum ex eo appellatur, &c. Besides this, several definitions are given of a last will: Ulpian defines et, mentis nostræ justa contestatio, in id solemniter facta, ut post mortem nostram valeat. The definition of Modestinus is not unlike that. Domat defines a testament, to be the appointment of an executor or testamentary heir, according to the formalities prescribed by law. Dom. L. 1. tit. 1. sect. 1. But this is merely describing the person who is to put the will into execution, rather than the will itself. Aulus Gellius, *and Laurentius Valla laugh at the definition of Jus- [ *487 ] tinian, and say that testamentum is no more derived from mens, than calceamentum, ornamentum, salsamentum, &c. See enough of all this in the marginal annotations to Swinburne on wills, p. 2. The only defect I see, is, that the definition given in the text, will apply to a codicil also. In a will, there must be an executor: there need not in a Codicil. Swinburne's book contains a laborious collection of references to civil law writers on this subject; and to use his own expression (pref.) "May in some sort be profitable to those Justinianists or young students of the civil law, who do intend to bestow the fruit of their study in the practice thereof."

All these ancient methods are enumerated by Ferriere in loco, but they are of no further importance at present, excepting to shew how long it was, before a little common sense took place of the absurd fictions on which the ancient customs were grounded.

Per æs et libram. Cujas is of opinion that this kind of last will was abrogated by Constantine, Cod. 6. 23. 15.

Attamen partim. In part only: because the same number of witnesses were still necessary. For though the civil law required but five witnesses, yet the balance holder and the purchaser made seven: and it was to supply the place of these, that the prætorian law added two witnesses to the number required by the civil law. Harris.

§ 3. De conjunctione juris civilis et prætorii. p. 113. That a will should be made at one sitting as it were, does not imply that acts of necessity might not intervene, as the giving of physic, &c. but, that there should be no intervention in the nature of business, as buying, selling, &c. 1. 28. Hence a will required,

1st. That it should be made without the intervention of other business, either by the testator or the witnesses, while it was drawing up.

2ndly. That it should be executed in the presence of seven witnesses specially convened for this purpose.

[ *488 ] *3rdly. That they should severally seal either the will itself, or the envelope.

4thly. That they and the testator should subscribe it.

5thly. That the name of the heir should be written either by the testator, or by some person at his request.

6thly. That the witnesses should be such as were capable of being heirs or legatees, (testamentio factio activa) but liable to the exceptions contained in the sixth section of this title. These witnesses if unimpeachable at the time of the will being made, were unimpeachable afterward, Dig. 28. 1. 22. Several witnesses might be taken from the same family, but not out of the family of the testator: though the heir might be a witness, and so might a father to the will of his emancipated son, Dig. 28. 1. 20. or to the will of his son, respecting his peculium castrense. Dig. 29. 1. 23. 11. Legatees also might be witnesses, Dig. 28. 1. 20. though these provisions seem contrary to the rule, that no one shall be a witness in his own cause. Dig. 22. 5. 20. § 5. De annulis quibus testamentum signatur. p. 114. An inconvenient dissonance takes place in the United States, as to the necessity of actually sealing an instrument supposed to be sealed. In Pennsylvania and Virginia, a scroll with a pen, and the word seal, or the letters L. S. written therein, is held equivalent to actual sealing. It is not so in New York state. See the subject discussed in Warren v. Lynch, 5 John's N. Y. Rep. 239. This was the case of a note drawn in Virginia, but made payable in New York, and therefore the Lex Loci of New-York guided the decision according to the principle of Robinson v. Bland, 2 Burr. 1077. Ludlow et al. v. Van Rensselaer. 1 Johns. N. Y. Rep. 94 and Thompson v. Ketcham, 4 Johns. N. Y. Rep. 285.

[At common law, a seal is an impression upon wax or wafer, or some other tenacious substance, capable of being impressed. In Vermont, an impression of an official seal, made upon paper alone, is sufficient. (Revised Statutes of Vermont, 1839, p. 53.) In New York, it has been enacted, that in all cases where a seal of any Court, or of any public officer, shall be authorized or required by law, the same may be affixed by making an impression directly on the paper, which shall be as valid as if made on a wafer or on wax; but that private seals shall be made as heretofore, on wafer, wax, or some similar substance. (2 R. S. 404, sec. 61, 62. 3 Hill. 493. This statute, however has been held not to apply to the seals of courts or public officers of another state. 2 Hill. 227. 1 Denio, 376. In New Hampshire, it has been held, that a distinct impression of the seal upon paper, is sufficient without wax or wafer. (Carter v. Burley, 9 N. H. Rep. 558.) In Maryland, a scroll has been considered a seal from the earliest period of its judicial history. In Virginia and Alabama, there must be evidence of an intention to substitute the scroll for a seal. But in Alabama, the scroll is now unnecessary, provided the deed or contract imports on its face, to be made under seal. In New Jersey, in instruments for the payment of money, but not in other cases, a scroll will supply the place of a seal. In Delaware, Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Tennessee, there are statutes authorizing the substitution of a scroll for a seal; but in Mississippi, deeds and conveyances of lands are required to be by writing, signed, sealed and delivered. See 4 Kent's Commentaries, 452. Many obligors may adopt one seal or one scroll; and the question whether the instrument is a sealed or an unsealed instrument, is one of intention, and the onus lies on the plaintiff to prove that the party adopted the seal or scroll. Hollis v. Pond, 7 Humphrey's (Tennessee) Rep. 222.]

§ 6. Qui testes esse possunt, p. 114. Testamenti factio, is either factio activa, which is the right of making a will: or factio passiva, the right of taking by will: the latter is the meaning here as I think, on comparing this section with Tit. 19 sec. 4. p. 151, 152. Harris *translates the passage, "who are themselves legally capable of taking by testament." [ *489 ]

Sed neque mulier.] Women may be admitted witnesses, by the civil law in all matters, whether civil or criminal, when the nature of the case is such, that other evidence cannot be obtained; but, when the choice of witnesses is altogether voluntary, as in making testaments, and doing many other acts, the civil law will not receive the testimony of a woman. Domat. lib. 3. t. 1. The Romans had also another reason for rejecting women as witnesses to wills; namely, because women were never suffered to be present at public assemblies, where all wills and testaments were formerly made. But to use the words of Swinburne; "whatsoever diverse do write, that a woman is not without all exception, because of the inconstancy and frailty of the feminine sex, "whereby they may the sooner be corrupted; yet I take it, that their "testimony is so good, that a testament may be proved by two women "alone, being otherwise without exception. Swin. of Testaments, "part IV. sect. 24." And, by the laws of England in general, women may be witnesses, sureties, guardians, &c. in all cases, as well as men. Harris.

§ 8. De pluribus testibus ex eadem domo, p. 115. This does not mean, of the family of the testator, otherwise it would be contrary to the spirit of Dig. 22. 5. 6. Idonei non videntur esse testes quibus imperare potest ut testes fiant: to which agrees the following. § 9. De his qui sunt in familia testatoris.

§ 11. De legatariis et fidei commissariis, p. 116. see the note to § 4. above.

Legatariis autem.] Although it was a general rule in the Roman law, that no one should be permitted to bear testimony in his own cause, Cod. 4. t. 20. l. 10. yet legataries were allowed to give evidence upon this distinction; that they were particular, and not universal successors; and that a testament would be valid without legataries. The difficulty also, which must frequently have occurred, in obtaining so great a number of witnesses, as seven, might probably induce the Romans to be less strict, as to the persons, whom they admitted upon this occasion. Qui testamento hæres instituitur, says ULPIAN, in [ *490 ] *eodem *testamento testis esse non potest: quod in legatario, et in eo, qui tutor scriptus est, contra habetur. Hi enim testes possunt adhiberi, si aliud eos nihil impedit* ff. 28. t. 1. l. 20. But by the practice of the ecclesiastical courts of this kingdom, which have the sole cognisance of the validity of all wills, as far as they relate to personal estate, no legatee, who is a subscribed witness to the will, by which he is benefitted, can be admitted to give his testimony in foro contradictorio, as to the validity of that will, 'till either the value of his legacy hath been paid to him, or he hath renounced it; and, in case of payment, the executor of the supposed will, must release all title to any future claim upon such supposed legatee, who might otherwise be obliged to refund, if the will should be set aside; and a release in this case is always made, to the intent, that the legatee may have no shadow of interest at the time of making his deposition. Swinb. 397. The same practice also prevailed at common law in regard to witnesses, who were benefitted under wills, disposing of real estate. And, if a legatee, who was a witness to a will, had refused either to renounce his legacy, or to be paid a sum of money in lieu of it he could not have been compelled by law to divest himself of his interest; and, whilst his interest continued, his testimony was useless: and this was determined in the case of Ansley vers. Dowsing in easter term, 19 Geo. 2. Str. Rep. 1254.

But this very singular case, and the unanimous opinions of the judges upon the meaning and intent of the statute of the 29th of Charles the second, called the statute of frauds, gave rise to the following act of parliament, made in the 25th year of Geo. the second: by which it is enacted; "that if any person shall attest the execution of any will or "codicil, which shall be made after the 24th of June, 1752, to whom "any beneficial devise, legacy, estate, interest, gift, or appointment, of "or affecting any real or personal estate (charges on lands, tenements, "or hereditaments for payment of debts excepted) shall be thereby given, &c. the devise shall, so far only as concerns such person, or any "claiming under him, be void, and he shall be admitted a witness to "the execution of such will." 25 Geo. 2d. Harris. See Twaites v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 10. 1 Lord Ray. 85. where it is said that by the spiritual law the son of a legatee is not a competent witness, but by the common law he is.

See further on witnesses to a bill by the law of England, Swinburne, 343, whose notes embrace also the spiritual and the civil law doctrine on this subject.

In Pennsylvania, we require but two witnesses to a will. Act of 1705. *See the exposition of this, in Hight v. Wilson, 1 Dall. Rep. 94, and Lewis v. Maris, Ib. 278, and the notes of Mr. Smith, 1 Smith's Penn. laws. 38.

§ 14. De testamento nuncupativo, p. 117. By the civil law, the witnesses (in number seven, Cod. 6. 23. 21. 2.) were required within a reasonable time after the death of the nuncupatory testator, to go before a magistrate, and giving an account of what took place, to have a formal statement drawn out and signed. L. ult. si vero Cod. de test.

On the English law of nuncupative wills, see 29. Ch. 2. Ch. 3. Swind. 355. [By the Statute 1 Victoria, ch. 26, it is declared that every will of real or personal estate must be in writing, and signed by the testator, or by some other person in his presence and by his direction, in the presence of two witnesses at one time; though soldiers and mariners in actual service may dispose of personal estate as before: and such signature must be made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of the witnesses, and the witnesses are to attest and subscribe the will in the presence of the testator, but no form of attestation is necessary, and every will thus executed is declared to be valid without any other publication thereof. This statute put an end to nuncupative wills, in England, with the reservation only of the two excepted cases, and before this statute the doctrine of the English courts was, that the evidence to prove a nuncupative will must be strict and stringent; that the requisitions of the statute, 29 Ch. 2 ch. must be strictly complied with in every single particular, and especially as to the rogatio testium. The deceased himself was required by the statute to bid the persons present bear witness. Bennett v. Jackson 1 Philimore 190. Lemann v. Bonsall, 1 Ad-dams' Rep. 389. Some of the American cases seem to have indulged in a considerable relaxation of this just and necessary requisition of the statute. Mason v. Dunman, 1 Munford, 456. Parsons v. Parsons, 2 Greenleaf, 298.] For the laws of Pennsylvania relating to wills generally, and to nuncupative wills, see 1 Smith's edition of the Pennsylvania laws, p. 33—43, where the chief cases decided in this state, will be found in the notes.

The cases under the head of last wills in the American Reporters of other states, are too numerous to be digested here.

Tit. 11. De militari testamento, p. 118. The privilege given to a soldier was merely as to the formal part of his will. If meaning to make a will in the common form though in actual service, but leaving it incomplete, his privilege extended to making it valid, so far as the rules of military testaments applied. Dig. 29. 1. 3 and 38. Hence also he might die, partly testate. L. 6 eodem. or make a relegated person his heir, L. 13. § 2 Dig. eod. or make a conditionual heir, L. 17 and 41. All that was necessary seemed to be, that the real will of the testator should sufficiently appear. But by virtue of this privilege, the soldier could not bequeath his peculium adventitium, and still less his peculium profectitium; nor could he enfranchise his slaves to the injury of his creditors, against the law Ælia Sentia. Dig. de milit. test. L. 15, 28, and 41.

This military privilege was confined by Justinian to the time of actual warfare in camp or in a besieged place. It did not take place in winter quarters, or in a garrison town. Lex penul. Cod. hoc tit. Testaments of this nature held good for a year after dismissal, Dig. 29. 1. 21 and 26. The dismissals were, missio causaria on account of inability: from infirmity: missio honesta, when the term of service was expired, emeritus. Missio ignominiosa, for some disreputable cause. They had also of course, the missio temporaria commeatus, or furlow, but I find no provision made for this.

The Testamentum in procinctu was introduced by Julius Cæsar, and allowed for a limited time. Trajan made it perpetual, Cicero [ *492 ] mentions *the testamentum in procinctu, De nat. De or. II. 3. De orat. I. 53.

Tit. 12. Quibus non est permissum, p. 121. and § 1. De impubere et furioso, p. 123. As I have before observed, the making of a will, is in fact the making of a law to regulate after death the property acquired during life time. This is not a natural right, for no dead man can have any rights. The human race are by nature usufructuaries only. It is society alone, that creates and protects the right of making a will. This right by a law of the 12 tables was exclusively given to fathers of families. Cic. ad Herem. L. 1. Under the term pater familias, for this purpose, were included women not in the power of any person. Dig. 50. 16. 1.

The privilege as before remarked was extended to the military and quasi-military property of persons in the army, and in certain public employments. In other cases, even the consent of the father was insufficient; for the right was grantable, not by private persons, but by the public will. Dig. 19. 6. 25-1. But the donations mortis causa were as much of the nature of contracts as legacies, and to these, the assent of the pater familias could give validity. Dig. 2. 14. 18. Dig. 44. 7. 39. A will made on the last day of the 14th year was good; quia favore supremarum voluntatum, dies inceptus habetur pro completo. Vestals also impuberes, might make a will. Hence probably the permission given to the christian vestals or nuns, and other females under *vows of celibacy, Aul. Gell. noct. atticæ. 1 ch. 12, [ *493 ] Sozom. Hist. eccles. L. 1 c. 9. but Leo the philosopher repealed this permission, Nov. 26.

As to insane persons, see Dig. 27. 10. juncta glossa. L. 9. Cod. hoc. tit. Valer. Max. L. 7. ch. 8. Dig. 28. 3. 6. 5. et seq. our law is as here laid down. Swinburne, 79. 7 Bac. Ab. 301.

[Upon the question as to the degree of mental capacity necessary to make a will, the following cases may be referred to: Bennett's case, cited in 9 Vesey, 185; Shelford on Lunacy, 179: Ingram v. Wyatt, 1 Haggard's Ecclesiastical Rep. 384; Van Alst v. Hunter, 5 Johns. Ch. Rep. 148; 1 Haggard's Ecclesiastical Rep. 227. The provisions of the will itself are always examined with reference to the testamentary capacity. If these are all rational and consistent with each other, that capacity will be the more readily presumed.

Mere imbecility of mind, however great, will not avoid a will or deed, provided the party be not an idiot or a lunatic. Stewart's Executor v. Lisenard, 26 Wendell's Rep. 258. Blanchard v. Nestle, 3 Denio, 37. But although the mental weakness may be insufficient of itself to incapacitate, yet it lays a foundation for the admission of proof of fraud, management, and undue influence; and evidence of that character taken in connection with mental weakness, may be sufficient to invalidate an act, though the same evidence might be deemed insufficient in the case of a sound mind. Odell v. Buck, 21 Wendell's Rep. 142. Jackson v. King, 4 Cowen's Rep. 207.]

Non possunt impuberes.] The rules of civil law take place in England, in regard both to the capacity and incapacity of minors to make wills as far as those wills relate only to personal estate: so that, if a boy, not arrived at the age of fourteen, or a girl, not arrived at the age of twelve, makes a will of personal estate, it will not be good; although such boy or girl, was doli capax at the time of making the will, and capable of discerning right from wrong: neither will a testament, made by a male infant under fourteen, or a female under twelve, become good, without a republication, although such infant should afterwards arrive at the proper age. But it hath been allowed in the case of Hide and Hide, that a male infant of 14, and a female of 12, might make a will of personal estate; and it was said to have been so agreed by lord keeper Wright, in the case of Sharpe and Sharpe, in which the court followed the civil law of Justinian, which permits minors to consent to marriage at such their respective ages. Gilbert's Repts. page 74.—Swinb. fol. 74. But, in regard to a will of real estate, it was enacted in the reign of Hen. 8. "that wills or testaments made of any manors, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, by any woman covert, or person within the age of "one and twenty years, idiot, or insane, shall not be good or effectual "in law." 34 H. 8. cap. 5. sect. 14.

And it hath been adjudged, that, if a minor under twenty-one makes his will, and devises his lands, and afterwards attains the full age of twenty-one years, but dies without making any new publication of his will, the will is void. 1 Sid. 162. And. 182. Dyer, 143. Raym. 84.

Furiosi autem. "Mad folks and lunatics, during the time of their insanity, cannot make a testament, nor dispose of any thing by will, not even to pious uses. The reason is, because they know not what they do; for, in making a will, integrity and perfectness of mind, and not health of body is required: and thereupon arose that common clause used in every testament; sick in body, but of perfect mind and memory. It was therefore determined by the judges, in Combe's case in the Star-Chamber, (Moór, 759.) that sane memory for making a will is not at all times, when the party can speak yea or no, or hath life in him, nor when he can answer to any thing with sense; but he ought to have judgment to discern, and to be of *perfect [ *494 ] memory, otherwise the will is void. And so strong is this impediment of insanity, that, if the testator makes his testament after the furor hath overtaken him, and whilst it as yet possesses his mind, albeit the furor afterwards departs, and the testator recovers his former understanding, yet doth not the testament, made during his former fit, recover any force or strength thereby. Howbeit if these mad or lunatic persons have clear and calm intermissions, then during the time of such their freedom of mind, they may make their testaments; so that neither the furor going before, nor following the making of the testament, doth hinder the same begun and finished in the mean time." Swinburne of test. part 2. sect. 3. Cod. 6. t. 22. l. 9. Harris.

See further on this subject, Swinburne on wills, 74. et seq. and Co. Litt. 89. b. with Hargreave's note 6 therein, as to the dissonance of opinion at what time an infant may make a will. It seems now to be settled that this is 14 in males and 12 in females for personal estate. Ex-parte Holyland, 12 Vez. junr. 11. Judge Wilson's Bacon's Ab. v. 7. p. 300.

The stat. 32 and 34 Hen. 8. on this subject are not adopted by the judges of the supreme court of Pennsylvania in their Report. See 3 Binney's Rep. append. But I apprehend the law of Pennsylvania nevertheless is, that a minor cannot make a will of lands; for such was the law at the time of our act of assembly concerning wills, 1705, and no alteration has been since made in this respect. The wills therein spoken of, must be taken as meaning such wills as could then be legally made.

[The general rule, in England and in the United States, is, that all persons of sound mind are competent to devise real estate, with the exception of infants and married women. A married woman is considered to be incapable of making a valid will of lands, even with the consent of her husband, and without any statute prohibition to that effect. Osgood v. Breed, 12 Mass. Rep. 225. Marston v. Norton, 5 N. H. Rep. 205. West v. West, 10 Serg. & Rawle, 445. But in Louisiana, the wife may make a will without the authority of her husband. And by statute, in New York, Connecticut and Illinois, married women may dispose of their estates, real and personal, by will, in the same manner as other persons. And where a feme covert is incompetent to devise real estate, she may, by deed of settlement made prior to her marriage, and vesting her estate in trustees, be clothed with a testamentary disposition of her lands; and a court of chancery will enforce such a power made during coverture, under the name of an appointment or declaration of trust. She may, if not under twenty-one years of age, devise by way of execution of a power. But the will that she makes, in such a case, must be executed with the same solemnities, as if she had executed the deed while sole.

Testaments of chattels might, at common law, be made by infants of the age of fourteen, if males, and twelve, if females. This was the rule in England until the statute of Victoria, and the testamentary power of infants is now abolished there. The laws of the several States are not uniform on this point. In Virginia, no person under eighteen years of age can make a will of chattels; and in New York, the age to make a will of personal estate is raised up to eighteen in males and sixteen in females. At common law, a married woman cannot make a testament of chattels, any more than of lands, except under a power, or marriage contract, or by her husband's license.]

But when the emperors Diocletian and Maximinian ordained that a testator should see and be seen by his witnesses, this permission was virtually repealed. 9. 12 Cod. de testament, Justinian regranting this privilege.

In England the testator and the witnesses to a written will, must be within sight of each other at the time of executing and witnessing the will; Longford v. Eyre, 1 P. Wms. 740. Gryle v. Gryle, 2 Atk. 176. Casson v. Dade, 1 Br. ch. ex. 99. but a blind man may make a nuncupative will, or may acknowledge a written will in presence of witnesses. Swinb. 96.

Tit. 13. De exheredatione liberorum, p. 124. Under the civil law, the appointment of an heir, is an essential part of a will. If the son, under power of the father, be passed over and not named, the will is void. He must be simply and unconditionally disinherited. Dig. 28. 3. 12. 17. joining Ulpian, tit. 33. § 6. But the will would not be invalid by the preterition of daughters, or grand-children, Dig. 28. 3. 8. 1.; but they had their portion though omitted to be named. Thus, if heirs were instituted from among the children of the testator, the daughter, and grand-children would have equal parts with each of the heirs: as if there were three heirs, each heir would have three ounces, and the omitted daughter or grand-son three ounces, the estate being divided into twelve. If the heirs were three strangers, they would have six ounces, and the omitted daughter or grand-son six. Nam scriptis heredibus, accrescebant suis in virilem (a man's share) extraneis vero in semissem. Justinian took away these distinctions, and nullified the will if any of the offspring of the testator, and in his power, were omitted. For the causes of disinherison see Nov. 115. which also requires, that it shall be express and by name, and cum elogio, or stating some one of the 14 allowed causes, in all cases of legitimate children born.

In England, the law is not so. A testator may disinherit his own children, by express words, or by omission. But the practice of leaving a shilling to a child intended to be disinherited, seems to have originated in the above doctrine of the civil law. Swinburne, part 5. § 1. But semble that as a general doctrine, an heir cannot be disinherited by implication: yet in Trent v. Hanning, three judges, dissentiente Lawrence, went very near if not quite that length; 7 East. 106. see Piggot v. Penrice, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 138. Johnson v. Haines, 4 Dall. Rep. 64. Cresoe v. Laidley, 2 Binney, 279. In England, the heir is a favourite upon feudal principles, and as connected with the institution of primogeniture, which does not operate in this country; but the general rule above laid down is in unison with the dictates of natural justice.

*§ 1. De posthumis, p. 125. A posthumous child not [ *496 ] named might have set the will aside: but it was not void if the offspring was born dead. Dig. 37. 6. ult. Posthumous children were so called when born after executing the will, as appears by the 1st Chap. of the Lex Vellea. Gaires 6. lib. 2. Inst. tit. de exhæred. lib. 2. § 2.

Children born after the death of the parent and within ten months were accounted his. As to the English law on this subject, see Hargreaves' Co. Litt. 86 and 123. b. with the notes.

By the present French code, the subsequent birth of a legitimate child revokes a will.

Agnatione posthumi.] The rights of posthumous children seem to be regulated by the rights of those who are born in the life-time of their parents. Thus the civil law permits the birth of a posthumous child to annul a testament; because it is by that law in the power of any child, who hath been omitted in his father's testament, or disinherited nominally without cause, to set that testament aside; and where preterition is a sufficient reason to destroy a will, at the instance of a child born in the life-time of his father, it would be extremely hard not to allow this reason at least an equal force, in regard to a posthumous child. But by the law of England the birth of a posthumous child does not affect the testament of the father in any degree; which is in appearance a very rigid doctrine: but with us the testament of the parent cannot be annulled on account of the preterition, or causeless disinherison of a child, born in his life-time; for the law permits every man to dispose of his fortune, as he pleases: and therefore, if a posthumous child was allowed to annul a will, it must follow, that such child would have a greater right than if he had been born in his father's life-time; namely, the right of annulling his father's will on account of preterition. And, if the law was to pursue a middle way, and admit a posthumous child to take a share of the deceased's estate without annulling the whole testament, this would be in effect to make a new will for the deceased, and to remedy a less evil by the introduction of a greater, in countenancing a practice so very dangerous, and contrary to that established rule of law, which gives every man an uncontrouled power in the disposition of his own fortune. What has been here said is intended only in regard to wills of personal estate; for, in respect to the wills of real estate, there are, besides the statute of frauds, many other reasons, which might be urged to evince, that the birth of a posthumous child cannot be allowed to operate as a revocation. Harris.

[ *497 ] *The English law seems now settled that marriage alone does not, but that marriage and birth of a child, even a posthumous child, does amount to a revocation of a prior will. The reader will find all the older cases cited in some or other of the following more modern ones, which may slightly assist those who may have occasion to trace the history of this question in England. The civil law doctrine is discussed in Lord Kenyon's argument in Lancashire v. Lancashire, 5 Term Rep. 59. His Lordship highly approves of the rejection of the civil law regulations respecting the Testamentum inofficiosum, wherein this seems the latest and leading case, in which the authorities are fully discussed.

I confess I can hardly coincide; but in conformity to prior decisions, he adopts their rule of revocation on marriage and the birth even of a posthumous child.

The decisions proceed on the principle, that as wills are ambulatory till the death of the testator, Lord Beauclerk v. Dr. Mead, 2 At. 167. any intermediate act, or any change of circumstances, inconsistent with the will, amounts to an implied revocation. Gilbert on devises, 93. Christopher v. Christopher, 2 Dickens, Ch. Rep. 447. But an implied revocation may be rebutted by evidence of circumstances that imply otherwise: and where the subsequent change of situation of the testator is not inconsistent with the provisions of the will, there may be a revocation in part only. Kennebel v. Scrafton, 2 East, 530. 5 Vez. 663, Expte Ilchester, 7 Vez. 348. Whether the birth of more children after the execution of the will, and the testator's second marriage after that, amount to a revocation, see Gibbons v. Gaunt, 4 Vez. 840.

[The English law, as it stood prior to the statute of 7 William IV. and 1 Vict. ch. 26, (referred to below) was declared in Marston v. Roe, 8 Adolph. and Ellis, 14, the Exchequer Chamber, to be, that if an unmarried man without any child by a former wife, devised his estate, and left no provision for any child by a future marriage, notwithstanding he might have made provision therein for a future wife, the law annexed a tacit condition to such a will, that if he afterwards married, and had a child, the will should be revoked, and evidence was not admissible to rebut that presumption, or destroy that condition. And by the statute of 1 Victoria, ch. 26, it is declared, that all wills made by a man or woman are revoked by marriage, except when made in exercise of a power, where the property appointed would not, in default of such appointment, pass to the heir, executor, or next of kin. No will is to be revoked by presumption of an intention from alteration of circumstances. No will is to be revoked otherwise than by another will or codicil, or by writing executed like a will, or by destruction with intention to revoke; and no alteration made after execution to have any effect unless executed as a will. No will in any manner revoked to be revived otherwise than by re-execution, or a codicil to revive it; and if a part has been revoked, and afterwards the whole, such part shall not be revived by a revival of the whole, unless an intention to revive that part be shown. No conveyance made or act done subsequently to the execution of a will, except it amount to a revocation, shall prevent the operation of the will with respect to such estate as the testator has power to dispose of at the time of his death. And a will shall be construed to speak and take effect from the death of the testator. Thus, where a devise was of a remainder to the sons of A., who had three sons when the will was made, and five at the testator's death, it was held that the devise was to the five sons. See King v. Bennet, 4 Meeson and Welsby, 35.]

The law of Pennsylvania has as I think been very judiciously altered by the acts of 23 March 1764 and 19 Ap. 1794; which [ *498 ] enact that a *testator having made his will, and afterwards married, and then dying and leaving a widow, or a child born subsequent to the will, it shall amount to a revocation as to them; and they shall be in the same situation as if he had made no will. On these acts the following decision has taken place.

In Coates v. Hughes, 3 Binney, 498, it was determined that a subsequent marriage and birth of a posthumous child do not amount by the law of Pennsylvania to a total revocation of a will even where the subsequent issue is the testator's only child. They amount to a revocation pro tanto, namely, so far as regards the widow and the child, but not as to the appointment of executors, nor as to a power to sell for the payment of debts. The reader will find most of the learning of the books collected briefly in this case; which turned upon the expressions of the acts of assembly on this subject.

In 1 Washington's Virg. Rep. 140. Wilcox v. Rootes, et. al. it is taken for granted by the court, that a subsequent marriage and birth of a child is an implied revocation of a former will. This was in 1792; but in 1802 came on the case of Yerby v. Yerby, 3 Call's Virg. Rep. which was this:

A man married and had six children: he made a will in 1785. His wife dying, he married again in 1790, and had two children, to wit, the present plaintiffs, by his second wife.

It appeared in evidence, that previous to his second marriage he had promised that the children he might have by his last wife, should be as well provided for, as those he had by his first wife. It appeared further in evidence, that during his last illness, it was proposed to him to alter his will and provide for the present plaintiffs : but he refused, saying he wished some alterations to be made, and when he got well he would have them made. He appeared much distressed, and wished to evade the conversation.

This case was argued against an implied revocation on the following grounds.

1stly, The Virginia act of assembly provides only for posthumous children pretermitted : the court cannot go farther : they cannot by extension make a new law.

2dly, This is not the case of a testamentary disposition in favour of strangers, which is required to be revoked, but of children, who had at least as strong a claim as the plaintiffs.

3dly, Implied revocations may be rebutted, by expressions in the will, or by circumstances, 1 Lord Ray. 441. Doug. 31. and a reference to a will as a subsisting one, rebuts the presumption of revocation. *Doug. 31. An expression of an intention to revoke a [ *499 ] will hereafter, does not operate as a revocation. Pow. Dev. 534, much less an expression of a mere intention to alter it. The court unanimously confirmed the will ; and I think the law was with them ; but is it possible to read such a case as this, without regretting the want of the civil law principle de inofficioso testamento ? The unfeeling exclusions, imperiously demanded by the institution of primogeniture, are sufficiently odious, but they fall far short of such a case as this, under the republican laws of Virginia.

By an act of Massachusetts, 1700, and Feb. 6. 1784, a child not mentioned in the will of his parent, shall be entitled to such distributive share as he would have had by law, had the parent died intestate : but in Terry v. Foster, Mass. Rep. 146, and in Church v. Crocker, 3 Mass. Rep. 17. the court held it sufficient to bar the claim of a child to a distributive share, if noticed by name in the will, though a small legacy or even no legacy, were bequeathed to such child.

The other points appertaining to the law of revocations, are not sufficiently connected with the subject of this section to be dwelt on.

§ 2. De quasi posthumis, p. 126. If a grandfather passed over his grandson being his proper heir at the time of making the testament, it might be done designedly to exclude him from the possession, and the will might nevertheless be valid. But if the grandson was not the proper heir at the time, the father being alive, the grandfather was not presumed to have passed him by, with intent of disinherison, but that the father would regularly succeed in the first place. In this case therefore the will might be broken. Dig. 28. 3. 15. Cujus comment. ad Dig. 28. 2. Now by Nov. 115 and l. 3. Cod. de post. hæred. inst. the passing over any children of the testator is fatal to the will, except only that posthumous children not named must be born alive for that purpose. See on the subject of this section l. 3 Cod. de. post. hæred. inst. Dig. 37. 4. 8. 4. As to the law Velleia, see Dig. 28. 2. 29.

Ulp. tit. 24. § 14 and tit. 25. § 6. Juncto Paulo l. 2. sentent. 6. § 1. But by l. 15 and 24. Cod. de test. this precision was rendered unnecessary, and if by apt and intelligible words, a heir was named in any part of the will, it sufficed. It was necessary that the will should comprehend the whole of the testator's property, for he could not die intestate for one part, and testate as to another. If the heir was nominated of the first degree, he was instituted, if one more remote, he was substituted.

§ 5. De divisione hæreditatis, p. 132. Hæres ex asse, a whole and sole heir. As, among the Romans was an unit.

Ex parte testatus, et ex parte intestatus. In England, this is otherwise. If a testator disposes of only half his estate, he will be deemed intestate as to the rest, which will go according to the statute of distributions.

§ 8. Si plures uncie quam duodecim, &c. p. 134. Suppose THREE heirs: to the first is left four ounces; to the second three ounces; to the third, two ounces. Then three ounces will remain undisposed of. These are to be divided into nine parts; of which the first heir will be entitled to four, the second to three, the third to two.

Again suppose THREE heirs: to the first is left eight ounces, to the second six ounces, to the third four ounces, in all eighteen ounces. Each heir must suffer a deduction in proportion to his share. Thus: if 18—12—8? Answer,  $5\frac{1}{3}$  If 18—12—6? Answer, 4. If 18—12—4? Answer,  $2\frac{2}{3}$  That is, the first devisee will be entitled to  $5\frac{1}{3}$  ounces, the second, to 4 ounces, and the third to  $2\frac{2}{3}$  ounces, or twelfth parts of the estate devised.

If nine ounces be left specifically indifferent proportions among three heirs, and three ounces are left generally to [ *501 ] three others, the last will share in equal portions.

Suppose a testator to institute six heirs, bequeathing to three of them portions amounting to a whole as: six ounces for instance to one, four to another, and two to a third, and the other three are named heirs simply without any specific assignment of portion. In this case, the estate will be divided into two asses, of which the three specific devisees will take one in their respective proportions, and the three others another as in equal proportions.

But if the first three had specifically assigned to them eighteen ounces, then the DUPONDIIUM or double as would again take place; and the estate being divided into two asses or 24 ounces, the three heirs nominated simply, without assignment of shares, would divide between them in equal portions six asses. § 9. De modis instituendi, p. 135. None but a military man could by the Roman law, be partly testate, and partly intestate. Dig. 50. 17. 7 and 29. 1. 41. But where the condition annexed is in itself uncertain, the event must be waited for; and if the condition should not take place the will is void. If it do take place, then the heir is considered as in from the death of the testator, quia dies incertus retrahitur ad initium. Dig. 28. 6. 33.

In England, an executor, who may be considered as quasi hæres may be appointed from a certain time, or until a certain time, and the next of kin may be appointed administrator as to the vacant term. Swinburne, 310.

§ 10. De conditione impossibili, p. 135. Impossible conditions are regarded as not seriously meant by the parties Dig. 44. 7. 31. Possible conditions may be casual, or potestative, or mixt. Thus, I appoint Titius my heir, if my ship arrives from Asia. This is a casual condition. With this condition, a stranger may, but a proper or domestic heir, cannot be appointed heir. Dig. 28. 5. 4 and 86. 1. 4. Cod. inst. et subs. A mixt condition is partly casual, and partly potestative, as provided he shall go to the capitol, as soon as Mævius becomes Consul. Mævius never may become Consul. In this case, a stranger may, but a proper heir cannot be instituted. If an heir be appointed, provided that immediately after my decease, he shall go up to the capitol, this is potestative and valid, because the nominee may at his own pleasure put an end to the condition.

Impossibilis conditio.] "Although impossible conditions, whether they are so by nature or by law, do not hinder the effect of the disposition, being reputed as if they were not written or uttered; [ *502 ] "yet, *if a testator supposes a condition to be possible, "which is in reality impossible or illegal, then such condition "is not void, but will render the disposition void, to which it is added: "as for instance; if the testator makes Titius his executor, or gives him "an hundred pounds, if he marries his, the testator's daughter; supposing her to be living, when she is dead: in this case, the condition is "impossible; and yet Titius cannot become executor, or obtain the legacy; because it is not probable, that the testator would have made "him executor, or given him an hundred pounds, if he had known, or "believed his daughter to have been dead." Swinb. part 4. sect. 6.

§ 11. De pluribus conditionibus, p. 135. See Dig. 35. 1. 6. as to joint conditions.

In alternativis, sufficit alterum adimpleri.

Tit. XV. § 1. De numero hæredum, p. 136. Thus: let Primus and Secundus be my heirs. If default should take place in case of Primus, let Tertius be my heir in his room. Or if Primus and Secundus refuse, let Tertius, or Tertius and Quartus, become my heirs.

Plures in unius locum.] This kind of substitution, which is called ordinary or vulgar, is of no small use in England, and we do therein, for the most part, follow the precepts and rules of the civil law: for it is nothing else but the adding a condition, which we commonly call tail in the case of lands; namely, a limitation of heirs, to whom a testator intends, that his lands should descend. Strahan on Domat. vol. 2. p. 221. Cowel's inst. tit 15. Harris.

Substitutions are rejected by the code Napoleon. Art. 896.

§ 2. Quam partem singuli, &c. p. 136. Suppose Primus, Secundus, and Tertius, are heirs and reciprocally substituted each for the other: Primus, having assigned to him one ounce, Secundus eight ounces, and Tertius three ounces. If Primus resigns, his ounce must be divided into eleven parts, of which Secundus takes eight, and Tertius three parts. Ferriere.

Ita Divus Pius. Cod. 6. 26. 1. Dig. 28. 6. 24.

§ 3. Si cohæredi substituto, p. 137. If Primus and Secundus, are appointed heirs, and Secundus substituted to Primus, and Tertius to

Secundus, then if Primus, and Secundus, both die, Tertius is considered as entitled to the heirship of Primus, as well as of Secundus, and the share of Primus, does not escheat to the treasury.

If Secundus should die, and Tertius succeed to him, and then Primus should die, a question arose whether the treasury or Tertius should succeed to the share of Primus. It should seem at first that the decision was in favour of the treasury from Dig. 28. 6. 27. But *it appears that Severus and Antoninus, leaned against the [ *503 ] claim of the treasury. Mysinger. h. 1. Whether the same doctrine takes place in pupillary substitution, see Cujas on Dig. 28. 6. 41. and Ferriere in loco.

§ 4. Si quis servo, qui liber existimabatur, &c. p. 137. In this case, the heirship was divided, from the total uncertainty of what the testator might have willed had he not been mistaken. In dubiis enim causis, ad iudicium rusticum esse recurrendum, ipsa ratio suadet; et in ambiguis, quod minimum est, sequimur. Neither is this opposed to Cod. de heredib. instit. l. 3, where it is said to be a question of inclination: for this question can only arise where there is room for rational conjecture.

Cujas corrects Dig. 28. 5. 40. from ita ut alter semis, to ita ut As: and as Ferriere supposes, rightly; scribes frequently making mistakes by their abbreviated characters, Sigla.

Tit. XIV. De pupillari substitutione p. 138. This could not be exercised by the parent over a son emancipated, whether at the execution of the will, or the death of the testator. Dig. 28. 6. 2 and 41. Nor could the mother exercise this right over her son, being as yet impuer. Nor is this contrary to Dig. 28. 6. 33. because this last is a mere case, not of pupillary, but of common substitution, for the heritage does not attach till the son arrives at fourteen years of age. This is the tabula pupillaris, of the jurisconsults, and an heir may be appointed for a future time. Sup. inst. heredib. inst. tit. 14. § 9. But then such an appointment by that section of the institutes, is directed to take place immediately, notwithstanding the limitation. Or if it be considered as uncertain whether the impuer will arrive at puberty, then the condition being uncertain, the validity or nullity of the will depends upon that event. Dies vero incertus vim habet conditionis et perinde ad initium potest retrahi. Cod. de hered. inst. l. 9. and this seems to be the true light.

If a child, not arrived at puberty, do not fall within some one of the causes of disinheriton stated in Nov. 115, he may effectually prefer the allegation of invalidity from neglect of natural duty; (inofficiosi testamenti) against the will. These causes are briefly as follows: all comprehended under the general denomination of ingratitude; so that it seems a commentary upon the old adage, ingratum quem dixeris omnia dicis.

1stly, If the child hath assaulted the parents: or 2dly, inflicted upon them a great and dishonorable injury: or 3dly, accused them of a crime, except where the emperor or state was concerned: or 4thly, practised sorcery: or 5thly, attempted the life of either of his parents by poison, or any other secret means: or 6thly, debauched his stepmother, or his father's concubine: or 7thly, turned informer against his parents, and thus put them to expence: or 8thly, if he do not attempt to relieve his parent out of prison, by offering so far as he can, to become security: or 9thly, if he should unfairly prevent his parents from making a will: or 10thly, if he has joined a company of gladiators, (arenarii) or stage players, (mimi), or 11thly, if a daughter should refuse to marry a husband provided by the parent, who is also willing to bestow on her a reasonable portion, but chooses to live a libertine single life. However, if the parent hath not taken care to provide her a proper husband before the age of 25, and she should then have a child, it is the fault of their neglect, and no cause of disinheriton: or 12thly, if the child should neglect to succour and take care of a parent, who may become lunatic or insane: or 13thly, should neglect to exert himself honestly to redeem his parent from captivity: or 14thly, if being brought up by his parents, in the orthodox doctrine of the church, he should swerve from the catholic faith. This last to be sure, might be converted into a fruitful source of complaint.

§ 5. Pupillare testamentum sequela paterni, p. 140. Pupillary substitution is founded on the will of the father: so that if this be set aside, the pupillary substitution falls with it. Dig. 28. 6. Dig. 50. 17. 129. 1. and 1. 17. 6. ib. So the pupillary substitution holds good in the same manner as the will holds good. Dig. 29. 2. 4. 1.

§ 6. Quot liberis substituitur, p. 140. In this case, the substitute cannot succeed till the death of the last child under age.

Ferriere puts the case: A father making his will appoints Primus Secundus and Tertius Patres familias, Quartus an impuber, and Quintus a slave, his heirs, with assignment of various portions. He disinherits *his son not of age, and appoints as substitutes [ *505 ] in case of his son's death before puberty, such of the five persons as may become heirs to himself. Primus declines: Secundus and Tertius accept: so does Quartus at command of his father; so does Quintus at command of his master. Secundus dies: Quartus becomes filius familias and is emancipated: Quintus is manumitted. Who shall be the substitute? shall Primus? shall the heir of Secundus? shall the father of Quartus? or the master of Quintus? It is answered, that the substitution applied to the persons of the substitutes, not to the representatives; to those who had actually been the heirs of the father, as well as the instituted heirs: and therefore the substitution fell to Tertius, Quartus, and Quintus in the respective proportions of their original shares under the will of the father.

§ 7. De substitutione nominatim aut in genere, p. 141. See on this section the paraphrase of Theophilus, which is of great authority. "Moreover I may substitute to a minor within puberty, by name, and say, if my son should be my heir and die within puberty, let Titius be my heir. And I may substitute to him generally, as when I institute many persons as heirs together with my son, or by instituting many heirs, I disinherit my son. I may so substitute generally, by saying, whoever shall be heir to me the father, I substitute him to my son if he should die before puberty. By which form of words those who are the written heirs and remain so at the time, will by substitution become heirs also to the son dying within puberty. For if the persons instituted reject the heirship as to the greater part, they will take nothing by the pupillary substitution; for the pupillary heirship will be divided between them, in the proportion of the original heirship, that is according to the portion they were respectively entitled to under the father's institution of them as heirs to him."

I have already mentioned (Tit. 15, § 1) that substitutions are abolished in France by the Napoleon code.

"So detrimental has an unqualified and unlimited power of settlement been found, even in France, that it has been made a question there, whether it would not be for the advantage of the nation at large, that all settlements and trusts should be abrogated. This question so far as it related to moveables, was by the order of Louis 15, proposed in the year 1744 by the chancellor D'Aguesseau to all the parliaments and superior councils of France, See *Questions concernant les substitutions, avec les Responses de tous les Parliamens, et cours souverains du Royaume, et les observations de M. Not only in the cases mentioned in the text, but by the birth of a child subsequent to the will. Formerly the adoption of a son set aside the will, Dig. 28. 3. 7. if he was not instituted heir therein. Dig. 28. 3. 18. Dig. 37. 4. 8. 7. but by this law of Justinian, an adopted son, does not invalidate the will, unless he be a pater familias, or if being a filius familias he be adopted by some relation paternal or maternal in the ascending line. Cod. de adopt. lex penult.

As to the general doctrine of revocations, see Viner's Ab. under this head, and the note 4 of Serjeant Williams to page 276 of Saunders' Reports, and the cases there referred to, particularly Bridges v. The Dutchess of Chandos, 2 Vez. Jun. 417. and Goodtitle v. Otway, 7 Term Rep. 399. The following cases on the subject have occurred since that note.

Cave v. Holford, 3 Vez. 650. Revocation by subsequent conveyance.

Lord Temple v. Dutchess of Chandos. Ib. 685. By a mortgage, or a conveyance in fee of a devised estate for the payment of debts, the will is revoked pro tanto only.

Hinckley v. Simmons, 4 Vez. 160. Mutual wills by two unmarried sisters under twenty-one, the marriage of one does not revoke the will of the other.

Crosbie v. Macdonald, 4 Vez. 610. All codicils are part of the will: therefore a codicil for a particular purpose only, does not revive a part of the will revoked by a former codicil.

Ib. Two inconsistent wills: a codicil referring to the first by date as the last will, revokes the immediate will.

Gibbons v. Caunt, 4 Vez. 840. Quere, whether by the birth of more children subsequent to the will, and the testator's second marriage after the birth of those children, but no issue by that marriage, the will is revoked?

Lord Carrington v. Payne, 5 Vez. 404. A codicil applying to a particular part of the will only, was considered as a substitution for, and not a revocation of that particular part.

Knollys v. Alcock, Ib. 654. A contract for sale revokes a devise of the land. But it is not revoked by a mortgage in fee to the devisee. Baxter v. Dyer, Ib. 656.

**Kennebel v. Scrafton*, Ib. 663. Marriage and birth of a [ *507 ] child, (ut semble) does not revoke a will made in contemplation of such marriage and issue by it.

Harmood v. Oglander, 6 Vez. 199. Devise revoked by a conveyance in trust, operating beyond the mere purpose of securing a mortgage.

At law, the courts only consider the great question whether the interest remains the same in the devisor, as it did at the date of the will; if not, whether the charge be for a general or a partial purpose, it is a legal revocation of the devise; but at equity, if the deed be only for a partial purpose, introducing only a particular charge or incumbrance, and not otherwise affecting the interest of the devisor; there, the use that would enure to the testator and his heirs, if alive, after that partial purpose was effected, will be held by equity to enure to the devisee if the testator be dead. Hence, a devise is not revoked by a mortgage in fee, or by a conveyance in fee for the payment of debts. Ib. A court of law, looks at the deed only, and compares the interest at the date of the will, with the alteration made in it by the deed: but equity looks also at articles, at covenants, and at the real intent of the transaction connected with the deed.

Equity controuls the law in cases of revocation under the two following circumstances only. 1st. Where the beneficial interest is devised, distinct from the legal estate, and the testator afterwards takes the legal estate without any modification or alteration. 2ndly, Where having the legal as well as the beneficial estate at the date of the will, he divests himself of the former, but retains the latter: as in the case of a mortgage, or conveyance for the payment of debts. Ib.

Ellison v. Ellison, Ib. p. 656. Ellison in 1791 conveyed leasehold estate in trust to Wren: in 1786 he made his will, devising his personal estate, &c. In 1797 he took a conveyance to himself from Wren of the trust estate. Held this was no revocation; especially as no intent to revoke appeared in the proceedings.

Ex pte. Ilchester, 7 Vez. 370. Montague v. Jeffereys, Moore, 4. An act inconsistent with the will, though by accident not carried into effect, is a revocation: as a covenant with letter of attorney to make livery, though no livery made. Inchoate acts inconsistent with the will amount to revocation if accompanied with power to destroy the provisions of the will. See further in Lord Alvanly's argument as to the effect of parol and inchoate revocations previous to and under the statute of frauds.

Where the instrument inconsistent with the will is complete in itself to show the intention, it is a revocation, though something further remains *to be done to give it legal effect in favour of [ *508 ] the person to whom it is made, as a bargain and sale without enrollment: a feoffment without livery, &c. but a second will unattested, is incomplete, and therefore cannot revoke.

Agreeable to the rule of the civil law, tunc prius testamentum rumpitur cum posterius perfectum est, which in Limbery v. Mason, Comyn. Rep. 451, is laid down as the English law. Dig. 28. 3. 2.

Knollys v. Alcock, 7 Vez. 564. and Attorney General v. Vigor, 8 Vez. 281. Maundrel v. Maundrel, 10 Vez. 256. Mere partition, whether by compulsion or agreement is not a revocation: but the slightest addition, as a power of appointment to the limitation of uses is sufficient. In what case an instrument abandoned ceases to be a revocation.

A codicil reciting a specific and limited purpose will revoke the whole devise, declaring the trusts again with the proposed alterations, and will confirm the will in all particulars not revoked. The omission of a trust though against the intention of the testator, cannot be supplied. Holder v. Holder, 8 Vez. 97.

Harmood v. Oglander, 8 Vez. 126. There is no instance of a revocation at law, not being a revocation in equity, where the partial particular purpose was not for charges, or incumbrances, or to pay debts.

Rose v. Cuninghame, 11 Vez. 554. Where an agreement for the purchase of an estate has been executed, the purchaser may devise it, and the subsequent conveyance of the mere legal estate, will not be a revocation of the will, while the equitable estate remains. Doe v. Pott, Doug. 684. Watts v. Fullerton, Doug. 891.

Pemberton v. Pemberton, 13 Vez. 297. Duplicates of a will. The presumption is, that cancelling one of the duplicates amounts to cancelling the other, though both are in the testator's possession, and the cancelled instrument had been altered.

Charman v. Charman, 14 Vez. 580. Devise of real estate not revoked by bankruptcy.

5 Term Rep. 124. Shove v. Princk. An imperfect and inefficient deed, evidencing an intention to revoke, revokes a will.

1 Bos. and Pull. 576. Goodtitle v. Otway. No man has a right to devise an estate of which the title is not in him at the time of the devise: it must be his own: legally, according to the doctrines of the courts of law; equitably at least, if not legally, according to the doctrines of the courts of equity: no subsequent acquisition of the title, will make that will good which was bad when it was executed. This appears from Butler and Baker's case, 3 Co. Rep. 30. b. Sparrow v. Hardcastle, 3 At. 803. per Lord Trevor in Fitzg. 240.

[ *509 ] *Hence in Swift ex dem. Neale and Roberts, Burr. 1497, Lord Mansfield denied that a joint tenant could devise his estate, either by law or by statute. For by the express words of the statute of 34 and 35 Hen. 8, a devisor must have the estate he pretends to devise: and an after-purchased estate will not pass. A will under the Roman law, essentially consisted in the appointment of an heir: in England it is ambulatory, and revocable, and more in the nature of a donatio mortis causa.

And this estate must continue in the devisor till the time of his death; for if, by any form of conveyance, he passes away the whole estate, although he takes it back again instantaneously by another conveyance, and whether this be done animo revocandi or not, the retaking is a new estate; it is not the same estate, and the former will without republication, does not pass it; for a will cannot operate upon an estate which a man has wholly conveyed away. Lord Mansfield, in Roe ex dem. Norden v. Griffith, 4 Bnrr. 1960, laments this: but the law was so settled in Lord Lincoln v. Rolls, Show. Parl. Cases 154, and 1 Ab. Ca. in Eq. 411. to the same purpose, are, Sparrow v. Hardcastle, sup. and Parsons v. Freeman, 3 At. 740. and the other decisions cited by Buller, and by Eyre, in the present case of Goodtitle v. Otway, which is very instructive. Eyre however, like Lord Mansfield, seems to me to regret that this rule of positive law, was ever carried further, than that a disposition of the whole estate, amounted to evidence of an intention to revoke, which might of course be rebutted. But so the law is. This law is no otherwise modified by equity, (which doubtless cannot supercede the statute) than by protecting those equitable interests, which a man reserves by articles and covenants that a court of law cannot investigate; and by declaring that when the legal conveyance is only a mere matter of form with a view of charging or incumbering the estate for the purpose of paying debts or otherwise, it cannot be considered as exhausting the fee—as amounting to a conveyance of the WHOLE estate.

3 Bos. and Pul. Larkins v. Larkins, a devise to two as joint tenants. Devisor afterwards strikes out the name of one. This is only a revocation pro tanto.

As to the decisions in Pennsylvania.

A second will containing an express clause of revocation, revokes the first. 2 Dall. Rep. 268, Boudinot v. Bradford.

Where a second will is destroyed without more, the preceding will not having been cancelled, generally speaking is ipso facto revived. Ib. and *evidence will be admitted to show whether the [ *510 ] testator cancelled the second with an intent to revive the first will, or to die intestate. Ib.

The mere act of making a second will, is a revocation of the former, as to the personal estate, the law throwing that on the executor as trustee. Ib.

A will revoked by a subsequent will, but not cancelled, is re-established by cancelling the second will. 2 Dall. Rep. 289. Lawson v Morrison.

A will in writing revoking a will in writing, must be attended with all the solemnities necessary to the first will. Presumptive and implied revocations from change of state, or acts inconsistent with the will, may be rebutted by counter evidence. Ib.

A will in writing may be revoked by the parol republication of a former will in writing. And if the republished will cannot be found, its contents may be proved. 2 Binney, 406, Havard v. Davis.

A subsequent marriage and birth of a child, under the acts of Pennsylvania, operate as a revocation pro tanto only. 3 Binney, 498, Coates v. Hughes.

I have found nothing as to the revocation of wills in the New York decisions, nor in the Southern cases, other than I have already referred to.

§ 2. De posteriore testamento, p. 142. By Dig. 28. 3. and Cod. de testam. 27, it is said to be sufficient if the revocation be made before three witnesses, 10 years after the first will.

Theodosius and Valentinian, declared a will revoked, at the end of ten years from its execution, although the testator should have shewn no change of disposition. Cod. Theod. de testam. 6. But Justinian required a formal revocation as above, in presence of three witnesses.

§ 4. De testamento irrito, p. 143. Even the lowest diminution as if a pater familias became adopted, his former will was annulled. For his rights are thus merged in his situation as adopted son, and belong to his adopted father. Dig. 28. 3. 6. cum seq. Dig. 29. 7. 9. 3. But this would not be the case with a military will. § 6. Quibus modis convalescit, p. 144. Per omnia: that is, not throughout, but, not always, or not in all cases. Thus a will made [ *511 ] *ineffectual, (irritum) by captivity, may be restored on return by the jus postliminii, or by the fiction of the lex cornelia, by which his death is considered as having happened at the moment preceding captivity. So the diminution by deportation, may admit of complete reinstatement by the imperial decree. Dig. 28. 3. 6. 12. So in the smaller diminution by adoption of a pater familias, his will made as pater familias, might be re-established before the prætor, provided, 1st, It was in writing: for the prætor took no cognizance of nuncupative wills. 2ndly, That the pater familias, becoming by adoption filius familias, regained his quality of pater familias, and died in that state. 3rdly, That he declared his desire that his former testament should stand good, by codicil to that purpose. The law of England is the same with that here laid down, viz. that if a testamentary paper is begun, but left unfinished, and the party lives a sufficient time to have finished it if he chose, the law presumes either that he did not choose to finish it, or had not made up his mind concerning it. *Cranvell v. Domitian declared, the emperor might accept the heirship of one of his subjects, if any one witness should prove that the deceased had made him his heir: but according to Suetonius, he was obliged to repeal this decree.

Tit. XVIII. De inofficiiso testamento, p. 146. The allegation of invalidity as being contrary to the duties of his station in life, lay against the testament of a testator, who unnaturally disinherited his natural heir without sufficient cause. This allegation, was not, properly speaking an action, nor a suit to recover the heirship, for the will is set aside. The process was, by notice to the instituted heir by the legitimate heir, and the cause was usually carried from the magistrate or *court below to the Centumvirs. Dig. 5. 2. 13. 17. The [ *512 ] suit turned upon proof of some one or other of the fourteen causes or reasons of disinherison included in the 115th Novel; the onus probandi, being thrown upon the instituted heir. Hence, it was in the nature of our motion for a rule to show cause. I have already abridged the fourteen causes of disinherison in that novel, but they are also briefly comprized in the following verses.

Bis septem ex causis exhæres filius esto :

Si patrem ferit ; vel maledicat ei :

Carcere detrusum, si negligat, aut furiosum :

Criminis accuset, vel paret insidias :

Si dederit damnum grave ; si nec ab hoste redemit :

Testarive vetet ; se societve malis.

Si mimos sequitur ; vitietve cubile paternum :

Non orthodoxus ; filia si meretrix.

The last cause however, was insufficient, if the parent did not provide her a husband before she arrived at the age of twenty-five.

I have already mentioned the English law of revocations : and the rule that the heir shall not be disinherited by implication. To the same principles may be referred the rule that a wife shall not be deprived of dower by implication. Webb v. Evans, 1 Binn. 565.

Quia plerumque parentes.] The plaint, or action, in the case of an undutiful testament, which civilians call testamentum inofficiosum, is not in use in England ; where, by the common law, all persons intitled to make a will, have ever had a free power of bequeathing their goods and chattels, in whatever manner they thought best ; and it was only by the particular custom of some places, that this power was restrained : so that the writ called breve de rationabili parte bonorum, which the wife or children of the deceased had against the executors for the recovery of part of the goods, was not general throughout the kingdom, but peculiar to certain countries, where the custom was, that, debts being paid, the remainder should be divided into three equal parts ; viz. one to the wife, another to the children, and a third to attend the will of the testator. Cowel lib. 2. t. 18.

The custom of reserving a reasonable part of the goods for the widows and children of testators is still in force in the city of London, as to the widows and children of freemen ; but in other parts of the kingdom, where this custom did formerly prevail, it has been abolished by act of parliament ; see 4 and 5 Will. and Mary, cap. 6. The inhabitants of the province of York, are also empowered to dispose of their personal estates by their wills, notwithstanding the custom of that [ *513 ] *province, as to the reasonable part claimed by widows and children ; but the act excepts the cities of York and Chester ; yet the same liberty was afterwards extended to the freemen of the city of York, by the statute of the 2nd and 3rd of Queen Anne. And by the 7th and 8th of William the 3rd, cap. 38. the same custom was abolished in the principality of Wales. See Dr. Strahan's notes on Domat, vol. 2. p. 109.—But by the law of Scotland, a testator cannot by testament deprive his wife or children of their legitimate or reasonable part. Stair's Inst. lib. 3. t. 8. Mackenzie's Inst. lib. 3. t. 9. p. 251.

Hoc colore.] This pretext was made use of to avoid the appearance of impugning the testament of a man in his senses, contrary to the authority of the 12 tables, which give all persons, capable of making a will, a free and uncontrolled power of bequeathing their effects just as they think proper. “Verbis legis 12 tabularum his, uti legassit suæ rei, ita jus esto. latissima potestas tributa videtur, et hæredis instituendi, et et legata et libertates dandi, tutelas quoque constituendi; sed id interpretatione coangustatum est, &c. ff. 50. t. 16. l. 120. de verb. sign.” Harris.

The eight causes for which a parent might be disinherited, are included in the following verses, and may be found in Nov. 115. ch. 4.

Si capitis natum pater accusaverit; ejus
 Aut vitæ insidias, clamve palamve struat:
 Si vetuit cupidum secreta novissima mentis
 Prodere; nec veritus sit temerare nurum:
 Si pater et genetrix sibi fata scelestâ minentur:
 Fulcra non ad nati clausa furentis eant:
 Filius auxilio si non patris hostica linquit
 Limina: si genitor numen inane colit

That is, parents are not to be pretermitted, or disinherited by name, unless for one or other of the following causes specifically alleged.

1st, If the parent hath by accusation put in jeopardy the son's life, unless in case of treason: 2ndly, or attempted it by poison or by sorcery: or 3rdly, debauched the wife or concubine of his son: or 4thly, prevented the lawful exercise of the son's right of devising: or 5thly, been convicted of attempting by poison or otherwise the life of his wife; or the life of her husband: or 6thly, refused to take care of any of their children who might be deprived of reason: or 7thly, neglected *to redeem a child from captivity: or 8thly, abandoned [ *514 ] the orthodox faith.

The allegation of inofficiousness was extended in favour of brothers and sisters; Cod. h. t. 21. 27. Cod. Theodos. eod. Dig. 5. 2. 14. 1. and Ib. l. 1. 24. 25.

§ 2. Qui alio jure veniunt et de inofficioso non agunt, p. 147. This allegation did not lie, in favour of 1st, A son omitted in his father's will; for this would suffice to nullify it.

2ndly, Daughters or grand-children omitted: for they had a remedy under the constitution of Marcus Antoninus.

3rdly, Emancipated children omitted: for they might be called to the possession by the prætor, per possessionem bonorum contra tabulas. Dig. 5. 2. 23. Yet the father of an emancipated son, seems to have both these remedies; Dig. 37. 12. 1. ult.

4thly, An omitted posthumous child; for he can break the will. Dig. 5. 2. 6.

5thly, An adrogated minor under fourteen, disinherited by his adoptive father: for he is entitled to his fourth part, under the law of Antoninus Pius. Dig. 5. 2. 8. 15.

6thly, A child to whom his father has left his portion. Dig. 5. 2. 25. Cod. eod. l. 30.

The right to urge this complaint, (which must be brought in five years, Dig. 37. 4. 4 and 37. 4. 8. 1. Cod. eod. tit. 28. l. 3. § 24.) passes by a decree of Justinian to the immediate legitimate heirs of the person, who might have urged it during life. Cod. eod. si quis, &c. and scimus, &c.

§ 3. De eo cui testator aliquid reliquerit, p. 147. The action to recover the legal portion, or the difference between the bequest and the fourth part, was entitled condictio ex lege; and enured to the heirs of the person originally entitled to bring it. Nor was it renounced by implication: it must have been expressly given up, if at all. Peregrinus fidei comm. Art. 36. num. 93. Cod. de inofficioso test. l. 30.

§ 6. De quarta legitimæ partis, p. 148. See Cod. 3. 28. 35.

I have already mentioned, that, in my opinion, the right of bequeathing by will, is no natural right: it is the creature of society, and may fairly and prudently be limited.

Plato considers a man's property as belonging to his family, lib. xi. de leg. which was the Roman doctrine of suitas. In Greece, Solon first introduced the right of devising. Plut. in Solon. Demosth. adv. Lept.

The law of the 12 tables on this subject was imported from [ *515 ] *Athens. But the Romans made frequent attempts to restrain the right. Thus the Lex Furia, a plebiscitum, A. U. C. 570. restricted the amount of legacies to other persons than the heir, at a thousand Asses; and the legatee receiving it, was subject to a penalty. The Lex Voconia, A. U. C. 584, enacted that no legatee should receive more than the heir. The Lex Falcidia, under Augustus, secured to the heir a fourth part of the estate, by restraining the testator from bequeathing in legacies ultra dodrantem or nine ounces. Justinian, by the 18th novell. assigned one third of all the goods of the testator to the children if they amounted to four or fewer, and one half if they were more than four. Thus two children would divide between them four ounces, five children six ounces; agreeably to those verses.

Quatuor aut infra dant natis jura Trientem:

See on this subject, Dig. 48. 20. 7. Cod. de inoffic. testam. 36. Nov. 1. princip. et § 1. Cod. de inoff. test. 31. Cod. ad leg. Jul. majest. 5. § 3. Nov. 66. ch. 92.

The children excluded from this legitima pars, or share of the paternal property thus secured to them by law, whether excluded by voluntary or legal reasons, do not on this account augment the quarta pars or legal portion of the rest. As if one out of five children were disinherited for just cause, or took the veil, the other four would not be entitled to six ounces, for the legal portion was founded on the right of heirship or succession.

Grand children were reckoned per stirpes, by stock: thus all the children of a son counted as the son.

In cases of dispute as to the mode of division or remuneration, it was usually referred to arbitration; arbitrio boni viri. Cod. l. 3. tit. 28. § 36.

The action for the recovery of the supplement, or difference between a legacy bequeathed and the legal portion, enured to the heirs of those who had a right to sue. It was even assets to the creditors, although the heir should have renounced. Cod. de repud. bon. possess. l. 2. Dig. 38. 9. 1. 7.

Previous to the 115th novel. whatever the heir had received whether as heir, as legatee, mortis causa, or by way of trust, was considered as advancement, and deducted from his portion or fourth part; except a donation inter vivos, or gift with actual transfer by the testator in his lifetime. After this novel. the heir entitled to his legal portion became entitled without these deductions as it should seem; see Cujas in Dig. 35. 2. 15. penult. and perhaps reasonably, for the legal portion is due *by the settled provisions of positive law; the [ *516 ] gifts and legacies arise from the casual inclination of the testator; who therefore could neither transfer or burthen with debts, usufructs, or trusts, even for pious purposes, the portion cast by operation of law. Cod. de inoffic. test. l. 36.

In the modern French code (art. 913. of Code civ. Nap.) the Quotite or portion of disposable property is limited in favour of the children. "Les libéralités soit par actes entre vifs, soit par testament, ne pourront excéder la moitié des biens du disposant s'il ne laisse à son décès qu'un enfant légitime; le tiers s'il laisse deux enfants; le quart s'il laisse trois ou un plus grand nombre."

In England the law permitted devises of personal property time out of mind: 2 Fonbl. B. 4 pt. 1 ch. 1 § 1. n. (a): but devises of land were first allowed by Stat. 32, 34, 35 Hen. 8. See Hungerford v. Nosworthy, Show. P. C. 147. As to the civil and canon law authority in the ecclesiastical courts on the subject of legacies, see 2 Fonbl. Ib. § 4. note.

By the law of England, and most part of the American states (New-Orleans I believe adopting the principle if not the regulations of the Code Napoleon) there is no restriction on the permitted right of bequeathing. Doubtless the parent ought to retain some check on the misbehavior of children, and so I think ought the laws on the caprice, the injustice or the dotage of parents. In Holland, Germany and Spain, and as I have understood in other parts of Europe, the principles of the Falcidian law more or less limited or extended, have been generally adopted; and it is worthy of notice, that the experience of the Empire from the time of Augustus to that of Justinian, led to a gradual extension of those principles.

The civil law doctrine of advancement by gift to children, during the life-time of the testator, briefly laid down in this section, gave birth to the modern law of England respecting the satisfaction of portions by legacies, and the ademption of legacies by the advancement of portions: concerning which, the cases are numerous and complicated.*

Ellison v. Cookson, 1 Vez. jun. 105.

[ *517 ] *Where a parent is under covenant to provide portions for children, provision by will shall be held to go in satisfaction unless the contrary appear: and legacies shall be adeemed, by portions advanced during the testator's life-time, unless the terms or circumstances of the legacy negative this implication. For it shall not be intended that a parent means to give any child a double portion.

* The general doctrine of satisfaction, relates either to children: to husband and wife: or to strangers. The first class only, is immediately connected with the subject of the present section; but it may be useful to refer shortly to the leading cases of the two other classes.

On these cases it may be observed

1st. That the intent and meaning of the testator is to be sought, and parol evidence may be admitted to discover it. Deacon v. Smith, 3 Atk. 326. Ellison v. Cookson, 3 Br. Ch. Ca. 61. Mascal v. Mascal, 1 Vez. sen. 323. Rosewell v. Bennet, 3 Atk. 77. 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 204. Chapman v. Salt, 2 Vern. 646.

Rosewell v. Bennet, 3 Atk. 77. All these cases go generally to the admissibility of evidence, whether to aid or rebut a presumption. But in Freemantle v. Banks, 5 Vez. 79. and Eden v. Smith, Ib. 341. and Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Vez. 508, it is laid down that parol evidence ought only to be admitted to rebut an equity or presumption. In Pole v. Lord Somers, 6 Vez. 321, the doctrine is discussed. I incline to think that parol evidence ought not to be originally admitted to establish a presumption, but the question seems not perfectly at rest.

2ndly. There seems to be a distinction between ademption or satisfaction, and performance; though this is rather discountenanced by Prime v. Stebbing, 2 Vez. Sen. 411. But it seems to me that the more modern rule is reasonable; viz. that where the question is, whether a legacy shall be considered as the performance of a covenant, more strictness is required, than where the question is, whether a portion shall adeem a legacy. The first has parties, and is more in the nature of a debt: the second moves from the parent alone, and the only difficulty arises from the appearance of a double bounty, and family partiality. See Clark v. Sewell, 3 Atk. 98. Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Vez. 515.

3rdly. Courts disincline to extend the doctrine of satisfaction, and therefore take hold of circumstances that will reasonably enable them to consider a legacy as a bounty. Clark v. Sewell, 3 Atk. 98. Tolson v. Collins, 4 Vez. 483. Rickets v. Livingston, 2 Johnson's Cases, N. Y. 101.

Hence it has been decided,

That the devise of a residue is not a satisfaction, for it is uncertain. Alleyn v. Alleyn, 2 Vez. Sen. 37.

[ *519 ] *That a legacy is no satisfaction of an open account. Chan- cey's case, 1 P. Wms. 408.

That a legacy is no satisfaction if it be less in amount; Eastwood v. Vincke, 2 P. Wms. 6. 14. Phipps v. Annesley, 2 Atk. 57. Nichols v. Judson, 2 Atk. 300. But in some cases, a legacy has been decreed a satisfaction pro tanto, Jesson v. Jesson, 2 Vern. 255. Thomas v. Key- mish, Ib. 348. Bruen v. Bruen, Ib. 439. Warren v. Warren, 1 Br. ch. ca. 305. Sparkes v. Cator, 3 Vez. 530. Graham v. Graham, 1 Vez. sen. 263.

That a legacy depending upon a contingency is no satisfaction. Jea- cock v. Falkner, 1 Br. ch. ca. 295. Bellasis v. Uthwaite, 1 Atk. 426. Spinks v. Robins, 2 Atk. 491. Clarke v. Sewel, 3 Atk. 98.

That money and lands are not mutually satisfactions. Eastwood v. Vincke, 2 P. Wms. 614. Chaplain v. Chaplain, 3 P. Wms. 245. Cran- mer's case, 2 Salk. 508; and generally, that the presumed satisfaction should be of the same nature, extent, and certainty, as the covenant or obligation. Barret v. Beckford, 1 Vez. 519. Hanbury v. Hanbury, 2 Br. ch. ca. 352. 549. Powell v. Cleaver, 2 Br. ch. ca. 499. Baugh v. Read, 3 Br. ch. ca. 192. 1 Vez. jun. 247. Smith v. Strong, 4 Br. ch. ca. 493. Grave v. Salisbury, 1 Br. ch. ca. 425.

That where the legacy is disadvantageous as to its time of payment, it is no satisfaction in case of a debt: as a legacy made payable in a month; where the debt is due presently. Clarke v. Sewell, 3 At. 97.

Though this is not held so strictly in cases of portions, Jesson v. Jesson, 2 Vern. 255.

That a sum arising from distribution under an intestacy, is no satisfaction, Twisden v. Twisden, 9 Vez. 4. 25.

That legacies or beneficial interests, bequeathed by, or proceeding from strangers, are no satisfaction of a covenant entered into by the testator. Hanbury v. Hanbury, 2 Br. ch. ca. 352. 549.

That a legacy is not prima facie a satisfaction of the testator's covenants by settlement or otherwise to provide for his family, wherever the claims are protected by securities strictly legal, as bonds. Couch v. Stratton, 4 Vez. junr 491. Tolson v. Collins, Ib. 483. Kirkman v. Kirkman, 2 Br. ch. ca. 95. Jeacock v. Falkener, 1 Br. ch. ca. 295. Haynes v. Mico, 1 Br. ch. ca. 129. 133.

That a legacy is not a satisfaction for monies received by the testator in trust for his children. Chidley v. Lee, Finch. 228. Meredyth v. Wynn, Ib. 314. (Sed vid. Seed v. Bradford, 1 Vez. 591.) or generally, of claims arising aliunde. Baugh v. Reed, 3 Br. ch. ca. 192.

That where an express fund is pointed out, or an express direction *given for payment of debts and legacies, the [ *520 ] court will infer that both are to be paid. Chancery's case, 1 P. Wms. 408. Richardson v. Greese, 3 Atk. 65.

These are the leading principles, and distinctions that occur to me on this prolific subject.

As to the release of debts by legacies, the intention of the testator must be clear, or the inference will not take place. See hereon, Brown v. Selwyn, Cas. Temp. Talb. 240. Sibthorp v. Moxon, 1 Vez. 49. Wilmot v. Woodhouse, 4 Br. ch. ca. 227.

Immiscere se, means to act as heir. } These are expressions appertaining to the heir.
Abstinere, to decline the heirship. }

Adire, to approach : to act in succession. } Are expressions appropriate to the hæres
Pro hærede res genere, to transact business as heir. } extraneus, or stranger.
Repudiare, to renounce the succession. }

§ 4. De testamenti factione, p. 151. Testamenti factio activa; the right of devising. Testamenti factio passiva; the right of taking by devise. Testamenti factio, also sometimes means the capacity of being a witness to the last will of another.

Qui ut diximus tua tempora inspici debent. See Dig. 28. 5. 49. 50. Dig. 28. 1. 16. This relates to stranger heirs. The hæredes sui, proper or domestic heirs, are only required to possess the right of taking (testamenti factio passiva) at the death of the testator.

§ 5. De jure deliberandi, p. 152. By the ancient law no time was limited for deliberation. Sometimes testators assigned a period of 100 days. When they did not, the prætor on application of a substitute or a creditor, would himself assign a time, usually 100 days at least. Dig. 28. 8. 1. 2. cum seq. Cod. de jure delib. l. 19. Dig. 29. 2. 28. Justinian extended it to one year. Cod. eod. l. 19. afterwards he abridged this period to three months, Cod. eod. l. ult. unless under peculiar circumstances, wherein the prætor might extend it to a year, and an inferior magistrate to nine months. Cod. de jur. delib. l. ult.

But minors, from their inexperience in business, were allowed to renounce, Cod. si minor, ab hæred. abst. l. 1. Dig. 4. 4. 7. 1. unless where it became insolvent by accident after he took it. Dig. 4. 4. 11. 24. § 2. Cod. de integ. rest. minor. l. ult.

Sed nostra benevolentia, &c. In Ferriere and others, this passage begins another section, relating to the privilege of inventory.

[ *521 ] *The inventory by which the claims upon the heir were to be bound, required 1st. To be commenced within one, and finished within three months, from the death of the testator. Cod. de jur. delib. l. ult. 2dly. It was to be made out in the presence of creditors and legatees duly notified, Novell. 1 ch. 2. § 2. Ib. 119. ch. 6. 3dly. It was to contain a full and fair account of all the property of the deceased real and personal, Cod. de jur. delib. l. ult. § 10. 4thly. It was to be signed by the heir claiming under it. Beyond this inventory the heir was not liable, unless he had thought fit to ask time to deliberate, which was considered as a waiver of inventory. Cod. eod. l. ult.

§ 6. De acquirenda vel omittenda, &c. p. 153. Strangers might accept three ways:

1st, By Addition: (adire magistratum) and formally declare their intention of accepting the heirship: this must be simply and unconditionally, without power of subsequent renunciation. Dig. 29. 2. 51. et ult. l. 80. eod. § 2. l. 90. eod. § 3.

2dly, By Cretion: declaration being made before the magistrate within the time limited by the testator. From Crevi, a cernere, to decree.

3dly, Pro hærede gestio: Acting as heir. Dig. 29. 2. 20. et seq. Ib. l. 88. § 7.

They might renounce,

1st, By repudiation before a magistrate.

2dly, By any expression or act implying renunciation. Dig. 29. 2. 95.

3dly, By omitting to take up the heirship within the limited period.

After the time of Theodosius the younger, and Justinian, Addition, Cretion and Repudiation, were laid aside. Heirships were accepted in two ways only, pro hærede gestione, and agnatione nuda. Cod. de jur. delib. l. 6. 12 and 17. Cod. Theod. de bon. mat. l. 1. 4 and 8, Ib. de Cretion. lb. et bonor. possess. sublat. Cod. qui admitt. ad bonor. possess. Scrupulosam cretionum solemnitate hac lege penitus amputari decernimus. Cod. 6. 30. 17.

Item extraneus hæres.] The law of England takes no notice of proper or domestic heirs, and therefore can make no distinction between sui hæredes and extranei; but in England, if an executor, [who may be regarded as the heir of personal estate] once intermeddles with the estate of the testator, he will not afterwards be permitted to renounce his executorship; and yet he is not liable de bonis propriis to pay more than he has received, unless in some particular cases, as when he hath wasted the estate of the deceased, or acted otherwise improperly *and dishonestly—and even an executor de son tort will in [ *522 ] general be charged only to the amount of the goods wrongfully administered by him. 1 Mod. 213. Parten v. Baseden.—Swinb. 337. Harris.

Tit. XX. § 1. Legatum itaque est donatio, p. 154. In England under the word legacy, land may be included. Doug. 40. Brady v. Cubitt, and the cases cited in the note. Also Hardacre et al. v. Nash et al. 5 Term Rep. 716.

It is truly said here that a legacy is a gift, a bounty. This is certainly the prima facie intention of the testator: hence it is, that the courts rather lean against the doctrine of ademption and satisfaction as to debts: for it is converting a gift into a payment. See in addition to the cases already cited lately, 1 Brown's civil law, 304. 3 Woodeson, 538. 2 Fonb. 320. 2 Johnson's New York cases, 101.

§ 2. De antiquis generibus legatorum sublatis, p. 154. Sed ex constitutionibus. Cod. 6. 37. 21. Nostra autem constitutio. Cod. 6. 43. 1.

The forms thus abrogated were, 1st, Per vindicationem. As, I give and bequeath, positively. 2dly, Per damnationem. I direct my heir to deliver over and pay. 3dly, Sinendi modo. My will is that Titius be permitted to take, &c. 4thly, Per præceptionem. Let Titius take so much of such a thing, or such a thing, except, &c. The first and fourth amounted to a transfer in full right, and were recoverable under the action familie erciscundæ. The two others allowed only of a personal action ex testamento. Under the later ordinances, the legatee might have his action against the heir or any other possessor of the thing devised: and an hypothecary action for immoveable or real property, so termed, under the fiction that all the goods of the testator were hypothecated or pledged for the delivery of each legacy from the time of his death. But co-heirs were not bound beyond their proportion. Cod. comm. de legat. l. 1.

It may be remarked, that the courts in England, after having been long trammelled by particular decisions, and technical constructions, have adopted the golden rule of this section for the expounding of last wills and testaments, viz. that whatever be the form of words made use of, the intention of the testator must govern if it can be gotten at, even in opposition to partial expressions; unless that intention militates against some known rule of positive law, as in creating a mortmain or a perpetuity.

§ 3. Collatio legatorum, &c. p. 154. See Cod. Commun. de legat. 2. The passages to the same purpose, to wit, that legacies are in all respects likened to trusts in Dig. 30. 1. only as to the deduction under [ *523 ] *the Falcidian law of the fourth or legal portion, according to Cujus, l. 8. observat. ch. 4.

§ 4. De re legata, p. 156. See Dig. 30. 14. 1. Dig. 30. 67. 1. and Dig. 30. 71. 3. as to paying over the value. If a specific legacy can be reasonably obtained by purchase, it is of no consequence, whether the testator knew it to be the property of another or not. Dig. 30. 49. 3. The onus probandi was thrown on the legatee. Dig. 22. 3. 21. Cod. eod. l. 23.

§ 5. De re aliena post testamentum a legatario acquisita, p. 157.

Nam traditum est, duas lucrativas causas, &c. See Dig. 44. 7. 17. Dig. 30. 82. As to the latter part of this section see Dig. 30. 34. 8. and 30. 84. 2. juncto Cujacio, Dig. 50. 16. 88. Dig. 4. 4. 35.

Nam traditum est.] When it is said, that two lucrative titles can never concur in the same person on account of the same thing, this must be understood in regard only to something certain and determinate, as a particular purse of money, an horse, a diamond, &c. for the maxim does not hold in general with respect to things, which consist in quantity, and may be numbered, weighed or measured.—Possunt enim duæ causæ lucrative in eandem personam et eandem quantitatem concurrere, quia quantitates per rerum naturam multiplicantur; licet enim eadem res mea sæpius fieri non possit, eadem tamen quantitas possit quia res eadem non videtur. Cujacius; Ferriere. Harris.

Agerè potest: In England no suit lies for a legacy at common law.

The mayor of Southampton v. Graves, 8 Term. Rep. 593. Unless upon the express promise of the executor in consideration of assets, Atkyns v. Hill, Cowp. 284. Hawkes v. Saunders, Ib. 289. But the case of Deeks v. Strutt, negatives an implied assumpsit by virtue of assets. Whenever the executor assents, the legacy vests from that moment. Doe v. Guy, 3 East, 120.

In Pennsylvania, by act of 21 March, 1772, legatee may bring suit after reasonable demand, and offer of sufficient security in double amount, conditioned to refund if necessary.

§ 10. De re legatarii, p. 159. Et licet alienaverit eam. That is according to the old Cantonian rule; and also quod ab initio vitiosum est, tractu temporis non potest convalescere, Dig. 50. 17. 29. but this rule does not apply to conditional legacies, Dig 34. 7. 1. § ult.

§ 12. De alienatione et oppignoratione, &c. p. 159. As in this case the heirs could object to paying the value of, or redeeming the thing bequeathed, on the ground that the testator, by his alienation, had in fact repealed the bequest, he will be bound to make out this plea. The contrary, however, seems intimated in Dig. 34. 4. 15. but in this last case, the plea is put in by the legatee, that the desire of bequeathing *returned upon the testator. Sane si probet legatarius [ *524 ] novam voluntatem testatoris non submovebitur.

It should seem that if the testator hath only mortgaged or pledged the thing bequeathed, this does not amount to an evidence of a change of intention. Precisely the rule adopted by the English court of chancery as to a devise of lands, or any other specific property. But it would be otherwise had he sold it or given it away. Dig. 34. 1. 18. And so is the law of England.

§ 14. De debito legato creditori, p. 160. This case involves the conflicts of two rules apparently opposite. Quæ semel utiliter constituta sunt, durant licet ille casus extiterit a quo initium capere non potuerunt. Dig. 35. 2. 5. And the rule negotium extinguitur, cum is casus postea incidit unde incipere non poterat. Dig. 30. 1. 82. Concerning which see Dig. 50. 17. 85. 1. where this latter rule is repeated: and Dig. 50. 16. 98. with the note of Vinnius.

I have already stated most of the cases, where a legacy will be considered as an extinguishment of a debt. The general rule doubtless is that a legacy equal to the debt or exceeding it, shall be considered as a satisfaction; see the cases before cited hereon; and Roper on legacies, 163, where also many of them are collected: and Gibson et ux. v. Scudamore, Moseley's Rep. 7. but if less than the debt, it shall not be satisfaction, Minuel v. Sarrazine, Mosely's Rep. 295. 1 Vez. sen. 263. Finch 394. Nor unless the bequest be at least equally beneficial. Roper on leg. 165. Nor if the bequest be not ejusdem generis. Garret v. Evers, Mosely's Rep. 364. Nor if the debt be contracted subsequent to the date of the will. 2 Salk. 508. Cranmer's case. Thomas v. Bennet, 2 P. Wms. 343. and Fowler v. Fowler, 3 P. Wms. 353. See also the observations of Lord Thurlow in Haynes v. Mico, 1 Br. ch. ca 130, expressing strong leaning against any extension of the doctrine of satisfaction.

§ 15. De dote uxori legata, p. 161. The dower or marriage portion was payable in three annual payments only, annua, bina, trina die. Hence, if it was bequeathed also, it became due from the day of the testator's death, and bore interest from that time. Cod. de rei uxor. act.

I have already referred to the cases whereon question has arisen whether the interest of a wife by settlement or otherwise is satisfied by legacy. Neither in England, nor in Pennsylvania, can a husband deprive the wife of her election to take under the wills or to resort to, or forego her dower.

§ 16. De interitu et mutatione rei legatæ, p. 161. If a testator bequeath generally a cask of wine, and all his wine by accident runs out, *the heir will be bound to pay the legacy : but if he should bequeath by description, some particular wine in the cellar, and it runs out, the loss falls on the legatee. The general doctrine of fixtures is discussed in Elwes v. Maw, 3 East, 38.

If a testator having bequeathed ground, afterwards builds upon it, the building will fall to the legatee, as an accessory. Dig. de legat. 39. 44.

There is some difficulty in the English law, as to bequests over, and limitations of personal estate : the general rule is that no remainder over of personal estate can be devised : but there are many distinctions taken as to the operation of words of limitation, in bequests of personal estate : see Roper on Leg. 202. et seq. and Cambridge v. Rous, 8 Vez. 24.

§ 22. De legato generali, p. 164. This abrogates the law, consequent upon the bequest per damnationem which gave the election to the heir, see tit. XX. ante.

§ 25. Jus antiquam de incertis personis, p. 163. Sacris constitutionibus. These are not extant.

§ 29. De errore in nomine legatarii, p. 167.

Nomen, was the family name.

**Cognomen*, the name of that branch of the family placed [ *526 ] after the nomen.

Preenomen, the name of the individual prefixed to the nomen.

Agnomen, a name assumed from some particular circumstance.

Thus, Publius, Cornelius, Scipio, Africanus: Caius Julius Cæsar: here Cornelius and Julius were the nomina, the family names.

Scipio and Cæsar were the cognomina, the one of the gens or family Cornelia; the other of the gens Julia.

Publius and Caius designated the individuals. The individuals in respect of the original family or clan, were agnati; in respect of the particular branch of the family, they were gentiles.

The rule here laid down as to the name, holds also under the civil law, as to the thing. Although it may be misalled, yet if the description or appellation be sufficient to designate the article or person intended, it is sufficient. Dig. de legat. 1. Dig. 33. 10. 7. 2. Dig. 34. 5. 3.

As to mistakes and uncertainty in a bequest under the English law, see Roper on leg. 157. et seq. and the following cases Thomas v. Thomas, 6 Term Rep. 671. Doe ex dem. Hayter v. Joinville et al. 3 East, 172. Earl of Scarborough v. Parker, 1 Vez. Jun. 267. Parsons v. Parsons, Ib. 266, and the cases in the note, p. 267, which bear upon the present section. See also Ex parte Wallop, 4 Br. ch. ca. 90 and Kennel v. Abbot, 4 Vez. 802, where a legacy given to a person under a particular character, which he has falsely assumed, and which moved the testator to the bequest, the rule of the civil law is adopted, and the legacy fails. Dig. 35. 1. 72. 6. Cod. 6. 42. 27. cited. See Swinburne, 473, et seq.

§ 30. De falsa demonstratione, p. 167. Dig. 35. 1. 19. 34. Dig. 12. 1. 6. But this rule could not apply to a legacy of a thing that did not exist, for of this there could be no delivery. Dig. de legat. 73. 1 and 2, Lex eod. 103, § 10. See 5 East, 51. Roe on the demise of Connolly v. Vernon and Vyse.

§ 31. De falsa causa adjecta, p. 168. Dig. de legat. 1. 17, § 2. cum seq. First, because the legacy is fairly referable to the good will and intention of the testator, which remain at all events. Secondly, the legacy itself, and not the reason of it, attaches to the legatee.

§ 32. De servo heredis, p. 168. The legacy has relation to the time of the testament, and it was then clearly void: for a slave could acquire only for the use of his master; i. e. as a general rule. Hence the dictum of Cato applies, quod ab initio vitiosum est, tractu temporis non potest convalescere. Dig. de diversis reg. jur. 29.

[ *527 ] **Quæritur*.] If a testator gives a legacy to the slave of his heir without annexing any condition, such a legacy is void; for a bequest, made to the slave, is in effect made to the heir; and it would be highly absurd in a testator to command his heir to pay a legacy to himself. And although the slave of the heir should afterwards cease to be under the power of his master in the life-time of the testator, either by passing to another master, or by obtaining his freedom, yet this would give no force to the legacy; for it is laid down as a rule by Cato; quod, si testamenti facti tempore decessit testator, inutile foret; id legatum, quandocunque decesserit, non valere. ff. 34. t. 7. But when legacies are conditional, this rule is not observed; for in such bequests nothing is regarded but the event of the condition. Harris.

§ 33. De domino hæredis, p. 169. The legacy cannot belong to the slave as heir: for it is evident the master may prohibit him from becoming heir, or sell him to another master.

§ 34. De Legato post mortem hæredis, p. 169. Formerly, as has been already remarked, the institution of an heir was so necessary to a testament, that any bequest in a will previous to such institution was void. By degrees the prætors excepted Trusts, (fidei-commissa.) Ulp. in frag. tit. 24, § 12; and tit. 25, § 6, Juncto Paulo, l. 3 sentent. tit. 6, § 1. Justinian abolished this strictness, and gave validity to bequests, whether placed before or after the clause by which the heir was appointed. Cod. de testament. l. ambiguitas.

§ 36. Si pænæ nomino relinquatur, p. 170. Antoninus Pius first raised an objection to these conditions nomine pænæ: thinking that a legacy ought to be founded simply on the kindness and good opinion of the testator concerning the legatee; and that burthening a legacy with any thing like a penal condition, was contrary to the fair and reasonable intent of a gift. Ulpian in frag. tit. 24, 25, § 13. Justinian reinstated the old law. Cod. de his quæ pænæ caus. relinq.

The very fruitful subject of conditions, is no farther related to the present section, than as it embraces testamentary conditions. The doctrine of conditions, says Mr. Butler in his note to Co. Litt. 201. 6. is derived to us from the feudal law. Doubtless much of that doctrine so far as relates to tenures, services, and rents, is so. But as much of it, is derived to us from the civil law: see beside the present section concerning testamentary conditions, Inst. 2. 14. 11. Inst. 3. 16. 4, 5 and 6. Dig. 26. 7. 5. 8. By the civil law, all conditions imposing celibacy, or widowhood, unless till the puberty of the orphan children were void: but legacies might be well given on the condition of marrying or not marrying such a person. Dig. 35. 1. 22. 62. 63. 64. 72. 100. But whether by ampliation this is to be contrued against any conditional restraint of marrying a particular person? Swinb. 282.

As to the (English) common law doctrine of conditions, generally, see Butler's notes, Co. Litt. 201—207. and 213. 237. Comyn's Dig. tit. Conditions.

As to conditions precedent and subsequent, and covenants dependant and independant in contracts, see the useful note of Serjeant Williams to Portage v. Coke, 1 Saund. Rep. 319. which includes the cases to Trinity term, 1799; also 1 Fonbl. ch. 6, § 1 and 2. p. 349. 388. 391.

As to the subject immediately connected with the present section, viz. conditions in restraint of marriage; the cases are well collected and the general principles arranged by Fonb. vol. 1. p. 245. See also Rop. on leg. 59—66.

I add the following references on the same subject.

Randall v. Payne, 1 Br. ch. ca. 5. Scot v. Tyler, 2 Br. ch. ca. 431. See Lord Thurlow's opinion and decree in this case at full length in 2 Dicken's Ch. Rep. 712. The general law before this was, that conditions in restraint of marriage, were to be considered as in terrorem only, it not being to be presumed, that for a breach of duty of this pardonable nature, the parent would incurably deprive the child of an intended provision. Harvey v. Aston, Forrester's Rep. 212. 1 At. 361. Comyn's Rep. 726. Reynish v. Martin, 3 Atk. 330. Elton v. Elton, 1 Wils. 159. Long v. Dennis, 4 Burr. 2052. In which Lord Mansfield *began by saying, "Conditions in restraint of marriage are odious, [ *529 ] and "are therefore held to the utmost rigour and strictness. They are "contrary to sound policy. By the ROMAN law they are all void." That is to be understood however, under the restrictions I have above laid down; to wit, the conditional injunction of celibacy—of widowhood, unless till the children arrive at puberty—of not marrying without the consent of some other person—or by ampliation of not marrying some particular person, was void: and the legacy was demandable free from the condition; Dig. 35. 1. 106: but the marrying of A. B. or C. might be made a condition precedent. Swinb. 281.

Besides this notion of conditional restraints against marriage being in terrorem only, the courts had also laid it down, that unless there was a devise over, so that some other person had an interest in the performance of the condition, the condition annexed to personal legacies, in any manner restraining marriage was void. Bellasis v. Ermine, 1 Ch. ca. 22. Semple v. Bayley, Finch. Prec. in Ch. 562. Pulling v. Reedy, 1 Wilson, 21. Wheeler v. Birgham, 3 Atk. 365, and the other cases collected in the instructive note of Mr. Williams to Hervey v. Aston, in his edition of Forrester's Cases temp. Talbot, 216, and even in case of a devise over of residue, it had been held doubtful or even void. Garret v. Pretty, 2 Vern. 293. 2 Freem. 220. Wheeler v. Birgham, 3 Atk. 365. Paget v. Haywood, cited 1 Atk. 378. Eastland v. Reynolds, 1 Dickens, Ch. Rep. 320.

Lord Thurlow in Scot v. Tyler, combated the doctrine of legacies in terrorem, and decided that wherever the residue was devised over, it supported the condition.

The general law, (civil and canon) respecting legacies in restraint of marriage, is elaborately discussed by Swinburne in his chapter on that subject, p. 282. Having made these remarks on the law as settled in Scot v. Tyler, I proceed to add a reference to the few subsequent cases of conditions in restraint of marriage.

Hutcheson v. Hammond, 3 Br. ch. ca. 128. Dashwood v. Lord Bulkeley, 10 Vez. 230. Eastland v. Reynolds, 1 Dicken's ch. Rep. 317. Knight v. Cameron, 14 Vez. 289.

All conditions of whatever nature, are liable to be avoided, or controuled, if they be absurd, or impossible, or contrary to the precepts of religion, or positive law, or public safety, or public decorum, or grossly unjust. And it will be frequently regarded as sufficiently fulfilled, if it be *substantially so, according to the intent and meaning of the contract or devise, though not formally so.

And where circumstances unavoidably prevent its being perfectly and completely fulfilled, equity will support the partial fulfillment of it, if compensation can be made for the omission of the remainder: or if the partial fulfillment of the verbal direction, be a reasonable fulfillment of the intent.

And further, where circumstances unavoidably prevent its being perfectly and completely fulfilled, equity will consider it as fulfilled, if all be done that could reasonably be expected, under the doctrine of Cyprus, concerning which see the following cases and references. 1 Pow. Tit XXI. De ademptione legati, p. 172. A legacy might be revoked under the Roman law, by word, or by act. As in the latter case, if a Testator having bequeathed the debt to the Debtor, should afterward sue him: or if having bequeathed a specific article, he should afterwards sell or give it away. There was this difference between the express and tacit revocation of a legacy, that in the former case it became void, in the latter only voidable. Though the demand might be repelled by the circumstances of a tacit revocation. Ulp. in Frag. 24, § 22: and arg. ad l. 17. Dig. de adimend. legat. Dig. eod. l. 3, § ult. and l. 22.

I have already spoken of the ademption of legacies; and of the satisfaction of legacies; in the note referring to those decisions that related to satisfaction in cases of mere relations, and of strangers.

Where a devisee shall be put to his election, see Judge Wilson's edition of Bacon's abridgment, Appendix, title ELECTION.

*As to the general doctrine of REVOCATION whether express [ *531 ] or implied, it is a subject too copious to be treated of at the length it requires, in these notes. The reader may consult Swinburne 524—536: Judge Wilson's or Gwillim's Bac. Ab. under the last section of the title Wills, and 2 Fonbl. 357. I shall refer generally to the later cases in East, Bosanquet and Puller, Vezey, jun. Dickens, and some American cases, thinking such a reference may assist the reader's researches.

Revocations may be express, or implied, or intended so to be.

An express revocation may be complete (a): or incomplete (b): or partial, pro tanto. (c)

An implied revocation may be from change of state (d): so far as this relates to marriage and birth of a child by a man, or marriage by a woman, the cases have already been referred to in these notes; or it may be from acts on the part of the testator inconsistent with the bequests of his will (e): or from the testator parting with the whole estate, or article bequeathed. § 1. De translatione, p. 172. A legacy is also said to be transferred when it is appointed to be paid by one heir and afterward by another. Dig. 34. 4. 6. There was some nicety depending on the form of words used in transferring bequests. Thus, I give and bequeath to Mævius, the legacy I before gave to Titius. This is a legacy transferred. Dig. 34. 4. 5. I give and bequeath to Sempronius the same share that I have already given to Seius: this is an additional legacy to the same amount, for there is no clear and positive exclusion, no undoubted specification of intention. I institute Sempronius as heir to the same portion wherewith I have instituted Seius; This is an appointment of co-heirship Dig. 28 5. 15. Dig. 50. 16. 142.

Tit. XXII. De lege Falcidia, p. 173. I have already noted the Lex Furia, and the Lex Volconia, which were superceded by the Lex Falcidia, enacted on the motion of Falcidius, a tribune of the people, under the sanction of Augustus, 714, A. U. C. By this law a testator was obliged to leave one fourth of his property to his heir; he could not bequeath ultra dodrantem, beyond nine ounces out of the twelve which made up the As, or whole estate. This law was, in fact, equally beneficial to testators and to heirs, because it ensured the execution of the will, by ensuring a competent reward to the heir who had the trouble. The Lex Falcidia, at first regarded legacies only: it was afterwards very properly extended by ampliation and legal construction to trusts: or, as some say, it was thus extended by the Senatus consultum Pegasianum. Trusts were certainly included within the equity *of it. By a constitution of Antonine, it was then extended [ *533 ] to intestacies, and by Severus to donations mortis causa. Cod. de legat. l. 5. and 12.

§ 1. De pluribus hæredibus, p. 173. Suppose Titius and Seius, two heirs; Titius's moiety is charged with legacies nearly to the amount of the whole; and Seius's moiety is uncharged; and the moiety of Titius should, by death, dereliction or otherwise, accrue to Seius; he would hold it under the right of deducting from the legacies, so as to leave one fourth clear. Dig. de legat. l. 78. l. 1. § 13, 14. But if the unburthened part of Seius should accrue to Titius, the legatees of Titius's part would be benefitted, for the Falcidian retrenchment would not take place. The reason is, that Seius takes the share of Titius, of course, with all the rights of Titius attached to it; he stands in the place of Titius. Whereas if Titius succeeds to the share of Seius, the reason of the Lex Falcidia fails; for Titius in this case, will have his fourth clear, notwithstanding the over charge of legacies on his own share. Cujas l. 4. obs. ch. 35, 36.

§ 2. Quo tempore spectetur, &c. p. 174. The death of the testator is the period that fixes the relative situations of the legatees and heir. If in the intervening time between the making of the will and the decease of the devisor, the estate should be increased, the legatees are exonerated from deduction in proportion. If it hath decreased, the instituted heir may renounce. Dig. de leg. 30. 73. Cod. de caduc. tabl. 11. Dig. de legat. l. 1. § 17. l. 43. § 35. l. 22. § 3. Dig. 36. l. 14. 5, 6.

§ 3. Quæ detrahuntur ante Falcidiam, p. 175. The retrenchment of legacies by the civil law was pro rata; except perhaps as in our law, as to the case of specific legacies: see Vinnius in loco, and Paulus l. 4. sentent. tit. de senat. consult. Pegasiano.

The lex Falcidia, might be made inoperative, 1st. By the express declaration of the testator, that it shall be so. Authent. sed cum testat. Tit. XXIII. De fidei commissariis hæreditatibus, p. 176. Trusts are universal or particular: universal, when the estate, or some portion of it is charged: particular, when the heir or some legatee is charged in favour of the person to be benefitted by the trust. The present title relates to universal, the next to particular trusts.

Inst. orat. ch. 6. Justinian puts legacies and trusts on the same footing. Cod. commun. de legat. l. 1. And this he was induced to do from the complexity and difficulties of the practice under the senatus consulta Trebellianum, in the reign of Mero, and Pegasium, in the reign of Vespasian. By the first, the instituted heir being indemnified, gave up to the person to whom the trust was bequeathed, either a part or the whole of the heirship, according to the nature and extent of the trust created. So that the Prætor gave to the cestui que trust, all the actual rights and privileges of an heir, with a power to commence suits, and liability to actions in that capacity: and the instituted heir was discharged either in whole, or pro tanto according to his renunciation. He was thus released from loss, but was entitled to no recompence. Hence the senatus consultum Pegasianum was enacted, by which two points were established, 1st, the heir might act if he pleased and retain his fourth: and 2ndly, if he did not choose to act, he might, on request made by his universal fidei commissary, or cestui que trust, and at his risk, be compelled to take it and perform the duties: the fidei commissary bearing all the expences. In this case the heir was not entitled to his fourth. This alteration again brought into play the stipulations emptæ et venditæ hæreditatis between the heir and the fidei commissary. Dig. 15. 1. 37. Dig. 50. 16. 59. 1. And also the stipulation partis et pro parte, where there was a partial trust of the heirship. See the Jurisconsult Paul. lib. 4. sentent. tit. 3. Ulpian in fragm. tit. 26. and the paraphrase of Theophilus on this title.

The stipulation partis et pro parte took place between the fidei commissary and the heir, when the latter acted under the senatus consultum Trebellianum, and took his remuneration of a fourth, or as it might happen to be. The stipulation emptæ et venditæ hæreditatis took place when the proceedings were under the senatus consultum Trebellianum, and the whole duties and privileges fell on the fidei commissary. These stipulations indeed were in use before the senatus consultum Trebellianum, but were brought up again by the senatus consultum Pegasianum.

Under these senatus consulta, the heir had his action of warranty against the fidei commissary ex stipulatu. But this occasioned so much controversy, that it gave rise to the ordinance of Justinian hereafter to be noticed under section 7 of this title.

§ 2. De fidei commissio hæredis scripti, p. 177. Vel pure, vel subconditione, &c. *This might be done in case of a [ *535 ] trust, because the heir nominally instituted, was sufficient to support the will.

Hæres instituitur. In England, the appointment of an executor, is as essential to a will, as the appointment of an heir under the Roman law. A will without an executor, will render necessary an administration cum testamento annexo. Swinburne, part 4. sect. 2.

Post quod senatus consultum ipse hæres.] The best way to explain this section, will be to transcribe a passage from the paraphrase of Theophilus, as it is translated by Gul. Otto Reitz; to whom the literary world is much obliged, for his late most complete edition of Theophilus in Greek and Latin, to which is added a great variety of notes by the editor and others. This edition consists of two volumes in 4to. and was published at the Hague, in the year 1751. "Post hoc autem hæres solus subiacebat oneribus hæreditatis, non vero fidei-commissarius: sed denique placuit, fidei-commissarium vicem obtinere legatiarii partiarum, id est, partem dimidiam accipientis. [ *536 ] *§ 6. Quibus casibus locus est senatus consulto, &c. p. 179. See 2 Black. Comm. p. 328.

§ 7. Pegasiani in Trebellianum, transfusio, p. 180. Justinian having thus blended the two senatus consulta, it followed, 1st, that although the heir was required to give up to the fidei commissary an heirship burdened with trust legacies beyond the dodrans or three fourths, still the heir might retain his fourth, improperly called the Quantum Trebellianum: for it was the Falcidian fourth extended to trusts, not by the Trebellian, but the Pegasian senatus consultum. 2ndly, All actions were divided in proportion to their shares: if the nominated or instituted heir retained his fourth, he bore one fourth of the expence: if he restored the whole heirship to the fidei commissary he bore no part. 3rdly, If he refused to take upon himself the duties of the heirship, he might be compelled so to do, on being indemnified by the fidei commissary.

Quam in fidei-commissarium.] The term cestui que trust, used at present in our own law, seems in general to convey the meaning of the word fidei-commissarius; but yet not precisely: it was therefore thought most proper to anglicise it in the translation, as we have no single English word, adequate to the sense of it: for a fidei-commissary, in the Roman law, denotes a person, who has a beneficial interest in an estate, which for a time is committed to the faith or trust of another. Harris.

§ 10. De fidei commissis ab intestato relictis, p. 183. Cum aliqui legata. That is, according to the former law: for by the law of Justinian, Cod. 6. 43. which puts legacies and trusts on the same footing, a legacy bequeathed by codicil, or otherwise included in the present section is good as a trust if not as a legacy.

§ 12. De probatione fidei-commissi, p. 183. De calumnia juraverit. Cod. 6. 42. 32.

Tit. XXIV. De singulis rebus per fidei-commissum, p. 185. The former title, as was observed, related to universal, the present relates to particular trusts. But since the ordinance of Justinian, the distinction is not of much import.

Quomvis a legatario.] This was the ancient law; but by Justinian's constitution [Cod. 6. t. 43.] legacies, and gifts in trust, are allowed to come in aid of each other reciprocally: so that, to use the words of the ordinance, omnia, quæ naturaliter insunt legatis, et fidei commissis inhæ-rere intelligantur; et contra, quicquid fidei committitur, hoc intelligatur esse legatum—from which it follows, that a legatary may now be charged with the payment of a legacy. Harris.

*§ 3. De verbis fidei commissorum, p. 186. See the above [*537] cited note to 1 Caines's N. York Rep. 85. and the note to Doe v. Aldridge, 4 Term Rep. 265.

Tit. XXV. Codicillorum origo, p. 187. Formerly codicils made before a will were void. After trusts began to be favoured, they were considered as sufficient to support a trust; if not actually repealed by a subsequent will. But when Justinian put legacies and trusts on the same footing, either the one or the other might be given by a codicil whether before or after a will, or by an intestate. But the institution of an heir can only be by will.

Codicillorum jus.] The word codicillus, or codicil, is a diminutive from codex, a book; and denotes any unsolemn last will, in which no heir or executor is named. "Codicilli dicti sunt parvi codices; id est, tabellæ ex codicibus aut lingo. Itaque, quemadmodum testamentum codex, appellatur,

"Codice sævo

"Hæredes vetat esse suos, &c. Juv. Sat. 10. quia testamentum in codicibus tantum scribebatur, sive tabulis grandioribus, ita voluntas suprema, minus solemnis aut plena, codicilli, et aliquando numero unitatis codicillus; propterea quod scribi solita erat in codicillis, id est, tabulis brevioribus et tenuioribus, ita factis, ut facile quo cuque modum esset, circumferri possent. Heineccio autem iudice, codicilli apud veteres sunt epistolæ vel scripturæ ad alios missæ: quia ergo codicilli plerumque perscribebantur in forma epistolarum, hinc et nomen retinuerunt." Vinn.

§ 1. Codicilli fieri possunt, vel ante, vel post, &c. p. 188.

Non tantum testamentum.] "It is granted of all, [says Swinburne] that a codicil may be made either by him, who died intestate, or by him, who died with a testament. If the codicil is made by a person, who dies intestate, the legacies therein must be paid by him, who shall "have the administration of the goods of the deceased, with the codicil or testamentary schedule annexed. And, if a codicil is made by him, who hath also made a regular testament, then, whether it was made before or after the testament, it is to be reputed as part and parcel of the testament, and it is to be performed as well as the testament; unless, being made before the testament, it appears to be revoked by the testament, or to be contrary to that, which is contained in the testament." Swin. part. 1. sec. 5.

"Codicilli et ab intestate confici possunt, et facto testamento. Ab intestato facti suis ipsis viribus nituntur et vicem testamenti exhibent;

"proinde quicumque intestati successor erit, sive legitimus, sive [ *538 ] * "honorarius etiam postea natus, codicillis relicata præstabit.

"Testamento autem condito, codicilli, quocunque tempore facti fuerint, ad testamentum pertinent, viresque ex eo capiunt, etiamsi in eo confirmati non sint; et infirmato testamento codicilli concidunt. Illud vero interest inter codicillos testamento nominatim confirmatos et non confirmatos, quod illis relicta etiam directo jure valent, veluti legata et libertates directo datæ; perindeque omnia habeantur, ac si in testamento scripta essent, excepta causa hæreditatis; at, quæ codicillis non confirmatis relicta sunt, sive verbis directis sive precariis, debentur jure fidei-commissi. Sed non est, quod de his amplius dicamus; cum enim confusa nunc sit legatorum et fidei-commissorum natura, dubitandum non est, quin legata, codicillis etiam non confirmatis data directo, nunc valeant." Vinn.

§ 2. Codicillis hæreditas directo dari non potest, p. 188.

But it can be given indirectly: as if a testator by codicil, charges his testamentary heirs to renounce in favour of the fidei-commissary of his codicil: Dig. de hered. inst. 77. Dig. de condit. instit. 10. And in one case there may be a direct substitution by codicil, as in Dig. ad senat. consult. Trebell. 76, where a direct pupillary substitution is converted into a trust benigna interpretatione. Heirship then, as it cannot regularly be given, cannot be taken away by codicil, which does not suffice for disinheritance direct or conditional.

Codicillis autem hæreditas. Groenewegen, in his book of abrogated laws, says, that the distinctions between testaments and codicils have now ceased to be observed almost every where. Eandem enim or ordinationis solemnitatem requirunt, atque ita suprema Hollandiæ curia censuit; et confusis eorum nominibus hæredi institutionem ad substantiam testamenti necessariam esse negant pragmatici; hinc quoque codicillis hæreditatem directo dari et adimi, ideoque et exhæredationem scribi, moribus nostris nil vetat. Groenew. de ll. abr. in Inst. 2. t. 21.

In England the appointment of an executor makes the only difference between a testament and a codicil; and this difference is little more than nominal; for whatever may be done by the one, may be also done by the other; so that a condition may be imposed, an estate may be given, or an heir disinherited, as well by codicil as by testament; and even lands may be disposed of by a codicil, if it is signed by the deceased, and attested by three witnesses in his presence, though the deceased left no testament; (for a codicil, in its true sense, denotes any testamentary schedule, and may stand singly, without relation to any other paper;) and, even where there is a testament, disposing of real estate, that testament may be altered or revoked by a codicil properly *executed. And, where personal estate only is bequeathed, the [ *539 ] same degree of proof, (and it has already been said what degree of proof is sufficient,) will establish either a testament or a codicil; and the one may revoke or confirm the other, either wholly or in part, according to its respective contents. Harris.

§ 3. De numero et solemnitate, p. 189.

A will, by the Roman law, is revoked by a subsequent will: a codicil is not revoked by a subsequent codicil. Hence there may be many valid codicils if they be not contradictory. A will is necessary to an heir, and an heir to a will, but it is not so with a codicil. The latter also required fewer ceremonies than a will. But a woman could not witness a codicil any more than a will.

Nullam solemnitatem. When it is said, that no solemnity is required in making a codicil, the compilers of the institutions must be understood to mean no extraordinary solemnity, as that of bringing seven witnesses to subscribe it, as in case of a testament: for it is necessary by the civil law, that a codicil should be supported by five witnesses: Cod. 6. t. 36. l. 8, which is the ordinary number required to attest several other translations. Cod. 4. t. 20. l. 28. But, in England, there is in this respect no distinction between a testament and a codicil; for either may be supported by an equal number of witnesses: — two are regularly required to a testament, and the same number is also required to a codicil; but, if either a testament or a codicil, contains a devise of a real estate, three witnesses are indispensably necessary by act of parliament. Vid. 29 Car. 2. cap. 3. Harris.

LIB. III. Titul. I. De hereditatibus, quæ ab intestato deferuntur, p. 191.

The preceding book treats of Wills: the present of Intestacies; and the order of Succession, in cases where a man dies leaving property, but no will.

The 118th Novel, which still remains a part of the law of England on this subject, in cases not otherwise decided or provided for, has altered the doctrine laid down in this book of the Institutes; so that a brief history of the changes which the Roman law has undergone on the subject of successions ab intestato, will be more than expedient. I am chiefly indebted for the present preliminary remarks, to those which Ferriere has prefixed to the third book of the Institutes.

By the law of the 12 tables, there were but two classes of legitimate heirs: sui hæredes, or proper heirs, and agnati, or paternal heirs, last succeeding only in default of the others.

[ *540 ] **A suus hæres*, was required to be a descendant in the first degree from the intestate in a direct line, and to have been in the power of the intestate, at the time of his decease; hence the children of a deceased son who shared with the uncle, were sui hæredes to the uncle by representation only. § de heredit. quæ ab intest. defer.

The prætors and the emperors altered the law of the twelve tables. The prætors called to the succession emancipated children per bonorum possessionem unde liberi, on condition that they brought into hotchpot the property acquired during emancipation; so that the whole might be subject to an equal division among all the children of the deceased. § 9 cod tit.

The imperial constitutions placed the children of deceased daughters in the rank of proper heirs, on condition that when they shared with proper heirs, they should take one third part less, and when with agnates, a fourth part less. § ult. ibid.

In default of proper heirs, agnates or collaterals on the male side, were called: as consanguine brothers, (born of the same father) paternal uncles and grand uncles, and their children, and other descendants of the paternal line, who had not quitted the family by any change of state.

Hence, in defect of proper heirs, the law of the twelve tables called the nearest agnate to the succession, without distinction of sex: herein observing, that there was no right of representation among agnates, but the nearest excluded all the rest; and also, that if the nearest agnate renounced, the succession did not go to the next in order, but escheated to the treasury.

The jurisprudence of the middle age, retrenched from the disposition of the 12 tables, excluding all females from the succession, except sisters, and preferring more distant males. Vid. Vinn. § 3. de legitima agnat. success.

As the law of the 12 tables called up the nearest agnate only, if there were none such, or he renounced, the property escheated. But the prætorian law, moderated this rigour, and in these last mentioned cases, admitted the nearest cognates per bonorum possessionem, unde cognati: and still further, in defect of agnates and cognates, the husband or wife surviving, succeeded to the exclusion of the treasury, per bonorum possessionem unde vir et uxor.

According to the above account, the father was not considered as agnate to his emancipated son; but Justinian by the last law of Cod. de emancip. liber. disregarded the circumstance of emancipation. Also the mother could not rank with the agnates of the son, nor the *daughter with the agnates of the mother; but the prætor [ *541 ] admitted them reciprocally to succession ex ordine cognatorum puta per bonorum possessionem unde cognati. But by the Senatus Consultum Trebellianum, a mother of several children was ranked in the first degree of assignation to her son, in default of 1st, proper heirs of the deceased: 2ndly, the father of a deceased son or daughter: 3rdly, the consanguine brother of the deceased, i. e. by the same father: the mother was admitted jointly with a consanguine sister, (a sister by the same father); but this underwent some changes, which will be noted.

Finally, by the orphitian Senatus Consultum, under Marcus Aurelius, the sons and daughters of a mother, were preferred to all the agnates of the mother, without excepting even brothers born of the same fathers.

These Senatus Consulta, regarded also the claims of children born out of wedlock.

These remarks relate to the five first titles of the present Book of the Institutes.

We come next to succession in cases of Intestacy, under the 118th Novel, which establishes three degrees of legitimate succession, descendants, ascendants, and collaterals. And first of Descendants.

It calls to the succession all legitimate children without distinction; so that sons and daughters, grand-sons and grand-daughters exclude uncles or others in the ascending line, except as to the property acquired by the deceased for the father by virtue of the paternal power: for the usufruct granted to the father of certain property acquired by and belonging to the son, was preserved to the father. Without considering also any difference of state or quality of such children, whether under power or not at the death of the deceased; without regard to difference of sex or age, and of course neglecting all consideration of primogeniture. Without regard also, whether the descendants claimed from the male or female side, and without consideration of degree; enquiring only, whether they were in the direct line descending.

This Novel altered the former law in the following points.

1st. In making no difference, whether the deceased were under power as a filius familias, emancipated, or pater familias, at the time of his decease: under the previous law, the uncle succeeded to an intestate filius familias, in exclusion of the children, except in military and quasi military property; peculium castrense et quasi castrense; as the Institute remarks in the title Quibus non est permissum facere testamentum: and all adventitious property belonged by right of peculium to [ *542 ] *the father of the deceased, though he left children. This Novel, cut off the claim of the uncle except as to the mere usufruct of adventitious property.

2ndly. In admitting to equal participation, male and female children without distinction: though this change, as to emancipated children, consisted in making this admission a part of the civil law instead of the prætorian law, which admitted them per bonorum possessionem unde li- beri cum onere collationis.

3rdly. In admitting equally descendants from the intestate, whether in the male or female line; and taking away the diminution of share before required from the latter, when they were called in conjunction with proper heirs: and directing this succession to be, not per capita but per stirpes.

As to the fourth and last point, the admission of descendants without regarding the prerogative of degree; this does not differ from the former practice respecting the legitimate succession of descendants. The right of children to represent or stand in the place of their deceased parent, having been allowed before that Novel was enacted.

As to the right of representation, which was never limited in the direct line, it may be observed,

1st, That the children of one who has renounced the succession to his father, or been disinherited, could not succeed to the uncle, who left children of the first degree, or grand-children from a child deceased: for this right of representation is derived through the father, where it is cut off. But when the uncle leaves no children or grand-children, then the nephews and nieces do not succeed in the right of their father, but their own. 2ndly, The children of a person civiliter mortuus succeed to an uncle, although they share with their uncles and aunts in the succesion. Dig. 1. 6. 7. 3rdly, Children in the first degree succeed to equal portions.

The next chapter of the 118th Novel, relates to the succession of Ascendants, and embraces two cases. 1st, where fathers and mothers alone succeed to their children. 2ndly, Where the deceased hath left relations in the ascending line, with brothers and sisters of the whole blood, or connected by each side; ex utriusque parentibus conjuncti.

As to the first case. Fathers and mothers and all ascendants, exclude all collaterals, except brothers and sisters; although such collaterals may be in a nearer degree: partly in consideration that they gave existence to the deceased; partly from considerations of natural reverence (pieta- tis intuitu;) and partly as some consolation for the loss. The [ *543 ] paternal ascendants were preferred by the Trebellian **senatus* consult; but by this Novel, ascendants on the one side and the other were equally admitted. If there was a father only, or a mother only, such would succeed in exclusion of an ascendant in a more distant degree. Also, if there were no fathers or mothers, but several ascendants in equal degree, the property was not therefore always equally divided between them: but one half was given to the ascendants being representatives of the father, whatever their number, and the other half to the ascendants representing the mother. For had father and mother been living, they would have succeeded equally. Thus an uncle on the father's side, will take as much as an uncle and an aunt together on the maternal side.

Hence where succession is regulated by this chapter of the Novel, no distinction it made between property that came by the father's side or by the mother's: and the rule paterna paternis, materna maternis does not hold: but a maternal uncle will succeed to property descended from or bestowed by the father, equally with an uncle on the paternal side.

Nor is difference of sex regarded under this rule of succession.

As to the second case under this second chapter, where ascendant relations concur with brothers and sisters of the whole blood, they succeed with them per capita: and it is only brothers and sisters thus doubly connected, on each side, that do partake with near ascendants, exceptis inquit Justinianus solis fratribus ex utroque parente conjunctis. The father in this case acquiring his own proportion in full right, cannot claim the usufruct of his children's portion. But when there is no father or mother, brothers and sisters do not exclude uncles or aunts or other ascendants in default of uncles and aunts, but concur with, or partake in the succession with them, per capita.

Suppose three brothers of the deceased; an uncle and aunt on the paternal side; and an uncle on the maternal side; each brother will have a sixth; the paternal uncle and aunt a sixth and a half between them, and the ascendants the other half between them.

Ascendants a second or third degree distant, exclude brothers and sisters connected on one side only, or the half blood. This is a conclusion from the passage of the text si vero cum ascendentibus inveniuntur fratres et sorores ex utriusque parentibus conjunctis (of the whole blood) cum proximis gradu ascendentibus vocabantur. Of course, if these only are called, the half blood are not called.

According to this second chapter of the 118th Novel, nephews of the whole blood, do not partake with ascendants, when the father of the deceased is dead, although there should be brothers of the whole blood. This however was changed by the first chapter [ *544 ] of the 127th Novel, which enacted that when there were brothers of the whole blood, the nephews of the whole blood might be admitted to concur with such brothers and with ascendants. But as they come in only as representing their father, they take not per capita but per stirpes; and succeed to that portion only which their father would have claimed, if he had been alive.

As to the third chapter of the 118th Novel on the succession of Collaterals.

1st, If the deceased leave neither descendants nor ascendants, the succession falls to his brothers and sisters of the whole blood, in exclusion of the half blood. See Nov. 84. But in case of brothers and sisters of the half blood only, they are admitted to equal shares.

2ndly, Nephews of the whole blood succeed with their own uncles and aunts of the whole blood (germani;) but by stock only per stirpes: for they succeed solely as representatives of their parent.

3rdly, Nephews of the whole blood, exclude those of the half blood, as a brother of the whole blood would exclude nephews and nieces of the half blood.

5thly, If the deceased left neither brothers nor sisters, nephews or nieces, the other collateral relations are admitted in the order and degree of their relationship, without regard to sex. The ancient difference between agnation and cognation in this respect being abrogated by the 4th chap. of this Novel.

The right of representation granted by this third chapter of the 118th Novel to nephews and nieces, and to no other collaterals, takes place in the three following cases only.

1st, When nephews and nieces concur or share with a brother or sister of their deceased uncle or aunt: in this case they succeed per stirpes. The former law admitted a right of representation among collaterals, in no case. See § 4 of Instit. de legitim. agnat. success. This being in fact a new law, was construed strictly. Hence, when nephews of different brothers and sisters succeeded to their uncle or aunt who had left neither brother or sister, the division was made per capita, and not per stirpes.

[ *545 ] *And as it is usually held, representation does not take place in the collateral line, unless in favour of the children of brothers and sisters, when they share in the succession with their uncle or aunt, the brother and sister of the deceased.

2dly, Representation takes place when the nephews of the whole blood, are preferred to brothers and sisters of the half blood: which could not take place but by representation; for a nephew is in the third degree, and brothers and sisters in the second.

3dly, When there is an uncle and a nephew of the deceased. Hence by the 3rd chap. of the 118th Novel, Justinian would have the nephew exclude the uncle, which could only be done under the privilege of representation, which brings the nephew a degree nearer than the great uncle, who is but uncle to the deceased. This also is an innovation on the former law.

The preference of the whole blood, is a privilege accorded by this Novel, to certain collateral relations, and no doubt a reasonable one. Duplex enim vinculum quod est in fratre germano fortius est unico illo quod intercedit inter fratres consanguineos aut uterinos. The fourth chapter takes away the distinction between agnates and cognates. When an unmarried person dies without relations ascending, descending, or collateral, his property escheats to the public treasury. But a legitimate unbroken marriage, protects the succession to the survivor. This privilege of the Exchequer or public treasury proceeds from the want of an heir, Cod. 10. 10. 1. 4. Creditors in this case have a lien on the property. Dig. 49. 14. 11. If the deceased died a member of any lawful company or college, that shall succeed before the exchequer. Cod. 6. 62. t.

Succession being not a natural but a civil right, varies in almost every country. The rule paterna paternis, materna maternis, was adopted in France, Loix civiles. Tom. 3 præf. § 4. and in England 1 Co. Litt 13. a.

So in England, the whole blood universally excludes the half blood, and succession ascending by right line takes place in no instance. It is of little consequence what regulations society adopts on this subject, provided they be clear, and of easy application. The variation in England dependant upon feudal principles whose reason has long ago ceased to operate—and upon the right of primogeniture which, in this country, we have discarded, still gives a perceptible tinge to much of the law of descent and succession on this continent. Though it must be allowed that the statute of distributions of this state, is founded as much on principles of natural equity, as can reasonably be expected. *For common cases, the state of Pennsylvania [ *546 ] has made as fair and judicious a will, as men usually make for themselves.

The 118th Novel will be found at the end of the text, and I shall insert at the close of this note, a translation of those sections of it, that bear immediately on the present subject.

In the mean time, however, I am strongly tempted to insert the following entertaining and useful remarks of Dr. Taylor (Civ. Law, p. 537.) on the subject of succession ab intestato : an author, who, though he may be desultory and inmethodical, as Gibbon complains he is, presents his reader notwithstanding, with notes of great learning, great taste, and great instruction.

“The succession into the estates of intestates is one of the most uncertain points of law. I call it uncertain, 1st, because there are not found perhaps two nations upon earth, that have fixed upon the same method of conveyance : and 2dly, because there is scarce one, but what has at some time or other differed even from itself. With the Romans particularly, the distribution, which prevailed for some time, took a different turn, even while the Emperor was compiling his body of Law, and the system of the Novels (the CXVIIIth particularly) entirely defeats the doctrine laid down in several titles of the third Book of the Institutes, where that matter was considered, and meant to be established. With the Novels it was settled.

To contemplate therefore this question, the stream of nature conducts us first to view succession in the order of Descendants. This was the natural course, and the general direction of Providence. And be it observed, that Natural Law is said by some to be interested no farther, that in the succession of those, who claim from under us : and that Ascendants and collaterals are called in by Civil Law. Which yet by others is denied, and, I think, with sufficient reason. However the primary distribution of nature is very apparent.

Cum Ratio Naturalis, quasi Lex quaedam tacita, liberis parentum hereditatem addiceret velut ad debitam successionem eos vocando, propter quod et in Jure Civili suorum heredem nomen eis inductum est, ac ne judicio parentis, nisi meritis de sauis summoveri ab ea successione possunt. D. 48. 20. 7.

The great rule of succession among the Romans, in the method which lies before us, viz. the succession of descendants, is comprised in these few reflections ; That (1) descendants, while they last, exclude all other relations whatsoever : That (2) there is no respect had to primogeniture, and (3) no preference in regard to sex : That there [ *547 ] *is (4) no exclusion of any ever so remote degree : and lastly (5) That the estate of the intestate makes so many general shares, as that there are distinct heads in his immediate descendants.

I. For, as this downward direction was the primary and principal recommendation of natural law, it followed, that inheritances could never revert, or be thrown upwards (inter Ascendentes), nor be turned aside (inter Collaterales), as long as any were to be found in the line below, or that of descendants, in infinitum. For the principle, upon which this succession rested, was the Jus Repraesentationis, which cannot be fairly or reasonably imagined in any other line than in that, to which we give existence. There is something of successive in the idea of representation, something which looks like keeping up an order or a series; and though to brothers it may be applied in some sense, to fathers and grandfathers it can be applied in little or none.

II. III. The second and third particulars, viz. the disregard of sex and primogeniture, in which these people differed from most others, as well before, as after them, are of that arbitrary consideration, that little remains to be observed upon that disposition. But natural equity has a great stroke in the two last, and calls for some regard:

IV. V. That descendants of the second, third or fourth degree, should be raised to a kind of level with those of the first, and not stand excluded, even while some of the first remain: That children of a remote descent should inherit along with the immediate one (I suppose the way cleared before them) is agreeable to truth and justice. The grandchildren etc. of Sempronius by a son that is gone, stand to Sempronius in the place of that son. They would have had their shares through that father, if he had lived; and represent him therefore, or succeed to his rights, now he is removed.

And hence, because many children may succeed into one father's rights, it follows, that the Jus Repraesentationis, which transmits the estate of Sempronius to his immediate descendants, shall undergo a considerable alteration in those descents or generations that follow after. Though Sempronius may be represented by any number of children indifferently and cut into so many shares accordingly, yet will each of those children be represented by their whole families; not by so many distinct heads of children, as Sempronius was, but by all their children collectively (let their number be what it will) laying, as it were, their heads together to form one common stock. For all those grandchildren gregatim, have that right in common, not separate to each

*which their father had to himself. And this is called successio in stirpes: the other when all share alike, in Capita.

Thus in the scheme,

The estate of Sempronius A will be divided into two equal parts, and B and C will each be heirs ex semisse. But supposing that C is gone before his father, then shall B still be heres ex semisse, and D and E ex quadrante, each. Or put the case that C and D should both be gone, and D be represented by F G and H then will B as before be heres ex semisse, E ex quadrante, and F O and H will succeed each of them ex uncia. Or put the case, that E is dead, without issue also, then will F, G, and H, be each of them heres ex sextante.

But, taking leave of descendants, supposing that Sempronius dies intestate, without heirs of his body, we are then directed to the consideration of Ascendants, Though this may be against natural order, it is not against natural affection. And I think therefore that doctrine is not to be admitted, which maintains, that parents have no right to the goods of their children, dying childless and intestate, unless they had been relieved by the civil law. We have seen what title the indigent father has to a maintenance, and the same way of reasoning will serve in the one case as well as the other. See Gothofred. ad Nov. 1 Praef § 2.

And when St. Paul said; 2 Cor. XII. 14. The children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children, it is spoken with a view to the ordinary course of providence. It is the rule, without regard to the exception.

But I observed, that this is up the stream, and against the common order of succession. And the ancients always gave it that melancholy consideration. We find it a constant matter of complaint in their funeral sorrows, when such calamities befell them. Turbato [ *549 ] ordine mortalitatis—**parentes filio contra ordinem*—et quod miserrimum est mater fecit filiae—ordine retrogado defuncto—parentes male indicantibus fati supertites—memoriam posuerunt contra votum—quod filius patri facere debuerat ipse fecit—aequius enim fuerat vos hoc mihi fecisse—quae prior debui mori DCLXXXVI. 9—are the common expressions upon the occasion.

To give these considerations some little attention :

This is the language of the Poet Ovid. 1. Heriod. 101.

Di precor hoc jubeant, ut, euntibus ordine fati,

Ille meos oculos comprimat, ille tuos.

And of the lawyer also : D. 5. 2. 15. pr.

Nam etsi parentibus non debetur filiorum hereditas, propter vetum parentum, et naturalem erga filios caritatem, turbato tamen ordine mortalitatis, non minus parentibus, quam liberis pie relinqui debet.

Thus the inscriptions:

ERANT UT PARENTIBUS ISTA PARARET

Gruter. DCXLIX. 4.

Another remarkable expression is contra votum, as we have just seen from Papinian, D. 5. 2. 15. pr. Add. 29. 4. 26. 1.—38. 6. 7. 1.—38. 2. 50.

2. And so the inscriptions run.

Thus we read in Plutarch in Vita Catonis Maj.

Ἡ τῆς μητρὸς ΚΑΤΑΠΑΝ, οὐ ΕΥΧΗΝ ἡγεῖται τὸ, τῶν τε υἱῶν λῆς ἀνολέσκει.

Hujus Mater, execrationem, non votum, duxit, ipsum superstitem relinquare.

And it is not to be doubted, but that, from this strain of affection, and this parental superstition, that very word has gained its signification.

Flautus begins his Asinaria with a memorable passage:

The superstition in this passage, between the case of the son, and of the wife, is considerably different.

And lastly, this leads me to recommend a new word to the Lexicons, (I do not recommend the age of it):

NOTA POST.

Gruter DCLXXXIV. 6.

Præposteritas is a very uncommon expression, and I believe a barbarous one. But the idea it represents, is very suitable to our subject.

It is upon all these accounts, that the succession of the parent into the estate of the child is always attended with these unfavourable expressions, Luctuosa Hereditas, C. 6. 25. 9. Luctuosa Portio, C. 3. 28. 28. Triste Lucrum, C. 6. 59. 11. Duræ Fortunæ solatium, C. 6. 56. 4. Tristis Successio, Inst. 3. 3. 2. And it was imagined by lawyers to pass in Orbitatis solatium There is a law often quoted upon this occasion :

Non sic Parentibus Liberorum, ut Liberis Parentium debetur Hereditas : Parentes ad bona liberorum Ratio miserationis admittit, liberos naturaesimul et parentium commune votum. D. 38. 6. 7. 1.

To settle therefore the rule of successions in Linea Ascendente, there are two cases to be supposed possible.

[ * 551 ] *I. Either there are no collaterals besides, II. or there are.

I. If there are no collaterals, then the succession of the intestate's estate, dying, as we suppose, childless, reverts in that melancholy order, we have been just observing, and falls to his father and mother, or to either of them surviving, to the exclusion of everybody above.

For it must be observed, that here is no Jus repræsentationis ; which I observed followed the order of nature and of blood, and is constantly imagined downwards. Therefore, contrary to what was found to be the rule in descendants, here every nearer degree excludes the remoter, and even the mother shall exclude the grandfather.

II. But if we suppose collaterals to be left along with ascendants, the succession shall be divided. And put the case, that there is left a father and mother, a brother and sister, all the four shall succeed in equal portions. However, some caution is necessary to be observed, and these rules are not to be forgotten :

(1). Collaterals never can exclude ascendants, even in the remotest degree. For the preference is with the ascendants; and collaterals can only share, not exclude.

(2) The collaterals that share with the defendants must be brothers, or brothers' children at farthest. No one can be admitted to a dividend beyond that degree. For, as before, the preference is properly with the ascendants; brothers were not called in till late in law, viz. by the CXVIIIth Novel, and brothers' children still later, viz. by the CXXVIIth.

(3) The succession of ascendants alone, of ascendants joined with brothers and sisters of the whole blood (for the half blood is excluded) is, as was observed, in Capita: but the succession of brothers and sisters children, in concurrence, is in Stirpes, because they represent their parenti, and many may represent one.

The last consideration regards

Collaterals. And here we suppose, that no one is left either in the ascending or descending line whatever. I can imagine

1. Brothers and sisters alone.
2. Brothers and sisters together with brothers and sisters children.
3. Brothers and sisters children alone.

1. Brothers and sisters alone, of the whole blood, succeed in Capita, to the exclusion of, the half blood,

2. Brothers and sisters children, concurring with brothers and sisters, succeed in stirpes.

3. Nephews alone succeed in Capita, non in Stirpes: for they succeed (now) in their own right, and not by representation.

*The half-blood succeeds for want of the whole blood, [ *552 ] regularly and uniformly, in the manner of the whole blood.

And because the half-blood is called into the succession in failure of the whole, it will follow, that a nephew of the half-blood shall exclude an uncle of the whole. Because the uncle's right only commences, when representation ceases.

In a concurrence of half-blood, viz. when brothers, etc. by the father's side succeed along with brothers by the mother's side, the rule of law is, that they succeed separately into the goods of the separate sides: and into the common goods in common.

If none of these are given, then the next relation indifferently, succeeds in order of proximity. For the Jus Repraesentationis is specific, not general: it is extended to brother's children, but goes no further. Thus the uncle of the intestate would be excluded by the nephew, because the nephew by this right of representation is, as it were, in the entail: But the uncle of the intestate would not be excluded by a son of that nephew. For the right of representation being now stopt, the uncle is nearer in degree, than the brother's grandson.

If there be two next kindred of equal degree, they are equally entitled to the succession, whether on the father's side, or on the mother's and succeed in capita.

These are the general principles of Justinian's last regulation upon this head. But in many of these distributions which stand so far removed from natural right : where the stream of blood must run but cool and languid : where it is impossible to balance the affection towards one relation with the affection towards another, by principles of nature ; there, human invention has insinuated its assistance, and that is one great reason of what I have observed above, viz. that no two nations can ever be found that agree in these delicate circumstances.

In the English law again, a great deal depends upon the distinction into real and personal estates, which the Roman law knew nothing of. This was agreeable to the genius of our ancestors, who distributed their lands in fee, and expected some emolument in return. As the Saxons therefore were perpetually loading descents with services, and of consequence were led to direct those descents where those services were likely to be maintained with the greatest vigor and advantage : This, I say, is the fairest reason, and looks likely to be the true one, why the father cannot succeed (in this kingdom) into the landed estate of his son. Because he cannot be supposed to be in a condition to perform the service that is expected from it. It was one reason given in the feudal law, for the exclusion of daughters. Quia Filia servitia præstare non possunt.

[ *553 ] *I have here exhibited what I professed, viz. an account how this distribution stood by civil law : I am sensible it deserves a fuller consideration, and it might be useful, to bring it into comparison with the distribution of other states, who have laid themselves out upon the equity of assigning the order of successions ; In which some have been pretty successful. But of this hereafter ; if that hereafter should ever come, when I shall be called upon to improve these elements into a system, and these institutes into a digest. Taylor.

NOVEL 118th.

PREFACE : Declaring the provisions of former laws on this subject, consolidated and re-enacted in the present Novel, under the heads of the succession of relations in the descending line ; the succession of relations in the ascending line : and the succession of collateral relations.

CHAP. 1. Of the succession of descendants.

Every relation of a deceased person in the (right) line descending, of whatever sex or degree, whether related by the father's or by the mother's side, whether under power or free, is preferred to every relation in the ascending line, or collateral. Although the deceased were himself under power, yet his children, of whatever sex or degree, shall be preferred to the parent under whose power the deceased was, in respect of that property which, by our laws, was not acquired for the parent. For the usufruct of such property we reserve to the parent; but with this proviso, that if any such descendant should die leaving children, such children or other descendant shall succeed in place of their proper parent, whether they be under power of the deceased at the time of his death, or not; taking in such case, that portion of the property of the deceased intestate, which their own parent would have been entitled to, had he been living; which succession our predecessors have denominated per stirpes, or by stock. (§ 6. Inst. de heredit. ab intestato. 2 Gaius 8. § 7. Cod. de suis. l. 2.) In this order of succession we make no enquiry as to the degree, but call up grand-children generally to the succession concurrently with the sons and daughters of a son or a daughter previously deceased; and this without consideration of sex, or whether they sprang from the paternal or maternal side, whether they be free (sui juris,) or still under power. Thus we have enacted as to descendants, and we now proceed to ascendants. (N. B. By throwing aside all considerations whether the claimants in succession sprang from the male or female side, the old law was changed. Nov. 18. 4. ult.—Cod. de suis. 9. 13. which is thus repealed. Inst. de heredit. ab intest. § 4.—Cod. Theod. de legit. hered.

[ *554 ]

If the deceased hath left no descendants, his father or mother, or any other surviving relatives, in the right line ascending, shall succeed in preference to all collaterals, except brothers of the whole blood, as shall be noticed presently. If there be many ascendants, let the nearest in degree be preferred, whether male or female, whether descended from the paternal or maternal line. If there be many in the same degree, let the inheritance be equally divided between them, so as that the heirs on the paternal side, however numerous, shall receive the one half, and those on the maternal side the other half. Should there be brothers and sisters of the deceased living, connected with him by descent from both parents,* as well as ascendant relations, let them be concurrently called to the succession. If the ascendants should be father or mother, let the inheritance be divided between them and brothers (and sisters) that each shall have an equal part. Nor shall the parent claim an usufruct of the portion assigned to the brothers and sisters,† for in lieu thereof we have * ἀμφιθαλεῖς ἀδελφοί brothers of the whole blood: germani. ὁμοπαῖδες by the same father; consanguinei [and sometimes improperly germani.] ὁμομητρίοι by the same mother, uterini.

† This repeals Cod. de legitim. heredit. l. 13. and Cod. com. success. l. ult. in fin.

by the present law assigned him his own share of the succession in full property. No distinction is to be made between persons thus called to the inheritance, whether they be male or female, or connected with the deceased by the father's or mother's side: or whether the deceased were sui juris or under power when he died. We proceed therefore to the consideration of collateral succession, which relates either to agnates or cognates.

CHAP. 3. On the succession of collaterals. If therefore the deceased hath left neither descendant or ascendant relations, we first call to the inheritance brothers and sisters born of the same father and the same mother, (i. e. of the whole blood,) whom we before called in concurrence with the parent.

If brothers and sisters of the whole blood be wanting, we call in brothers (and sisters) of the half blood, whether on the father's side or the mother's side.

But if the deceased left brothers, and also the children of a deceased brother or sister, these last will be called to the inheritance concurrently with their uncle or aunt of the whole blood, and will be entitled [ *555 ] to the same portion whatever it be, that their parent would have been entitled to if alive.

Hence, if a brother be dead, leaving children, and he was of the whole blood, while the living brothers may be of the half blood only, those children are preferred to their uncles, although they are in the third degree; and this whether the surviving uncles (or aunts) be connected in relationship with the deceased, by the father's side, or the mother's side; in like manner as their parent, if living, would have been preferred. Contrariwise, if the living brother be of the whole blood to the deceased, and the dead brother be a half brother only, the children of the latter are excluded, as their parent also would have been if alive. For the privilege of representation thus given, is conceded only to this class of relations, and extended no farther, than that the children of the deceased brothers or sisters, may succeed to that which their parent, if living, would have been entitled to. We confer this benefit on the children of brothers, when brought into consideration with their own uncles and aunts, whether of the paternal or maternal side.

If surviving relations in the ascending line should be called to the inheritance conjointly with brothers and sisters of the deceased, in that case we do not permit the children of a deceased brother or sister to be called in, even although their parent was of the whole blood.

Whenever, therefore, this privilege of representation is given to the children of a (deceased) brother or sister, that they should succeed in the place of their parent, and being in the third degree should be called concurrently with those who are in the second degree, it is manifestly for this reason, because they are preferred to uncles or aunts of the deceased, whether paternal or maternal, who also count no higher than the third degree.

If the deceased hath left neither brothers, nor the children of a brother, collaterals are called to the inheritance according to the respective degrees they occupy, the nearest in degree being preferred to the more remote. If many persons be found related in the same degree, let the inheritance be divided equally between them according to their number, which our laws denominate, a division per capita.

CHAP. 4. Takes away the distinction between agnates and cognates.

CHAP. 5. Relates to the legitimate tutelage of children.

CHAP. 6. On the authority of this law.

(I sent to Philadelphia the pages of Harris' edition that contained the 118th Novel, to have the Greek printed there. Hence, not having it before me, I inadvertently translated that novel anew.)

Alterations made by the 127th Novel.

We never regret any alteration in our laws, that may be of benefit to our subjects. We remember to have enacted (by the 118th Novel) that if a deceased person left brothers alive, and also children of a brother *who died before him, those children should be [ *556 ] called to the inheritance equally with their uncles, filling the place of their father, and entitled to his portion. But that if the deceased left any relations in the (right or direct) ascending line, together with brothers of the whole blood, and also children of a brother previously deceased, we directed the brothers of the deceased to be called to the inheritance concurrently with the surviving relations in the (right) line ascending, and excluded the dead brother's children.

CHAP. 1st. For the purpose of correcting this, we enact, that if a deceased person shall leave a living relation in the (right) ascending line, and brothers also who may be called concurrently with such relation, and children also of a brother previously deceased, the latter shall be called in, concurrently with the rest, and succeed to the portion that their own parent, if alive, would have been entitled to. This we decree in respect of the children of a previously deceased brother of the whole blood: directing that they shall occupy the same rank, whether called concurrently with their uncles only, or with their uncles concurrently with a parent of the deceased in the ascending line.

The rest of the Novel does not relate to this subject.

LIB. III. Titul. l. Definitio intestati, p. 191. Heirship is the succession to the universal right of the deceased. Dig. 50. 62. A testamentary heirship takes effect presently on the death of the testator: a legitimate or lawful heirship, (cast by operation of law) takes place so soon as it is ascertained that the deceased died intestate.

An heir under the Roman law, is properly likened to an executor under our law, but executors separate from heirs were also known under the later periods of the civil law, and their history is slightly but well touched by Dr. Brown. 1 Civ. Law, 310.

§ 1. Primus ordo succedentium, &c. p. 191. This law of the twelve tables is not extant.

§ 2. Qui sunt sui hæredes, p. 191. Naturalis sint. Natural children, do not, in the expressions of the Roman law, mean bastards, but the actual children by procreation of the person spoken of, in contradistinction to adopted children. Cod. de natur. lib. l. l. 10. 11. Natural or illegitimate children, in the English sense of the word, could not be proper heirs, quia pater eorum incertus est, and pater est quem justæ nuptiæ demonstrant.

Illegitimate children, born of a concubine, not of promiscuous copulation, or of adulterous or incestuous commerce, might, under the twelve tables, be instituted heirs by the will of the father to whatever portion he thought fit: this was afterwards restrained to cases where [ *557 ] *no lawful wife or legitimate children were left, and confined to a sixteenth of the whole estate, between the mother and the children. Arcadius and Honorius, directed that where a deceased left a wife and legitimate children, he could not dispose by will of more than one ounce among his illegitimate children, or a twelfth of the As, or whole estate: but if the lawful wife and children were dead, he might bequeath one fourth of the whole among the concubine and her children by him. But this also, was altered by Justinian. Ferriere.

§ 3. Quomodo sui hæredes fiunt, p. 193.

A morte parentum.] Persons are said to be sui hæredes, or proper heirs, quod non alienarum sed suarum, sive propriarum, quodammodo rerum hæredes esse videantur; i. e. because they seem to be the heirs of their own property, and not the heirs of another's: for a proper heir is, in the life time of his parent, the co-heir or partner with that parent in his possessions: so that a son, who is a proper heir, does not acquire a new property at the death of his father, but only possesses in a fuller manner what was before vested in him. Vinny, h. t. Harris.

Hence, sui hæredes are seized ipso jure on the decease of the parent, and if they die before they act, their rights are transmitted to their own heirs; whereas in other cases the rule is, that hereditas nondum adita non transmittitur. They were also, not only proper sui, but necessary heirs, hæredes necessarii; for they became so of course, without any previous consent of their own. See Instit. lib. 2. tit. 19. § 2. together with Dig. 28. 5. and Dig. 29. 2.

§ 6. De divisione hereditatis inter suos hæredes, p. 194.

Item ex duobus filiis.] By the civil law, representation takes place in infinitum in the right line descending; and therefore it follows, according *to that law, that, when any person dies, [ *558 ] leaving grand-children by sons or daughters, who died in his life-time, such grand-children, though equal in degree and unequal in their number in regard to their respective stocks, will divide the estate of their grand-father per stirpes, i. e. according to their stocks: for example, if A die worth nine hundred aurei, and intestate, leaving only grand-children by three sons, already dead, to wit, three grand-children by one son, five by another, and six by another, then each of these classes of grand-children would be intitled to a third; that is, to three hundred aurei, no regard being paid to that class, in which there were most persons. In hoc casu, (says Vinnius,) maxime conspicua est vis representationis; licet enim omnes hic pari gradu sint, ut proprio singuli jure succedere posse videatur, tamen postquam semel placuit, nepotes in locum patris sui demortui, aliave ratione exuti jure sui hæredis, succedere, non debuit hoc jus ex accidenti aliquo variari, puta ut soli nepotes ex diversis filiis et numero inæquales, seu pauciores cum pluribus ex hac vel illa stirpe concurrentes, in capita hæreditatem dividerent. Cod. 6. t. 55. l. 2. Quare sic in universum recte definiemus, descendentes ex masculis omnes, qui sunt diversarum stirpium, quantumvis ejusdem omnes gradus, in stirpes, non in capita, succedere. But, in England, although representation may also be said to extend in infinitum in the right line descending, yet this I apprehend must be understood to be in those cases only, where representation is absolutely necessary to prevent the exclusion of grand-children, great-grand-children, &c. For example therefore, if Titius dies leaving a son, and D, E, F, his grand-children by another son, who died before Titius, then the surviving son would take one moiety, and the grand-children D, E, F, would take the other, as the representatives of their deceased father: for in this case representation would be necessary; because, if representation was not allowed, the grand-children of Titius, being in a more remote degree, than his son, would be totally excluded; which would be highly unjust. But, if Titius dies, and leaves only grand-children by two sons, already dead; e. g. three grand-children by one son, and six by the other, then representation would not only not be necessary, (as all the persons are in the same degree, so that none of them can be excluded;) but it would occasion a very unequal distribution of the effects; namely, of only half the estate to six of the grand-children, and of half to the other three, which does not seem agreeable either to the sense, or even the words of the statute. See 22, 23, Car. 2, cap. 10. Harris.

§ 10. Si emancipatus se dederit in adoptionem, p. 196. Dig. 38. 8. 4.

Ad liberos, an ad agnatos.] For the arrogator, by retaining under his power the emancipated son of the deceased, might make room for the agnati of the deceased; or, by emancipating his arrogated son, who was the natural son of the deceased, the arrogator might exclude the agnati; so that thus the right of inheritance would depend upon the will and pleasure of a stranger, which the law would not permit. As by the constitution of Antoninus Pius, a fourth part also was to be left to a boy under puberty, taken into a family by arrogation. Vinn.

*§ 15. Descendentibus ex fœminis, p. 200. Neither the [ *560 ] law of the twelve tables nor the prætorian law, admitted descendants by the female line to the succession of a natural grand-father, or other maternal ascendant: for never having been under power of such ascendant they could never have been proper heirs. Nor could the prætors assist them as he did emancipated children bonorum possessione unde liberi, which proceeded on the fiction that emancipated children remained under power of their natural father: this fiction could not be extended to females, for the rule was, that children quoad nomen et familiam, followed the condition of the father. Hence natural grand-children were only called to the succession of their grand-father as cognates, and after the agnates were exhausted; this was the case, even after the Orphitian senatus-consult, had called sons and daughters to the legitimate succession of their mother.

The emperors mentioned in the text, admitted grand-children of either sex to the succession, whether descended ex filio or ex filia. Cod. Theod. de legit. heredit. l. 4. copied nearly by Justinian. Cod. de suis et legit. hered. l. 9. These emperors, however, so far leaned toward ancient usage, that they defalked the portion of natural grand-children, by making that portion one third less than their parent would have had, when they were called conjointly with sons and daughters. And as persons frequently died, without leaving either proper heirs by the law of the twelve tables, or by the prætorian fiction, or legitimate heirs under the Orphitian law, if the question was as to a succession to a deceased person of the maternal side, the agnates with whom the cognates concurred, were entitled to a fourth part of the property of the succession. This was corrected by Justinian. Cod. de suis et legit. hered. who put agnates and cognates on the same footing.

As to the defalcation of a third from the portion of cognates, when the grand-children descended from a daughter, succeeded concurrently with sons and daughters to a deceased in the maternal line, that was not corrected till the 118th Novel, ch. 1. by which children were called without distinction to the succession of their relations in the ascending line, and to the exclusion of all others.

Sed ut amplius aliquid. Suppose a man deceased had left a son, and a grand-child by a daughter, who died before the deceased, that grand-child would have only four ounces, and the son eight; less by a third than the daughter, if living, would have been entitled to: suppose a woman deceased, left a son or a daughter, and a grand-son or grand-daughter by a deceased son or daughter; the son or daughter [ *561 ] *would be entitled to eight ounces, the grand-son or grand-daughter to four ounces.

Titul. III. De legitima agnatorum successione, p. 203.

The law of the twelve tables says, Asi si quis moritur intestatus, cui suus hæres non est, proximus agnatus familiam habeto. Hence, if a suius hæres renounced, the agnati could not succeed, but the estate escheated; for the suius hæres remained, and the agnates were excluded. This gave rise to the prætorian law, which let in agnates and cognates by the bonorum possessio unde legit. and unde cognati. Cujus in paritit. Cod. de usucap. pro hærede. This was extended by the senatus consultum Tertullianum. Dig. 38. 17. 2. 8 and 10. and by the emperors Dioclesian and Maximinian, Cod. de leg. hæred. l. 3. and lastly, Justinian admitted the agnates fully in default of sui hæredes, or their not acting in the succession.

§ 1. De agnatis naturalibus, p. 203. Agnates are relations of the same family on the male side, and who have suffered no diminution of state (rank.) Cognates are relations on the female side, or who have lost the right of agnates by diminution. Vinn. h. t.

Consobrini. Strictly speaking, consobrini, (consororini) are sisters' children.

Quia post mortem patris nanciscuntur. Dig. 38. 7. ult. and 38. 16. 1. penult.

§ 2. De Adoptivis, or, as it is sometimes entitled, De agnatis per adoptionem, p. 204. Adoption joins the adopted son to all the agnates *of the father: adopted children, like proper heirs, are [ *562 ] technical descriptions, and the creatures of the civil law.

Dig. 38. 10. ult. 4. Dig. 38. 16. 2, 3. They are improperly called consanguine, inasmuch as this is strictly applied to natural relationship. Dig. 38. 16. penult.

§ 3. De masculis et feminis, p. 204. This is otherwise entitled, Agnati, ad legitimam successionem ab intestato admittuntur absque ullo sexus discrimine.

By the old law of the twelve tables, the female line was excluded. Cognates yielded to agnates.

By the middle law, sisters of the same father were admitted; consanguine sisters: and the prætor called women to the succession when they were related by the male line, but only in virtue of the right of proximity; ex tertio nimirum ordine, per bonorum possessione unde cognati. Hence they succeeded after agnates.

Justinian called all agnates, male and female, indiscriminately to the succession.

Germanæ; of the whole blood; consanguineæ: by the same father; uterinæ: of the same mother. Consanguinei, and consanguineæ, are expressions relating to brothers and sisters only; not beyond.

Nostra constitutione sancimus: Cod. 6. 58. penult.

§ 4. De filiis sororum, p. 207. By the old law (i. e. the law of the twelve tables) if there were no agnates, the estate escheated. To avoid this, the prætor called in cognates per bonorum possessionem unde cognati: afterwards the emperor Anastasius, directed that emancipation per rescriptum principis, should not take away the right of agnation between brothers and sisters, if inserted in the rescript. Cod. de legit. hæred. l. 11. Then maternal brothers and sisters, and their children, were ranked among the agnates, if the deceased left no brothers and sisters, or if they rejected the succession: and nephews, of different branches, were ordered to succeed per capita, and not per stirpes, hic, et Cod. de legit. hæred. l. 14. § 1. Finally, all these differences were abolished by the 118th and 127th Novels. The last direction of the present section of the Institutes is not altered by the Novels.

Non in stirpes sed in capita.] It appears from this section, that as yet brothers' children were not allowed to represent their parents: for instance; if Sempronius had died intestate, leaving a brother, and children by two other brothers deceased; then, if the surviving brother had accepted the succession, the children of the deceased brothers, (i. e. the nephews of Sempronius) would have been entirely ousted; but, if the surviving brother of Sempronius had declined the inheritance, *the children of the two deceased brothers would have been entitled to a distributive share of their uncle's estate per capita, that is, by poll; because they would then take suo quisque jure each in his own right and not by representation. But by Nov. 118. cap. 3. and Nov. 127. cap. 1. brothers' and sisters' children are allowed to represent their parents; and yet this representation is only permitted by the civil law to prevent exclusion, when the party deceased leaves a brother, and nephews by another brother; and then the uncle and nephews take per stirpes; for, when there are only nephews, there is no representation; and the distribution of the estate is consequently made per capita, each person taking in his own right. This is also the certain rule of distribution in England in the case of collaterals. Vid. 22. 23. Car. 2. Bacon's Abr. verb. executors and administrators. Abridgment of cas. in eq. page 249. Walch v. Walch. Harris.

See the case of Carter v. Crawley, in prohibition. B. R. 1681. Sir Thomas Raym. 496. in which the question was this: A man died, leaving no relations alive, save an aunt, and the children of another aunt deceased in his life time—shall the children succeed jure representationis? This was a case on the construction of the Stat. of Distributions, 22. and 23. Ch. 2 ch. 20. and appears to have been decided in favour of the right of representation in the children. The opinion of civilians given at the end of this case is as follows: "In making distributions of intestate estates amongst collaterals, our civil law and the practice of the ecclesiastical courts have constantly observed these two rules:

"The first is, Representatio in filius fratrum et sororum tantum locum habet, ad ulteriores vero collaterales non extenditur.

"The second is that in case there be no brothers nor brothers' children, vocantur ad successionem reliqui collaterales quicumque in gradu sint proximiores, remotioribus exclusis. Ita quod infallibiter semper prior in gradu sit potior in successione, whereby representation must needs be out of doors; the next of kin, whether one or more being "only admitted to the distribution."

Nostra constitutione.] This constitution is not to be found; nor would it be of use, if it was still extant, since the 118th Novel. hath destroyed all distinction between agnates and cognates, and put them upon an equality. Harris.

The law of the 12 tables (proximus agnatus familiam habeto) called only the nearest agnate. If he died or renounced, the other agnates were excluded, and the estate escheated. Ulp. in frag. Tit. 26. § 4. Dig. 38. 16. 2. Paulus Lib. 4. sentent. Tit. 8: The prætor corrected this in some degree by calling in the second agnate, when the first died without accepting or renounced; but he called them in the order of cognates. Dig. 38. 9. 1. 6. The constitution mentioned in the text, as well as the law of the text, was rendered null by the provisions of the 118th Novel.

§ 8. De legitima parentum successione, p. 209. Formerly a father emancipating a child pacto contractæ fiduciæ, became legitimate heir to the child, under a supposed analogy of a master and an emancipated slave. See Inst. Lib. 1. Tit. de legitima parentum tutela. But Justinian by his constitution, Cod. 8. 49. 6. de emancipationibus liberorum, reduced all emancipations to that of contractæ fiduciæ; and the father succeeded to an emancipated son, as a patron did to his freed man. But all this was again altered by the 118th Novel. But the parents of a child dying without descendants, succeed per stirpes.

Tit. III. De senatus consulto Tertulliano, p. 210. Justinian says, this law was made by Adrian, but Zonaras, Lib. 2. says it was made in the time of Antoninus Pius, called also Adrian, as being the adopted son of Adrian. Tiberius Claudius Cæsar, began to reign A. C. 16, and Adrian began A. C. 120.

[ *565 ] § 1. De constitutione Divi Claudii, p. 210. It is probable according to Vinnius and Heineccius, that this indulgence extended only to the mothers of children who fell in battle. Sueton. in Vita. ch. 19. Claudius jus quatuor liberorum feminis dedit.

§ 2nd. Senatus consultum Tertullianum, p. 211. This privilege granted to the mother to succeed to her children, was not conceded by positive law to uncles; but they were called in by Prætorian law per bonorum possessionem unde cognati, so that a consanguine sister being regarded as an agnate was preferred to them.

§ 3. Qui præferuntur matri vel cum ea admittuntur, p. 211. Mater liberis onerata. Cujas in ulp. frag. Tit. ult. for onerata read honerata. The Claudian law gave them as we have just seen the jus quatuor liberorum; hence children were an honour and a credit, not a burthen.

By this section, the mother was postponed to a suus hæres, (a proper or domestic heir) to the father, and to the consanguine brother.

As to the suus hæres. Domestic heirs in power, or emancipated, or persons considered as sui hæredes, excluded the mother; but children given in adoption, and in power of their adoptive father, at the decease of their natural father, did not. But by a constitution of Antoninus, they were admitted concurrently with the mother, per bona poss. unde cognati, which in this case excluded the bonorum possessionem unde legitimi. Dig. 38. 7. and Dig. 38. 8.

Further by the Tertullian senatus consultum, children were not admitted to the succession of their mother, in preference to their grandmother, the senatus consultum Orphitianum, made about twenty years afterward, called them in. Hence a conflict arose between claimants under these decrees, the mother of the deceased, claiming under the Tertullian, and the children of the deceased under the Orphitian decrees. This was at length decided in favour of the children. Dig. 38. 16. 11.

Secondly, the father was preferred to the mother, in military property, in adventitious property, and in respect of emancipated children however emancipated.

Thirdly, the consanguine brother was preferred to the mother. Cod. Theod. de inofficioso, testamento, l. 2. The consanguine sister was called in concurrently with the mother. But Justinian introduced many alterations. At first, when the deceased left a mother, with consanguine or uterine brothers, or with sisters, the mother was admitted in equal proportion. Cod. h. Tit. l. ult. when the mother was found with sisters only, she succeeded to half the property. Ib. Afterward by Nov. 22. 47. 2. when the mother was left with sisters of the deceased, they inherited in equal portions: finally by Novel. 118. ch. 2. fathers *and mothers, were preferred to all collaterals, save brothers [ *566 ] and sisters of the whole blood.

Suorum loco sunt.] Emancipated children by the prætorian law, and by the constitutions grand-children and great-grand-children by a daughter, are numbered in loco suorum, i. e. in the place of proper heirs. Vide t. 1. sect. 15. of this book. Harris.

and by brothers and sisters, or by brothers only, or sisters only, then the mother, and the brothers and sisters, will all be entitled to take an equal share per capita, whether such brothers and sisters were related to the

Tit. IV. De senatus consulto Orphitiano, page 214. This was enacted in 930 ab urb. cond. in the time of the emperor Aurelius; 20 years after the Tertyllian senatus consult.

§ 1. De nepote et nepote, p. 214.

Constitutionibus principalibus.] The Tertyllian decree conferred upon mothers the right of legitimate succession to their children; and the Orfician decree gave children the same right in regard to their mothers:
but neither of these decrees went farther out of reverence to the old law; so that hitherto grand-mothers were called to the succession of their grandchildren; and grand-children to the succession of their grand-mothers, by the indulgence of the prætor only; i. e. per bonorum possessionem unde cognati, and in default of agnates. ff. 38. t. 8. But the emperors, Va-lentinian, Theodosius, and Arcadius, called grand-sons and grand-daughters to the succession of their grand-mothers; prohibiting them nevertheless to take more than two thirds of that sum, to which their father or mother would have been entitled. l. 4. Cod. Theod. de legit. hæred. But the emperor Justinian, by his 118th Novel, cap. 1. makes the condition of all children equal, when they succeed their parents upon an intestacy.
And, by the 2nd chapter of the same novel, the emperor calls also the grand-mother to the succession of her grand-children. Harris.

[ *568 ] *§ 3. De vulgo quæsitis, page 215. Otherwise naturales liberi mater succedunt.

Qui vulgo quæsitæ sunt. The vulgo quæsitæ are those, whom the law emphatically calls spurious, their father being uncertain and not known; but the mother, who is always certain, is allowed to succeed even her spurious issue; which is not permitted in England, where a bastard is reckoned as a terminus a quo, and the first of his family; he can therefore have no heir but of his body; and is deemed in law to have no consanguine relations, except his children; yet this must be understood, as to civil purposes; for, as to moral purposes, his natural relation to ascendants and collaterals is regarded by the law, which will not suffer such a person to marry his mother, or his base sister. The Queen v. Chafin, 3 Salk. 66. 67.

Ad matris hæreditatem.] The vulgo quæriti or spurious children, are allowed to succeed their mother, unless she is a person of illustrious birth, having lawful children; for, if she has no lawful children, her illegitimate issue will succeed her. Cod. 6. t. 57. l. 5. And in general spurious children will succeed their mother equally with those, who are legitimate: and, even if spurious children are prætermitted in the testament of their mother, they may by the civil law complain of that testament as inofficious and undutiful. De inofficioso testamento matris spurii quoque filii dicere possunt. ff. 5. t. 2. l. 29. Yet spurious children are not in like manner entitled to succeed to the possessions of their father, whom the law does not regard, but supposes to be unknown. Children nevertheless, who are born of a concubine, when their father is certain, and dies without a wife or lawful issue, are entitled, together with their mother, to the sixth part of their father's inheritance, which is to be divided among them per capita, or by poll. Nov. 18. t. 5. cap. 5. But bastards, begotten in adultery or incest, are wholly incapable of succeeding to their father's or mother's estate. Nov. 89. cap. 15. But in England bastards are not distinguished into species, being all regarded in the same light, and esteemed equally incapable of succeeding to the personal estate of their intestate parents, being feigned to be nullius filii; so that no illegitimate child can take any part either of his father's or mother's estate upon an intestacy; neither can an ordinary or ecclesiastical judge grant the administration of an intestate's estate to the base-born issue of that intestate. Swinb. 373. Yet any person, although he hath legitimate children may by the law of England, bequeath any part, or the whole of his estate without controul, and may consequently benefit his illegitimate children, or their mother, in what manner he pleases; for such persons are not incapable of taking by purchase, gift, or testament: *and in this respect the law of England is more fa- [ *569 ] vourable to natural children, than the civil law; for, by that law, a man, who had lawful children, could not bequeath more than a 12th part of his possessions to his illegitimate issue. Nov. 89. cap. 12. It is also observable, that, though the law of England pays no regard immediately to bastards, yet it favours their issue under particular circumstances, in respect to real estates; insomuch that the issue of a bastard eigne, who died seized, shall bar the right of a mulier puane. For example; if a man dies seized of certain lands in fee, leaving two sons, by the same woman, and his eldest son is a bastard, being born before his father's marriage, and the younger is a mulier, (that is, legitimate,) in this case, if the bastard enters upon the land, claiming as heir to his father, and occupieth it all his life without any interruption or entry made upon him by the mulier, and the bastard hath issue and dies seized of such estate in fee, and the land descends to that issue, then the mulier will be without remedy. For he may not enter, nor have any action to recover the land, because there is an ancient law [in this case used; namely, Justum non est aliquem post mortem facere bastardum, qui toto tempore vitæ suæ pro legitimo habebatur. See Coke's first inst. sect. 399, &c. Bridal's lex spuriorum, pag. 100. Here note, that the term mulier is used, by the writers upon the common law, to denote either a son or a daughter lawfully begotten; but, how they came to apply the word mulier so very fancifully or rather perversely, it is hard to say, and immaterial to inquire; the most probable conjecture seems to be, that mulier is a corruption of melior or the French word melieur. Vide Terms de la ley, and Godolphin's repertorium. Harris.

§ 4. De jure accrescendi inter legitimos hæredes, p. 215.

Survivorship under the Roman law takes place among legitimate, and among testamentary heirs; and the share of those who renounce, will even fall to the heirs of those who accept. Survivorship, is real, attached to the estate, not to the person like substitution. Dig. de usufructu. l. 36. Dig. 38. 16. 9. It was allowed, lest the testator should die partly testate and partly intestate, partly represented and partly unrepresented.

Under the English law survivorship takes place only when a legacy is given in joint tenancy; and is allowed by the courts of equity, but not by the ecclesiastical courts. See on this subject Humphrey v. Taylor, Ambl. 137. Mosley v. Bird, 3 Vez. jun. 628. Russel v. Long, 4 Vez. 551. Bolger v. Mackell, 5 Vez. 509. In which it is [ *570 ] laid down *that a legacy to two or more share and share alike, is a legacy in common, with no survivorship.

The jus accrescendi has already been touched upon in another connection ante ad Instit. Lib. 2. Tit. 7. § 4.

 Harris.

See as to the prætorian law calling in cognates in default of proper and legitimate heirs, Cod. de legit. hæred. l. 5. and Dig. 38. 8. 1 and seq. Cognates are maternal relations. Legitimate heirs are agnates, and others considered as agnates, and called to the succession by the Tertullian and Orphitian senatus-consults, and the imperial constitutions, as a mother in respect of her children, children in respect of a mother consanguine brothers and sisters emancipated by rescript, uterine sisters, and the children of emancipated brothers and sisters. Cod. de legit. hæred. l. penult. § 1 and l. ult. § 2.

§ 1. Qui vocantur in hoc ordine, &c. p. 216.

[Quos lex Anastasiana.] This constitution is not now extant; it was nevertheless without doubt inserted in the first edition of the Code, because it is here referred to; but it was probably omitted in the Codex repetitæ prælectionis, on account of the last law in Cod. 6. t. 58. delegit. *hæred. Qua plenius fratribus et sororibus [ *571 ] emancipatis consulitur, et eorum quoque filiis ac filiabus jus legitimæ successionis datur. Harris.

Non equis tamen partibus. Theophilus says that emancipated brothers and sisters received one half less than those under power: that a brother capite diminutus should receive but four ounces while a brother integri juris should have eight: but by Cod. de leg. hæred. l. ult. § 1. emancipated brothers, and those under power were placed on a footing.

Aliis vero agnatis. If the deceased left an emancipated brother, and an uncle, the former would succeed in exclusion of the latter.

§ 2. De conjunctis per fæminas, p. 217. The 118th Novel. has superseded this section.

§ 4. De vulgo quæsitis, p. 217. The mother only is considered as related to a spurious child; hence they were permitted to succeed to the mother, if they were not the issue of adultery or incest. Justinian however admitted them to a share in the succession ab intestato to their father, if there were no lawful progeny, and the bastards were the offspring of a concubine. Dig. 38. 8. 4. compared with Dig. 1. 5. 19 and 23. Dig. 1. 5. 19 and 24. Cod. de natural. lib. By the 118th Novel. they were admitted to share in their mother's estate with legitimate children.

§ 5. Ex quoto gradu vel agnati vel cognati succedunt, p. 217.

Usque ad sextum gradum cognationis.] It is not easy to determine what should induce the prætor to fix upon the sixth rather than the fifth or any other degree; and, concerning this, the writers have differed much in their opinions. But all, except Hoffman, agree, that the difference in the limits of succession between agnates and cognates hath ceased, since the distinction between agnation and cognation was abolished by Novel. 118. Taking it then for granted, that cognates can be called in as distant a degree as agnates, the next question will be whether agnates, can succeed in a more distant degree, than the tenth; which some deny; and urge, that Justinian would not have named the 10th degree, if agnates could have been admitted in a degree beyond it — and that, unless some period had been put to the succession of agnates, the third and the fourth order of succession, in which are husband and wife, could never or very rarely be admitted; and from hence they conclude, that, though in consequence of the 118th Novel. both agnates and cognates must now be admitted without distinction, according to their proximity, yet this must be in the 10th degree, and not beyond it; and of this opinion are Mynsinger, Faber, Wesembecius, and others. But the words of Justinian, in the 3rd sect. of the 2nd title of this book, very strongly evince the contrary. v. g. *Inter masculos quidem agnationis *jure hæreditas etiamsi, longissimo gradu sint, ultro citroque capitar, &c.* And again, in paragraph the 1st, tit. 7. of this book, the emperor writes thus—Amotis suis hæredibus, agnatus, etiamsi longissimo gradu, plerumque potior habetur, quam proximior cognatus. Tit. 7. de servili cognatione. This is also the doctrine of the law of the twelve tables, which declares generally, without specifying any limits, that upon a failure of proper heirs, the nearest agnate shall succeed. And, as to the before-mentioned arguments, they may be answered without much difficulty; for we may safely pronounce, that the words decimo gradu are not here used determinately, but merely for the sake of giving an example. Non enim (says Vinny) eodem modo de agnatis et cognatis imperator loquitur; de agnatis non loquitur determinative, sed ait, eos succedere, etsi decimo gradu sint, utens rotundo et certo numero pro incerto. De cognatis contra loquitur determinative; ait enim, eos succedere usque ad sextum gradum. And, to the second argument, it may Be answered, that a deceased person may leave no agnates by means of emancipation, or that his agnates, as such, may be ousted of their succession, by the death or refusal of the nearest agnate. See sect. 7. t. 7. lib. 3. So that there is no great reason to fear, that the third and fourth order of succession would have been always excluded by allowing agnates to succeed in the most distant degree. It therefore follows upon the whole, that cognates and agnates are now called to succeed equally, according to their proximity, and without any limitation. Harris.

Wms. 41. where-in it was determined that the grandmother was nearer of kin than the aunt. Woodroff v. Wickworth, Prec. in ch. 527. 1 Eq. ca. ab. 249. In England all relationship respecting personal estate, is settled according to the civil law computation.

Græc. Thii: the Greeks called their parents θεοι, divinities; and applied the term divine, even to those who held the place of parents. Hence come the Italian words Zio, Zia, and the Spanish, Tío, Tía. (Ferriere makes three sections, of this first section.)

§ 2. Quartus gradus, p. 219.

Consobrinus consobrina.] It will be necessary to explain the following terms of relation before we proceed.—Consobrini and Consobrinx denote cousins german in general; i. e. brother's and sister's children.—Fratres patrueles and sorores patrueles signify cousins german, when *they are the sons or daughters of brothers.—Con- [ *573 ] sobrini and consobrinx in a limited and strict sense denote cousins german, who are the children of two sisters, quasi consororini.—Amitini and amitinæ are cousins german, who are the children of a brother on the one side and a sister on the other.—Sobrini and Sobrinæ denote the children of cousins german in general.—Propior sobrino and propior sobrina denote the son or daughter of a great-uncle or great-aunt, paternal or maternal. Harris.

§ 4. Sextus gradus, p. 221. This section seems to distinguish inter filium proprium sobrini, and nepotem sobrini; which however have the same meaning. Hence Vinnius thinks that the words item proprius sobrino sobrinave filius should be omitted. Il est vrai (says Ferriere) que si mon cousin issu de germain m'est parent au sixieme degre, son fils ne m'est parent qu'au septieme: c'est aussi ce qui est dit dans le § 5. du titre precedent. Mais Justinien ne le compare pas ici avec moi, qui suis le cousin issu de germain son pere, car nous serions au septieme; mais il le compare avec mon pere, qui lui est parent d'un degre plus proche que moi, et qui est par consequent a son egard, parent au sixieme degre.

Tit. X. De bonorum possessionibus, p. 231.

This is a branch of the prætorian law, by which a right of succession was granted, to all the property, estate, goods, chattels, rights and credits of the deceased. Qua propter plurimum differt bonorum possessio a possessione seu corporali detentione rerum, quæ facti est. l. 2. 1. Dig. hoc. tit. l. 208. Dig. de verb. signif. Sed bonorum possessio tota juris est.

The bonorum possessio, was of various kinds, according to the condition and exigency of the claimants. Bonorum possessio, UNDE LIBERI: UNDE LEGITIMI: UNDE COGNATI: SECUNDUM TABULAS: CONTRA [ *574 ] *TABULAS: UNDE DECEM PERSONÆ: TANQUAM EX FAMILIA: unde vir ET UXOR: confirming, supplying, correcting, or controverting the civil law.

The bonorum possessio, did not constitute an heir. Inst. 3. 10. 2. The heir, is a creature of the civil, not of the prætorian law; though the person so called to the succession by the prætor, had many of the rights of an heir. But the heir under the civil law, held in absolute proprietorship, Inst. 2. 19. 7: the prætorian successor had the possession, and the dominium utile, but not the dominium direction. l. 1. cum. seq. Dig. hoc titulo. l. 117. Dig. de reg. juris. l. 138. Dig. de verb. signif. It was the right of claiming and recovering, and of retaining the effects of the deceased. Dig. h. tit. l. 3. § 2. It might be demanded by Proctor, which a heirship could not. Dig. 29. 2. 90. where for curatorem, read procuratorem.

Succession per bonorum possessionem, must have been demanded of the prætor: this was not necessary in case of heirship, wherein it was only necessary to act. A heirship might be entered upon within 30 years. A prætorian succession must be claimed within one year by descendants and ascendants, and a hundred days by other persons: Inst. 3. 10. 5. Succession per bonorum possessionem, was part of the equitable jurisdiction of the prætor. Thus by possession unde liberi, he aided the rights of emancipated children; calling them to the succession (cum onere collationis) together with proper heirs, by unde cognati, he assisted the natural pretensions of cognates who were before excluded: by secundum tabulas, he supported a testament otherwise void by the civil law, by calling in a posthumous stranger: contra tabulas, when a child was called to the succession, whose natural claims had been neglected and passed over by his father the testator: unde vir et uxor, by which the surviving husband or wife succeeds in defect of kindred: unde legitimi when parents or children (agnates) were called in, who would otherwise have been excluded. Tanquam ex familia; to the patron, or his agnates. Unde decem personæ, the enumeration of ten persons preferred by the prætor to a stranger who had manumitted a filius familias under the ancient forms of contract and sale. Unde patroni patronæque, when patrons were specifically called in to the succession of freed men: unde cognati manumissoris: when cognates of a patron manumittor were admitted. Hence there are two prætorian successions in case of a testacy, and eight in case of an intestacy. Concerning all of which see post Inst. lib. III. tit. 10. § 2 and 3.

Justinian abolished, unde decem personæ, tanquam ex familia, unde patroni, and unde cog. manumittoris.

In the case of possession granted contra tabulas, the claimant, to whom the succession was granted, was called upon to bring into hotch *pot or common stock, all the property he had at any [ *575 ] time received of the testator by way of advancement; Cod.

6. 21. 12. 16. This was the COLLATIO: bonorum possessio contra tabulas cum onere collationis. Dig. 37. 6. 1. This Collatio, might have been exacted also in cases of intestacy from descendants, whether of the male or female side, (Nov. 18. 6.) but not from ascendants, collaterals, or mere legatees. Cod. 6. 21. 16. This was an exception to the general rule, inter diverso jure succedentes, non est locus collationis.

“Regularly those goods are brought into Collation or common fund, (Cod. 6. 21. 12 and 16.) which came from the ascendant, while alive, for the maintenance or provision of the descendant. But not gifts or rewards for services, Cod. 6. 21. 10. and 20. 1. Nor the price of ransom from captivity in war, Cod. 8. 51. 17. Though money paid for a fine, or to save one from punishment, ought to be brought into contribution, for the fault of one, ought not to be prejudicial to another. So the portion, the jewels, the precious garments, the gold chains given to a daughter at marriage, Cod. 6. 21. 5. but not the expences of the marriage feast, for that seems to be given for the credit of the father and not as a portion; nor the charge of necessary education, for every child hath already had such a share, nor the charge which a father hath been at in books for his son, Dig. 10. 2. 50. Nor the charge that a father laid out for the son that he might take a degree, or acquire any other honourable title, Dig. 37. 6. 16. for if the son dies, his successor can derive no advantage by it. On this account, therefore, the cost expended in equipage for a son to go to the wars, shall come to the common contribution, because he receives pay from the public. Cod. 6. 21. 20." Wood's Inst. civ. law. fol. 200. 201.

Jus bonorum possessionis.] The bonorum possessio is not now in use even in those countries, where the civil law prevails: for succession by testament, or by law, comprehends every case. "Jus civile et prætorium hodie in unam consonantiam redactum est; ideoque hujus tituli nullus amplius est usus: entenim, qui aliis ex testamento et ab intesta"to succedunt, in universum hæredes appellari solent."

[ *576 ] *Groenewegen, *de legibus abrogatis h. t.* In England, estates in general, may be divided into two sorts, real and personal; and successions to these two different kinds of estates are governed by different rules of law. But it is necessary to premise, that by real estate is not commonly meant an estate in land in fee, i. e. descendible from a man to his heirs for ever, and that by personal estate are meant estates in land, determinable upon years; money in the funds or upon mortgages, plate, jewels, &c. and that such personal estate is generally comprehended, in technical and artificial language, under the terms goods and chattels. Now in real estates there is no room for the bonorum possessio of the Roman law to take place in England; for all such estates vest in and descend instantly to the heir, at the death of his ancestor; but in regard to goods and chattels the office of the ordinary or ecclesiastical judge seems to be similar to that of the Roman prætor in granting the possession of goods. For, when a man dies, who has disposed of his personal estate by testament, the heirs or executors, appointed by that testament, must prove it before an ecclesiastical judge, who by granting probate gives the possession of goods to the executors secundum tabulas, according to the will, or at least confirms them in the possession already taken. Cowell, h. l. And, when any person dies intestate, the ordinary (by virtue of 31 Edw. 3. chap. 11, and 21 Henry 8. chap. 5) grants the possession and administration of the intestate's goods to the widow or next of kin to such intestate, or to both, at his direction. And by the 22d and 23d of Charles the second, cap. 10. it is enacted, "that all ordinaries and ecclesiastical judges may call administrators to an account and order DISTRIBUTION, after debts and funeral expences are paid; to wit, one third to the widow of the intestate, and the residue among his children and those who legally represent them, if any of them are dead: that, if there are no children, or legal representatives of them, one half the intestate's estate shall be allotted to the widow, and the residue to the next of kindred to the intestate in equal degree, and those, who represent them: that no representation shall be admitted among collaterals after brothers and sisters children; and that, if there is no wife, all shall be distributed among the children; and if no child, to the next of kin to the intestate in equal degree and their representatives." And by 1 Jac. 2 cap. 17. it is enacted, "that, if a brother or sister dies, each brother and sister, and their representatives, shall have an equal share with the mother." From all which the analogy, between the civil law and the law of England, is very observable. Harris.

Tit. XIV. De obligationibus, p. 244.

Justinian begins first with obligation, and then proceeds to those contracts and agreements, from whence obligation arises. He confines it within the bounds of practice, namely to that motive of action which the sanction of the law presents to us. The civil law indeed treats of duties of imperfect obligation, but so far only as they are aided by the sanction which the legislative or judicial authority may annex to them.

Obligation may be divided into moral obligation, or that which receives its sanction foro conscientie alone: and civil obligation, or that which receives its sanction from the positive law of political communities.

The true source and foundation of moral obligation, has long been a diu vexata questio. With me it is settled: it has but one rational source and foundation, self interest: our own happiness: our greatest and most permanent good upon the whole.

I considered this subject at full length formerly, in an essay published among a collection of essays on ethical and metaphysical subjects (1787): and as I have had no reason hitherto to alter my opinion, I shall briefly abridge that essay, and adopt the same view of the argument here.

It is universally allowed, that in certain cases, I ought (morally speaking) to act in a certain manner. But why ought I to do so? What is the ultimate reason or motive which on an attentive consideration of the subject should induce me to act in this, rather than in that manner?

Because, say some,

[ *580 ] *I. It is agreeable to the will of God. a

II. To the eternal and necessary fitness and congruity of things. b

III. It is the dictate of the moral sense. c

IV. It is the dictate of common sense: of the raison commune. d

V. You are conscious of a sensation that impels you to do so. e

VI. Your understanding represents such an action to you as right, and of course that you ought to do so. f

VII. It is agreeable to right reason. g

VIII. It is agreeable to the truth of things. h

IX. It is conducive to general utility. i

X. It is conducive to the bene esse, to your own greatest good upon the whole. k

¶ Origin of Evil, Letter IV.

** Review of Soame Jenyn's Origin of Evil, in the Miscellanies published by Davies, 3 vols.

Each of these hypotheses, except the last, admit of a further question. You tell me I ought to act agreeably to the will of God—to the eternal fitness of things—to the dictate of the moral sense, &c. &c. ? why ought I to do so ? It is evident that this question may be put reasonably : *if so, the solution lies deeper than the hypothesis [ *681 ] that admits of the question.

This question cannot reasonably, or consistent with common sense be put on the 10th or last hypothesis. It is manifestly, palpably absurd to ask, why ought I to pursue my own happiness ? why ought I to follow that course of conduct which upon the whole of my existence will most effectually afford me the greatest sum of happiness ? For in fact, are not all our motives of action, founded upon this consideration ? Does it not arise from the very nature and constitution of man ?

Why should I obey the commands of God ? Because it is my interest so to do : I shall be happy if I do, and miserable if I do not. But put the case, that any clear and precise command of the creator, would upon the whole of my existence and all things considered, afford not a balance of happiness but of misery, can I be under any obligation to pursue it ?—The controversy then, can only be settled, by an answer, that does not reasonably admit of any further question ; and this is it.

But in the course of education in civilized society, we are taught incessantly by our parents and tutors, we hear in their conversations, and in discourses from the pulpit, and we learn from our intercourse with society even from our childhood, that certain conduct ought to be pursued, and certain actions ought to be shunned. That we should obey and reverence our parents, love our kindred, perform acts of kindness to our neighbours, speak truth, pay our debts, perform our promises, &c. &c. : these complex associations give rise at length to that feeling that we call conscience, and to the ideas of obligation and duty, which are associated with many actions that positive law cannot expediently embrace. Actions that mankind generally agree, ought to be performed or abstained from, when not sanctioned by the laws of society, give rise to imperfect obligations : actions that are enjoined or forbidden by those laws, are called actions or duties of perfect obligation.

By the civil law, rights and duties of imperfect obligation, such as arose from the acknowledged precepts of natural law, or the dictates of conscience, or ex nudo pacto, (naked promises not binding for want of consideration,) although they could not of themselves support an action, might be brought in aid of the law in certain cases. They gave rise to compensation, or set off ; to detention of a pledge ; to fide jussion or action against a guarantee ; to a constitutum, or promise founded on natural obligation ; to novation ; and to retention of money paid under a mistaken notion of its being legally due.

To instance each of these. As to compensation: A. owes B. a hundred dollars, on a legal claim. B. owes A. fifty dollars, on a [ *582 ] consideration *founded in morality, but not furnishing ground for suit: A, can set this off. Dig. 16, 2. 6. de compensationibus.

Usury (interest for money) was not supported by the Roman law, unless where the loan had furnished a profit; Cod. 4. 32. 26. Cod. 4. 34. 4. or where it was judicially decreed nomine pænæ for improper detention of the sum lent, or on account of fraud. Dig. 22. 1. 1. and 22. 1. 17. 3. Suppose, however, A. lends B. a hundred dollars upon interest, and B. pledges a diamond ring for repayment: the promise to pay interest simply would be nude pact, but still as promises ought to be performed. Dig. 2. 14. 1. A. may retain the diamond, till interest as well as principal be paid. *Cod. de usuris. l. 4.

As to fide jussion. An infant almost of age makes a promise, unsanctioned by his tutor: this would support no action. A friend of the infant becomes his security for the performance. Here, notwithstanding the maxim accessorium sequitur suum principale, the fide jussor or guarantee, is liable, because it is the dictate of natural equity that a promise should be kept, although positive law will not enforce it. Dig. 46. 1. 2 and 6.

Constitutum, is a promise before the prætor to pay what was previously due, either by the promissor, or some other person for whom he becomes surety. Such a promise so solemnly made, was supported by the prætorian action De pecunia constituta, Dig. 13. 5. 1. 7. quia grave est fidem fallere, maxime ubi geminata fides est.

Novation. Dig. 46. 2. 1. [This is somewhat allied to the English doctrine of extinguishment.]

Novation, is the transferring or conversion of one obligation into another obligation, or from one person to another person. Thus, A. owes B. a hundred dollars: this debt is transferred by consent to a pupil who promises without authority of the tutor: is he bound? Yes: for the promise of the pupil though it will not support a suit, is founded upon a promise that would support one: and this natural obligation of the pupil to pay, is converted into a civil obligation, by being substituted for a civil one: notwithstanding, Dig. 46. 2. 20. which though it seems to look the other way, does not furnish an objection. Pupillus quod sibi debetur, non potest sine tutoris auctoritate novare ne scilicet conditionem suam deteriore faciat: but this is for his own sake, and does not apply to a case when the legal right of a third person is involved in the pact.

Repetition, or redemand of money paid without regular compulsion of law, is prohibited where an imperfect obligation intervenes. Dig. 44. 7. 10. A. by nude pact, promises to pay me a hundred dollars; he pays it to me; but repenting, sues for the recovery, by condictio indebiti (action for money had and received.) He cannot recover it, for he *ought to keep his promise, and he has put me in possession [ *483 ] of the money which he was under a natural obligation to give me, though not a legal one. Dig. 12. 6. 14 and 66. For the condictio indebiti would not avail against money paid, which ex equo et bono ought to have been paid. Dig. ub. sup.

This is like the cases of Brown v. M'Kinnally, 1 Esp. Ca. at N. P. 279. Burdon v. Webb, Ib. 528. Cartwright v. Rowley, Ib. 723. Whether an express promise founded on an antecedent moral obligation will support an assumpsit is discussed at length in note (a) to Wennall v. Adney, 3 Bos. and Pull. 249. This doctrine of the Roman law is adopted by Lord Mansfield, in Moses v. M'Farlane, 2 Burr. 1005. Dale v. Sollet, Burr. 2133. and though the particular case of Moses v. M'Farlane, has been shaken by Marriot v. Hampton, 7 Term Rep. 269, yet the general doctrine has never been denied.

§ 1. Divisio prior. p. 244. The prætorian, is as much a part of the Roman law, as the civil law. By the latter, technically speaking, is meant the law of the 12 tables, the Plebiscites, the senatus consulta, the imperial constitutions, and the responsa prudentum. The prætorian law, jus honorarium, is composed of the equitable decrees of the prætors at various times: to which we owe many obligations not strictly comprehended in the above named sources of the civil law, such as the constitutum, hypothecation, &c.

§ 2. Divisio posterior. p. 244.

By the Roman law there are two grand divisions of private conventions, to wit, CONTRACTS and PACTS. Contractus est Conventio habens certum nomen, vel causam, sua natura obligationem ad agendum, efficacem producens. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 1 and 2.

Contracts between parties are so numerous, and so various, that the civil law, unable to assign a specific denomination to every one, classed by appropriate and distinct names, those contracts only which were most generally in use in society. Hence contracts were divided into nominate and innominate. Nominate contracts were such as the Commodatum,* Matuum, Depositum, Pignus, Stipulatio, Emptio Vende-

* Commodatum: the loan of a specific thing, of which the ownership is not changed, to be returned in good plight: as of a house, a horse or a book. Matuum: a loan to be returned in kind, as money, grain, fruit, &c. Depositum: bailment of a thing to be kept without reward for keeping it, and to be returned in good plight. Pignus: a pawn of a moveable for security of a creditor. Hypotheca: is a mortgage of the right to real [ *584 ] titio, **Locatio, Conductio, Emphyteusis Societas, Mandatum, &c.* all which will be noticed in their turn. These had their appropriate remedy by action founded upon them. Some of them derived their obligation from natural, some from civil, and some from prætorian law.

Nominate contracts had also a four-fold classification. 1st, Ex re, from something done. 2dly, Ex verbis, from something said. 3dly, Ex literis, from something written. 4thly, Ex consensu, from something agreed to.

In contracts also were considered the substance, the nature, and the accidental parts of the contract; but I do not find any important conclusion dependant on this division.

Contracts were also divided into equitable contracts, ex æquo et bono, and contracts stricti juris. Thus, if I sell an estate and deliver possession and the money is not paid me till long after it is due, I have a right not merely to the principal, but also to interest for the detention of it. To this class of contracts may be referred those of our own law that admit of compensation when not literally fulfilled, and the cases of Cy pres performance. Contracts of strict construction, are those where the terms are precisely settled by the parties themselves; as the cases of damage liquidated by the previous agreement of the parties, as so much per acre for the ploughing up of meadow land, &c.

Innominate contracts, are those innumerable agreements, that depend upon and include the peculiar circumstances that form the object of them, and for which no certain or precise remedy was appointed but a general action on the case only: actio in factum prescriptis verbis. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 2. Dig. 19. 4. and Dig. 19. 5.

But for the more convenient division of this kind of contracts they were classed thus. Do ut des: I give that you may give. Do ut facias: I give that you may perform. FACIO ut des: I perform that you may give. FACIO ut facias: I perform that you may perform.

The first is sale and barter: the second payment for work and labour to be done, or services to be performed: the third work and labour, or services, to receive payment: the fourth work and labour performed, or services, rendered, for work and labour to be performed or services rendered. This last had the remedy by action de dolo malo, annexed to it. Dig. 4. 3. 18.

property, or things incorporeal; the debtor continuing in possession. Stipulatio; a verbal contract by question and answer. Emptio Venditio: buying and selling. Locatio Conductio: letting and hiring. Emphyteusis: an improving lease. Mandatum: a commission or power. Societas: partnership.

*In all these innominate contracts, the obligation to per- [ *585 ] formance on one side, is founded on actual performance by the other. Otherwise it amounts to no more than a mere promise, a covenant, an agreement, a PACT, which the parties may be under a natural, but under no civil obligation to perform. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 4. such a pact is called nude (nudum pactum) when no consideration (causa) attaches to it; but obligation arises, when the one side by performance in conformity to the agreement, suffers a loss, privation or inconvenience, or the other side by accepting becomes benefitted and a gainer, either as principal or surety.

Thus, I promise to give you one horse in exchange for another. This is not binding on either side, till one of us perform his part of the agreement. Then and then only, a consideration attaches to the pact, and an obligation arises thereupon coextensive with the consideration. This is like our doctrine of conditions precedent, where performance, or tender of performance with a touts tems prest, must be set out.

In all these innominate contracts and nude pacts, time was allowed to the parties to reconsider their agreement: locus pœnitentiæ. Thus, if I tender my horse in lieu of a horse agreed to be given me by my neighbour, and he takes no step thereupon to perform his part of the agreement, I can send for my horse back and refuse to accede to the bargain. In contractibus nominatis, pœnitentiæ locus est, rebus saltem integris, ita ut is qui debet ob causam, alium statim obliget, ipse vero ei non obligatur priusquam alter conventionem impleverit. Quapropter rebus integris quod debet potest repetere, per conditionem causa data causa non secuta. Quæ quidem actio non nascitur ex contractu, sed ex naturali æquitate quæ non patitur rem meam esse penes alium sine causa. Cod. de condict. causa data, causa non secuta. Dig. 12. 7.

There are some good observations on the locus pœnitentiæ in Lord Kaimes's principles of equity, Book 1. part 2. sect 7. and many cases put where it appears to one that in equity it ought to be allowed.

Pacts, are divided into civil, prætorian and simple. Civil were those to which a civil right of action was subsequently attached, as to the Donatio inter vivos by Justinian. Prætorian, such as the prætor gave a right of action upon, as the Hypotheca, and the constitutum. Simple, such as raised a natural obligation only to performance.

The doctrine of Nudum pactum has been long recognized in the English law. Bracton (who as Justice Wilmot says, interwove a great many things out of the Roman law) divides pacta, conventa, into nuda pacta and pacta vestita. Ch. 1. de actionibus. See also Br. ab. tit. action sur le case. 40. Ib. Dette pl. 36. 79. 206. 11 H. 4. 32. a. 9. H. 5. *14. 3 H. 6. 36. 44 E. 3. 21. Sharrington and [ *586 ]

Pledall v. Strotton Plow. 302. 308. 309. 7 and 8 El. Joselyn v. Laciére. 12 Mod. 295.

Wilmut in Pillans and Rose v. Van Mierop and Hopkins, 3 Burr. 1663, inclines to think that where an obligation is deliberately entered into by writing, that there can be no nudum pactum. The good sense of this opinion is rather pettishly contradicted by Skinner in his argument before the lords in Rann v. Hughes, reported in Br. Parl. Ca. and in the note to Mitchinson v. Hewson, 7 Term Rep. 350. a. which settles the technical distinction of contracts, into contracts by parol (including unsealed written contracts) and contracts by specialty. It is of no consequence how the law is, when it is once known; but it was surely an allowable mistake to suppose that a contract deliberately put down in writing, was not a parol contract. Wilmut seems to have had in his mind the obligatory effect given by the Roman law where the prescribed forms of verbal stipulations were observed. See post. Inst. 3. 16. 1. De verbis stipulationum. But among the Romans, the practice was to put all nominate contracts and stipulations in writing, which when carried to a magistrate were inserted inter acta, registered or recorded; and the parties had a copy delivered to them under seal. This was not the case with mere pacts or promises, which might intervene by means of any informal words, and between absent parties. Justice Wilmut's opinion I apprehend is law in most nations on the continent. See the references in Wood civ. law 206.

Although in the words of the lord chancellor in Middleton v. Kenyon, 2 Vez. junr. 408. "A bargain without consideration is a contradiction in terms and cannot exist;" yet in England this does not apply to 1st, Bargains entered into by writing under seal. 2dly, Mercantile or rather negotiable paper when once negotiated by indorsement: for as between the maker of a note and the payee, and the drawer of a bill and the payee, equitable defences may be set up. The exception depends upon its negotiability, and that negotiability is given by its being put into circulation by indorsement.

With respect to other parol contracts, whether verbal or written, we have adopted in substance the civil law doctrine on this subject, and the want of consideration will defeat a contract: but

Any labor, loss or inconvenience sustained by the plaintiff at the request of the defendant—any express promise to pay or perform what the promissor was under a moral obligation of paying or performing; whereon see Wennal v. Adney, 3 Bos. and Pull. 247.—Any promise made upon the strength of a consideration already passed, but originally entered into at the request of the promissor—or in consideration [ *587 ] of services *to be rendered on a future day—or in consideration of any permission given by which the promissor is benefitted—or any voluntary performance of an act beneficial to the promissor, which the performer was legally compellable to perform, as in case of a surety—will support an action of assumpsit.

But though natural affection, be sufficient to raise a use, aid a trust, or support a deed, (Myddleton v. Lord Kenyon, ub. sup.) it will not support an assumpsit: nor will love between the sexes.

But considerations founded on promise of marriage, will support a subsequent promise. Argenbright v. Campbell, and wife, 3 Hen. and Munf. 184. Cro. El. 59.

See on all the points, and the other parts of the doctrine of consideration when coupled with assumpsit, the modern compilers. Comyns. Dig. Powel on contracts, Espinasse and Selwyn's, law of nis. pri.: and Comyns, on contracts.

The subject is but meagerly treated in Pothier. The equitable nature of the action for money had and received, is treated in Moses v. M'Farlane, 2 Burr. 1005. Hawkes v. Saunders, Cowp. 290.]

I think the following rules collected by Wood (p. 207) for the construction of contracts, worth inserting in this place.

These rules ought to be observed in the interpretation of contracts.

b The agreement in a contract is the law of it.

c The beginning and consideration of every contract is to be considered.

d If the sense of the contract is obscure, that sense must be followed which is most likely and probable, or most according to common practice.

e In doubtful cases the mildest interpretation is the safest.

*f All parts of the contract ought to be explained, the one [ * 578 ] by the other, and regard ought to be had to the preamble of it.

h If the terms of a contract are equivocal, that meaning ought to be followed which relates to the subject of the agreement.

i A madman cannot contract at all, no, not with the consent of his guardian; but a minor above seven years of age may contract by himself, where it is to his own advantage; and in all cases with the consent of his guardian when he is above that age.

Thus far of obligations, covenants and contracts in general.

Tit. XX. § 1. De mutuo, p. 245. Loan. This is a nominate contract, stricti juris, unilateral. The remedy is by personal action: certi condictio. Dig. 12. 1.

Hence interest is not due unless by express stipulation, or agreement. Dig. 22. 1. 3 and 30. Dig. 16. 3. 261. It relates to perishable articles chiefly; res fungibiles; quarum una alterius vice fungitur, as wine for wine: grain for grain: money for money.

The borrower has the property in the thing lent: herein the mutuum differing from the commodatum. Mutuum, as the civilians say quaintly, quia ex meo tuum fit. Herein, it is required, 1st, that the loaner should own the commodity with power of disposal: 2ndly, in case of loss, it falls on the borrower.

§ 2. De indebito soluto p. 245. This is agreeable to the general principle, In re obscura melius est favere repetitioni quam adventitio lucro. It is more expedient to favour the Plaintiff in re-demanding what ought not to have been received, than the accidental or adventitious gain of the defendant. See further on the subject of this section, post. Inst. 3. 28. 6 & 7.

*The condictio indebiti, approaches more nearly than any [ *594 ] other form of action in the Roman law, to our action for money had and received; and the leading principle of that action is stated in the present section, viz. si adparet cum dare oportere; if the defendant ought, as an honest man, to pay the money.

The law laid down in the present section, that money paid by Mistake whether of fact or law may be re-demanded (repetita) if in justice it ought to be repaid, is acknowledged not only in Tomkins v. Barnet, 1 Salk. 22. Moses v. M'Farlan, 2 Burr. 1012. Farmer v. Arundel, 2 Sir W. Black. Rep. 824. Bize v. Dickason, 1 Term Rep. 286. Buller v. Harrison, Cowp. 565. Stevenson v. Mortimer, Cowp. 806, but in the later decisions also of the English law. Thus, in Townson v. Wilson, et al., 1 Camp. N. P. Rep. 396, assumpsit lies against Parish officers by the putative father of a bastard child, to recover the surplus of money paid to them as an indemnification for expences, the child soon after dying. So, no action can be maintained upon a note given by such putative father, beyond the amount of damnification. Cole v. Gower, 6 East, 110. Wild v. Griffin, 5 Esp. Ca. 141. : agreeable to the rule of the Roman law, that condictio indebiti non datur ultra quem locupletior factus est qui accepit. Dale v. Sollet, 3 Burr. 2133.

So in Buck v. Buck, 1 Campb. 547, the ground whereon the court nonsuited the plaintiff was the illegality of the transaction, and plaintiff and defendant being in pari delicto, there was no reason to contravene the rule melior est conditio possidentis: this conforms with Tomkins v. Bennet, cited 1 Viner, 269 : see also Howson v. Hancock, 8 Term Rep. 575.

So in Rogers v. Kelly, 2 Campb. 123. The same principle was contended for, viz. that money mistakenly paid may be recovered : but the nonsuit proceeded on the action being brought against the wrong person.

The general principle is also laid down by Shippen in Levy v. B. of U. States, 1 Binn. 27.

BUT WHERE both parties are under a common mistake, the one cannot recover of the other, if the person suing has derived any benefit whatever from the transaction. Taylor v. Hare, 1 New Rep. (4 Bos. & Pul.) 260.

NOR CAN money paid with full knowledge at the time of all the circumstances of law and fact, be recovered back. Bilbie v. Lumley and others, 2 East, 4, 69. Cartwright v. Rowley, 2 Esp. Rep. 723. Knibs v. Hall, 1 Esp. Rep. 84. Brown v. M'Kinally, ib. 279.

NOR CAN money be redemanded, if it be paid where the law would not compel payment, but where natural equity would dictate it. [ *595 ] *Bize v. *Dickinson*, 1 Term Rep. 286. Astley v. Reynolds, Str. 915. Farmer v. Arundell, 2 Sir W. Bl. Rep. 824. Moses v. M'Farlan, 2 Burr. 1012.

WHERE MONEY is paid by a person deceived, he may recover it. Hasser v. Wallis, 1 Salk. 28. 289. Thomas v. Whip, Bull. N. P. 130. 35.

WHERE MONEY has been paid under judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, it cannot be recovered. The great case of Moses and Macferlan, 2 Burr, 1005, in which Ld Mansfield traced the liberal principles that ought to govern the action for money had and received, has not met with the perfect sanction of the profession. It was shaken in principle by Marriot v. Hampton, 7 Term Rep. 269. and Brown v. M'Kinally, 1 sup. and Ch. J. Eyre strongly combats the form of action in Philips v. Hunter, 2 Hen. Black. 416. The old cases are discordant; see Barebone v. Brent; Mead v. Death and Pollard; and Sir Rich. Newdigate v. Davy, cited by Viner, 1 Vin. ab. 268. 269. from Vern. 176. 1 Salk. 22. Lord Ray. 742. I fully concur with the principles of Lord Mansfield's decision in Moses v. Macfarlan. The court of conscience determined, that they were not competent to enter into a consideration of the agreement set up as a defence against the indorsements. The money therefore, was not recovered by Macfarlan against Moses by the judgment of "a court of competent jurisdiction:" else, I allow, it would be conclusive. If my suit depends upon considerations, which the court before whom I am brought, is prohibited from discussing, surely my case has not been determined by their passing upon evidence incomplete and imperfect, not from any fault or neglect in me, but incapacity in them. The form of action, in my opinion, sufficiently embraces the principle of the case.

WHERE MONEY has been paid on a void authority it may be recovered. Lamine v. Dorrell, 2 Lord Raym. 1216. Sir Rich. Newdigate v. Davy, 1 Lord Ray. 742. Bull. N. P. 133, which was for money formerly recovered in the high court of commissioners temp. Jus. 2: Feltham v. Terry, Cowp. 419. Lot 207. where money was paid to an overseer on a conviction afterwards quashed. Jacob v. Allen, 1 Salk. 27. where the attorney of an administrator improperly appointed, was held liable to an Executor.

But see the following cases which are at first sight adverse to these last mentioned decisions. Pond v. Underwood, 2 Lord Ray. 1210. Sadler v. Evans, 4 Burr. 1986. Allen v. Dundas, 3 Term Rep. 125. The question is, whether the person or the court who gave the authority, were competent to give it, at the time when it was given. If so, money received under such an authority is not recoverable again by the person paying it: otherwise it is.

*MONEY PAID on a consideration that has failed, or on a [ *596 ] contract not performed, may be recovered, per Ashurst in Stratton v. Rastall, 2 Term Rep. 369.

So in cases of contracts for the sale of houses and lands, where they are not completed, or where the title is defective. The cases herein cited by Comyns (on contr. 2d Vol. p. 52. N. seq.) I shall merely enumerate for the present, Burrough v. Skinner, 5 Bur. 2. 2639. Flurean v. Thornhill, 2 Bl. Rep. 1078. Richards v. Barton, 1 Esp. N. P. Rep. 268. Camfield v. Gilbert, 4 Esp. N. P. Rep. 223. Chambers v. Griffiths, et al. 1 Esp. N. P. Rep. 150. compared with Johnson v. Johnson, 3 Bos. and Pull. 162. Hunt v. Silk, 5 East 449, Farru v. Nightingal, 2 Esp. N. P. Ca. 94. Gunnis et al. v. Erheart, 1 Hen. Bl. Rep. 289. All these cases are cited in the same order by Comyns.

I forbear to notice here the question of damages in case of eviction, because although connected with this part of the subject, it may be more properly treated under the head of bargain and sale, or the action ex empto.

This Action lies in England for money paid on purchase of annuities, where title is not ready to be tendered on the day agreed on. See the cases in 2 Comyns Contr. 66.

Cases where this action has been brought to recover money received on contracts, rescinded or not performed, depend upon the actual rescinding or putting an end to the contract itself. If one of the parties is empowered to do this, or if both parties consent that it shall be done, then the action for money had and received may be brought: but if the contract still continue open, the remedy is an action for damages, where in the contract must be stated and breaches assigned. Towers v. Barrett, 1 Term Rep. 134. 1 Com. Dig. 134. citing 3 Lev. 364. Weston v. Downey, Doug. 23. Power v. Wills, Cowp. 818. Payne v. Whale, 7 East. 274. Cooke v. Chapman, Comber. 341. Holts' Rep. 35.

Comyns under this head states the case of fee received by counsel for business not performed, which are not considered as recoverable in this action.

Notwithstanding a dictum in Marsh v. Kavenford, Cro. El. 59 and a case in 2 Leon. 111. fee to counsel are now considered as [ *597 ] *quiddam *honorarium*; a present, not a payment; and they are not recoverable by legal suit if not paid, nor subject to repetition when they have been paid. Thornhill v. Evans, 2 At. 332. 3 Bl. Comm. 28. Turner v. Philips, Peake's cas. N. P. 122. Chorley v. Bolcott, 4 Term Rep. 317. The fees of physicians are on the same footing; but this rule does not extend to surgeons, apothecaries, attorneys, solicitors or proctors, who may demand by this action pay for their services. In the courts of Pennsylvania the practitioners act in the capacities of attorneys and counsel also, and can demand fees as I apprehend, in the former capacity only. But if a fee be given as a consultation fee, a retaining fee, or for legal advice, these will be sufficient considerations to prevent the repetition of it. That a fee may be recovered from an attorney in whatever capacity acting, paid beforehand for the performance of business not subsequently performed, has been directly determined in our courts. [In England, no action will lie by a counsellor at law, to recover fees for his services. But in Pennsylvania and in New York, it has been expressly decided, that a counsellor may bring his action for the recovery of a compensation for his services, the same as an attorney or solicitor. 2 Penn. Rep. 75. Adams v. Stevens, 26 Wendell 451.]

At Rome, the counsel (Defensores) were the Patroni, who were the orators and pleaded the cause; Advocati, assistant counsel: Procuratores, proctors, managed the affairs of absent clients, under special authority: the Negotiorum Gestores, were agents, or attorneys in fact, under a general appointment: Cognitores, transacted the business of clients who were on the spot. For a long time the patroni, received no fee as such for any particular cause; but it was the custom for their clients to make them presents, and bequeath them legacies. Cicero mentions it to the honor of Lucullus, that he received great sums in this way; and boasts that he himself had gained by this single article about £200,000 sterling. Nepos also mentions the sums so given to Atticus, as much to his credit. Middleton's life of Cicero, V. 2. p. 514. In the time of Cicero, only one counsel was allowed on a side: hence he occupied four days in his oration pro Cluentio, according to Pliny, Ep. L. 1 Ep. 20.

In the time of Pliny the younger, there were two allowed in cases of impeachment: but they had their portion of time assigned to them. Plin. Ep. L. 2 Ep. and Lib. 4. Ep. 9. In his time also, they received fees; and the senior counsel were accustomed to take into causes, the younger members of the bar. lb. Lib. 6. Ep. 23. But by some of the later emperors the practice of taking fees, was strictly prohibited. In Justinian's time the fee Præmium Honorarium, was not to exceed 100 aurei, for each cause. Dig. 50. 13. 1. 12. But if nothing was given or promised, they might sue for a reasonable compensation. Their office was publici juris, and they might be compelled to act. Cod. 2. 6. 7. Cod. 1. 16. 7. Dig. 3. 1. 4. Students underwent an examination. *Cod. 2. 8. 3. Cod. 2. 7. 8. and 17. If counsel [ *598 ] used abusive language, or defended their client by false statements, or betrayed his cause, (Prævaricatores) they were suspended, removed or otherwise punished. Cod. 2. 6. 6. Dig. 48. 10. 13. 1. Cod. 3. 1. 14. Cod. 2. 7. 1. There was a treasury advocate, similar to our attorney general; a salary officer, employed in public prosecutions. Cod. 2. 9. 4. and 10. 11. 5.

Notorious criminals were not allowed advocates. Cod. 3. 12. 8. this seems to be the origin of the English practice, where counsel allowed to a defendant in a criminal cause, is ex gratia. Criminals were bound to appear. Dig. 48. 1. 3.

In England, and in this country also, as I presume, the Courts interfere in a summary way respecting the conduct of the bar. Turner v. Phillips, ub. sup.

Money had and received will lie for premiums paid on marine insurance, in cases dependant upon condition—where no risk has been run—&c. &c. whereon consult 2 Comyns contr. 86. and the compilers on insurance for reference to the cases, Park, Marshall, &c.

The ACTION lies to recover back money paid on an illegal contract not executed, and when the suit aids the spirit of the law, by proceeding in disaffirmance of the contract. See the cases collected by Comyns, 2 Com. Contr. 108. et seq.

SOMETIMES the right to an office may be tried by indebitatus assumpsit against the present holder of it, to recover the legal fees received; and here also I refer to Comyns's collections of the cases; which I have adopted, not for the purpose of borrowing from a book that deserves to be popular among the profession, but because his arrangement gives me an opening for observations that I can the more appropriately introduce.

I wish money had and received, had been brought long ago for fees, in case of removals from office, by the governors of this state; for there are so many objections to the practice, that I cannot consider the right of removal as fully settled even at this day. It is indeed a crying evil; tending in the last degree to degrade and demoralize the political character of the citizens; exciting and fostering an inexorable spirit of political party, of selfish and insidious hostility, of avaricious and ambitious turbulence, destructive of private harmony and public confidence, and it threatens to fill the offices that ought to be the rewards of knowledge, experience, and good character, with men who have nothing [ *599 ] to recommend them but noisy insolence and servile ignorance. I most sincerely wish the constitution itself could be freed from the imputation of giving sanction to this practice. Therefore, whatever may be the result of the attempt, I shall offer a few considerations to show that some doubts may be entertained, whether a fair construction of that instrument will justify the practice in question.

By Section 8. Article 2. of the constitution of Pennsylvania, the governor has a general power of appointing "all officers, whose offices are established by that constitution, or shall be established by law, and whose appointments are not otherwise provided for."

Can he make an appointment for a less term than for life, under the power thus given to him by the constitution? For he has no other power in this respect, than what he derives from the words above quoted. The law of April 3, 1804, ch. 2501, contains nothing to affect this question.

The constitution is a part of the law of the land; and must be construed according to the common rules of construing all legal instruments assigning powers, conferring privileges, or enjoining duties; to wit, in the way most likely to promote the public good, and least likely to infringe on the liberties of the people. The governor of the state is (not the servant, but) the agent of the people: and his powers, privileges, and duties, are to be construed, not in the way most servicable to his interest, but to their's. Premising these observations, I submit to the reader, that 1st, A power to appoint to an office that is vacant, does not imply a power to remove from an office that is filled.

2dly, A power to appoint to public offices becoming vacant, is necessary to the public good, which requires them to be filled: but the power to remove a deserving officer, may serve to gratify private animosity, or promote electioneering interests, or remunerate electioneering services, but it is not necessary for the public good. The public interest requires no other condition to the appointment, than bene se gesserit, so long as the person appointed shall behave himself well. 2 Anstruth. Rep. 620. 621. Deverell's case.

3dly, A power to appoint generally, does not imply a power of removal according to modern as well as ancient decisions. Co. Litt. 233. a. b. 1 Sid. 74. 2. Anstr. 619. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 157. et seq.: this latter case seems to me to afford strong reasons in favour of my position. See also 3 Mass. Rep. 160.

4thly, A power to appoint generally, will not authorize a special appointment. This follows from the known doctrine of the law, that every power and authority vested in an individual by law, must be **strictly* pursued, and strictly construed: and the [ *600 ] mode of appointment (where power of appointment is given) must follow the terms of the power. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 157. 162. 174. Com. Dig. Poar.

5thly, A power to appoint generally, amounts to a power to appoint for life, or quam dui bene se gesserit. For if no term of limitation be made, how can the office legally terminate, but by death or misbehaviour? This indeed, seems to follow of course. The law expressly is, that grant of an office quam dui bene se gesserit, and grant for life, amount to the same. Co. Litt. 42. 3 Inst. ch. 12. p. 117. 1 Show. Rep. 510. 523. 531. 536. Harcourt v. Fox.

6thly, A power to appoint either for years or durante bene placito, implies a coextensive power of removal, ex vi termini. For the same reason, a general power of appointment, so far from implying, negatives such a power of removal. More especially as it is the settled legal construction of such a general power, that when executed it is for life, or which is the same, during good behaviour.

7thly, The constitution furnishes no words that clearly give an uncontrolled power of removal. If it be not given, it cannot be taken. Powers cannot be assumed by construction, or implication, unless where they are absolutely necessary to effectuate the purpose enjoined by the instrument conferring them: and even this case admits of some doubts. In the case before us, if an office be already filled by a competent officer, the purpose of the constitution is fully answered. The public good requires no further interference.

This reasoning holds stronger in the case of an executive magistrate of a republic, whose powers and privileges should be cautiously defined, and strictly construed in favorem libertatis. I know of no encroachments so dangerous, as constructive powers.

8thly, I would urge, that every office is an estate, a freehold: of which according to the known principles of law, no man can be legally deprived but for some cause known to the law. This is considered as a point settled in Harcourt v. Fox, 1 Show. ub. sup.

9thly, This practice, is contrary to all the analogy of offices, concerning which the governor has not this power. For misdemeanor in office, a judge may be impeached. For gross misconduct out of office, ascertained by verdict in court—for mental or bodily incapacity, he may be removed by address. Conviction by indictment of an infamous offence will furnish cause to displace a justice of the peace. But no conviction, no offence is so efficacious to remove an officer of the land office, a Prothonotary, a Clerk of the Sessions, of the Orphans Court, [ *601 ] *of the Supreme Court, a Register, or a Recorder, as an offence against the good will and pleasure of the governor for the time being. Nor can any degree of knowledge, capacity, industry or integrity, retain such a man in office, who happens to have exercised his indubitable right of suffrage against the opinion of a successful chief magistrate. surely, it could not have been intended that the innocent or conscientious exercise of the most important right that a freeman possesses in a representative government, should be convertible into a crime sufficient to divest him summarily of his vested freehold, and deprive him and his family of their support, without accusation, without proof, without trial, at the arbitrary will and pleasure of a governor. And this is not an imaginary case; but what happens almost universally on a contested election for a governor; and is become so common, that the depravity of public opinion begins to consider as right, this iniquitous system of political warfare and corruption.

10thly, In every grant, whether of a chattel, a landed estate, or an office, the grant is to be construed favourably to the grantee.

11thly, In offices that relate to the administration of justice, or that require much skill and experience, (as all those do, which I have enumerated) the bearing of the law founded on public expedience, is toward appointment for life, or during good behaviour. Harcourt v. Fox, 1 Show. ub. sup. and 4 Mod. Rep. 169. 174. 9 Co. Rep. 97. Sir George Reynel's case: the reasoning arguendo in Veale v. Priour, Hardress, 351. Deverell's case, in 2 Anstr. 620, 621.

That most of the offices I have enumerated, are considered as of great public consequence, appears from the requisites by law annexed to them. They require bond to be entered into for the due performance of the duties: previous residence within the county or district is required of the candidate: they are declared incompatible with the holding of offices under the United States. Would a man be required to have these qualifications, and to make these sacrifices for a tenure that may be put an end to at any moment? Moreover in the case of a Prothonotary or Clerk of a court, it is often three or four years before he can receive fees enough to support his family: they lie over till the event of the suit. Is it reasonable that a man should take an office of this description pro hac vice? In the case of Avery v. The Inhabitants of Tyringham, 3 Mass. Rep. 160, the court unanimously held that the contract with a minister for an indefinite period, was a contract for life with the usual condition of good behaviour, and that he could not be turned out at will. Otherwise, no man of education would accept the office.

*In England all officers of justice, have a freehold for life [ *602 ] in their offices, and cannot be removed but for misdemeanors: see all this strongly laid down in Judge Wilson's Bacon Ab. Vol. 5. p. 200, and the cases there cited. Nor can the king himself grant an office, but according to ancient usage, (Ib. 199 :) nor can he appoint an incompetent person as prothonotary, or master, or clerk of a court; otherwise, the court may refuse to admit him, or may remove him for incompetency, (Ibid. 203.) It would be very well for the state, if such were the settled law at the present day.

12thly, If power be given to appoint for life, or during good behaviour, or what is the same, to appoint generally, the law is, that any limitation is void; and the officer is in, not by the limitation, but by the prerogative, statute, instrument, or custom, that confers the power of appointment. The wording of the commission therefore is of no importance. Hunt v. Ellisdon, et al. Dyer, 152. cited and confirmed by Justice Eyres, 1 Show. 517. Colt v. Glover, Hob. 153. cited and confirmed by Holt, 1 Sh. 535. Harcourt v. Fox, 12 Mod. 43. 200. Saunders v. Owen, 5 Mod. 386.

I do not again touch on the public good so manifestly requiring this construction, or on the public evils so strongly marking the prevailing practice: but I quit this side of the argument with observing, that in a doubtful case the construction is by law in favour of the grantee.

I am well aware that formidable considerations arrange themselves on the opposite side of the question.

Thus practice has been acquiesced in during the whole of the administrations of Gov. M'Kean, and Gov. Snyder, and in two cases under

Gov. Mifflin, Scott vice Redick, and Ross vice Jacks. But I do not wonder at this. All parties agree in the practice, as necessary to reward their partizans; and the officer removed, expects of course to be reinstated, when his faction shall again succeed to their opponents in politics. During the proprietary government, no man was ever removed from office compulsorily.

This question, I have been told, has been agitated in New York state, and the officer left without remedy: but I am not acquainted with the case, or its circumstances. At any rate, we are not bound by the precedent.

It has been urged, that the officers subjected to this power of removal, have no punishment for delinquency, or incapacity annexed to them, and therefore that such a discretion is necessarily invested in the governor for the time being: but the legislature by annexing penalties to offences, as in the case of dueling, or by declaring the causes of a mo-[ *603 ] tion, can take away this necessity whenever they *please.

In the mean time the officer for misuser or non-user is open to indictment, and his bonds are liable to be put in suit.

The constitution it is said, ought to be construed popularly, and not by the rules of strict law: but I do not know how to define a popular construction; and the rules of law are founded not merely on experience, but on considerations also of general expedience.

The people (it is said) by the governor, their agent, have a right to resume ad libitum powers conferred for a certain time: to which I reply, that powers so conferred have always been construed appointments for life, with the usual implied condition of good behaviour. Nor have the people or their agent, any right to interfere in the construction of powers given by the constitution, while that constitution continues in existence. The incumbent once appointed, must be displaced by legal adjudication.

The spirit of the English constitution leans to permanent appointments, whereas frequent changes, and even exclusion by rotation best harmonize with the spirit of a republican constitution.

Still, removals ought to be subject to some rule founded on the terms of the power given: nor is it a very republican construction, that converts the chief magistrate into an arbitrary tyrant, that exonerates him from responsibility, and authorizes him to punish his political opponents as criminals, and substitute private rancour for public justice.

My construction it may be said, would deprive a governor of the choice of his confidential officers, such as a secretary of state, and compel him to retain his political or personal enemy in such a station. But this would seldom happen if the office were for life; and at all events, the officer is compellable to do his duty, and obey the directions of the chief magistrate, who may choose his advisers where he pleases.

THE most permanent objection to my reasoning is, the undisputed practice under the constitution of the United States, wherein the words of the power are almost the same with those above quoted.

But I cannot think the analogy of the two cases will hold, considering that under the constitution of the United States, the exercise of the right of removal is subject to the formidable check of the senate's concurrence in the successor nominated by the President. A difference so important, as to destroy the force of all reasoning from the one to the other. A power in every instance controlled in its exercise by the senate, cannot be compared with a power in every instance uncontrolled; and exercised as the caprice of the governor for the time being, heated by recent opposition, and goaded by revenge, may dictate.

*I do not pretend to urge these reasonings as conclusive, [ *604 ] but I cannot help thinking that under the magnitude of the evil, they are worth discussing. I state them with hesitation, but not without hope, that a similar view of the subject may be taken by some person more competent than myself to bring the subject into full day.

Under the mild administration of Gov. Mifflin, there was not much to complain of on this subject. The personal virulence indulged in, against Thomas M'Kean, (upon the whole, the most able and independent Governor this state has yet known) might excuse many of his removals, even where reasonable objections to the officer in other respects, would not justify them. But the power itself, is not necessary to the public interest; it affords too much temptation to the exclusive gratification of private feeling; and its exercise of late years, has not tended to lessen the slightest of the objections to which it is liable.

As to the other cases wherein the action for money had and received will lie, I refer to 2 Comyns, 1—137, Selwyn and Espinass's Nisi Prius compilations, and Evans's Essays on this action.

[In regard to the rule or measure of damages, in actions at law, for a compensation for civil injuries to the person, or property, or character, the reader will find extensive and valuable information in Mr. Theodore Sedgwick's "Treatise on the Measure of Damages: New York, John S. Voorhies, 1847;" in which, said Chancellor Kent, the subject is discussed with superior learning, ability and candour. The general rule is, that if a case be free from fraud, malice, wilful negligence or oppression, the compensation is taken strictly for the real injury or actual pecuniary loss to the party, and perhaps the natural and legal consequences of the act complained of, and the actual costs and expenses sustained. But if fraud, malice, or mala mens mingle in the controversy, the claim goes beyond absolute compensation, and punitive, vindictive, or exemplary damages by way of punishment and for example's sake, seem to be admitted in the jurisprudence of England and of this country. 2 Wils. 205. 3 Ib. 18. It follows necessarily that, except in matters of contract, the amount of damages when bad passions or motives are intermixed, must be left to the sound discretion of a jury, to be exercised according to the circumstances, and under the wise superintendence of the court. See Measure of Damages, by Sedgwick, p. 27—46, p. 75, 76. and ch. 3. and ch. 18. of that treatise. It is difficult to deduce any precise measure of damages from the numerous cases, but the courts have in these cases discountenanced the idea of speculative or remote damages, though it is impossible to ascertain any certain rule from the numerous cases which remarkably illustrate "the oscillations of the judicial pendulum." The cases under the head of remote and consequential damages, are most industriously collected by Mr. Sedgwick, in the third chapter of his treatise, to which the reader is referred.]

They differ, in as much as, 1st, The judicial relate to the jurisdiction of the judge, the prætorian are confined to subjects and persons under the jurisdiction of the prætor. 2dly, The judicial stipulations, are subsequent to the hearing of the cause, quia tum demum judex quis esse incipit. Cod de lite contest. Prætorian on the contrary takes place previous to or, pending a case; etiam lite non contestata. Dig. 3. 2. 40. penult. 3dly, Judicial stipulations act upon the party only, and do not require sureties or pledges, while the Prætorian, always require security. Dig. 46. 5. 7.

§ 2. De prætoriiis, p. 255.

Ut in iis contineantur Ædilitiæ. Ædilitiæ stipulationes sunt, quibus venditor cavet de morbis et vitiiis rerum venalium: puta rem morbosam non esse: servum fugitivum non esse: et de ceteris, quæ edicto ædiliunt promittuntur. Dig. 21. 1.

Prætoris ergo vocabulum hic in sensu latissimo, accipi videtur pro quovis magistratu cui est jurisdictio. Heinecc.

An instance of these Prætorian stipulations, is our writ of Estrepement.

In Jefferson v. The Bishop of Durham et al. 1 Bos. and Pul. 108. it was determined that no court of law, had the power of issuing a writ of prohibition to prevent a bishop from committing waste: and it was not settled whether the court of chancery had. In Williams v. Macnamara, 8 Vez. 70. injunction against cutting trees that “contribute to ornament.” In Smith v. Collyer, 8 Vez. 89. injunction against cutting timber was refused, where the title was disputed, because it was trespass and not waste. It would have been better had the law been otherwise, for the reason of the thing is clearly with the applicants.

These Ædilitian stipulations, were the warranties of sound commodity and good title, exacted of every seller in favour of every buyer.

The old Ædilitian law was very strict, and required the seller not only to declare all the faults of the slave, the animal, the commodity, he sold, but held him bound even for those faults he did not himself know. *Thus Dig. 21. 1. 1. 2. Causa hujus edicti proponendi est ut occurratur fallaciis vendientium et emptoribus succurratur, quicumque decepti a venditoribus fuerint. Dummodo sciamus venditorem etiam si ignorarit ea, quæ Ædiles præstari jubent, tamen teneri debere. Nec est hoc iniquum. Poterit enim ea nota habere venditor: nec interest emptoris cui fallatur ignorantia venditoris an calliditate. To remedy these cases of fraud or of ignorance on the part of the seller, they gave the action quantum minoris, the action redhibitoria, and the action ex emptio.

The action quantum minoris, was given to a purchaser who was induced to pay an extravagant price for a commodity, beyond its value. Certainly rejected with great propriety in modern times, as an inconvenient practice, encouraging law suits without number.

The actio redhibitoria compelled the seller to take back the commodity and return the price, where the quality was worse than might reasonably be expected, and rendered the article purchased unfit for the purposes of the purchaser. In some cases of refusal on part of the seller, this was an actio in duplum, compelling the seller to pay double the original price.

The actio ex emptio, was given on defect of title, and in cases of eviction; of which hereafter.

The civil law maxim doubtless is, that a sound price warrants a sound commodity: 1 Domat. 80. and so it has been determined in Whitefield v. M'Cleod, 2 Bays, 380: and so indeed it seems to me the case ought to be determined. But this is not the law of England or of Pennsylvania, where the maxim is Caveat Emptor, and where in common cases, the seller warrants nothing but his title to the commodity sold. Nor has the purchaser any remedy on discovery that his purchase is defective or unsound, unless he made a previous and special stipulation, that the seller should stand to all defects. The cases in England establish these principles.

1st That the seller is bound by his warranty of title at or just before the sale. But he is not bound by a warranty made after the sale is completed. Finch's law, 289.

2dly That a warranty given at one time, when no sale takes place, does not bind even between the same parties, at a subsequent time, when a new contract with sale takes place, 1 Str. 414. anonymous.

3dly that no action lies as to the quality of the thing sold, unless there was fraud or deceit in the conduct of the seller at the time, or unless there was on his part an express warranty of the quality. If the plaintiff proceeds on the ground of fraud, he must prove that it [ *610 ] was with *knowledge in the seller at the time, scienter; and this must be laid and proved in an action of trespass on the case.

If he proceeds on an express warranty, he may bring assumpsit for the money, but he must distinctly prove such a warranty.

4thly That where there is no deceit, or no warranty pretended, the seller is without remedy as to the quality.

5thly That the sale of a personal chattel raises an implied warranty of title, has been decided in Defrees v. Trumper, 1 Johns. N. Y. Rep. after 2 Bl. Comm. 451. and the civil law: that it is sufficient to support assumpsit for the price paid.

6thly But no action of deceit will lie against the seller who sells without title unless a scienter be proved: Medina v. Stoughton, 1 Lord Ray. 593. Nor even then, if the seller was out of possession; for that ought to have put the purchaser on his guard. Ib. and Roswell v. Vaughan, Cro. Jac. 196.

That there is no implied warranty of quality, appears from the following cases. Co. Litt. 102. 1 Fonb. 109. 371. 373. n. k. 2 Bl. Com. 451. Gov. and Co. of the B. of England v. Neuman, 1 Lord Ray. 442. Price v. Neal, 3 Burr. 354. Steuart v. Wilkins, Doug. 20. Bree v. Holbeck, Doug. 630. Pasley v. Freeman, 3 Term Rep. 57. per Buller. Fenn v. Harrison, 3 Term Rep. 757. Mead v. Young, 4 Term Rep. 28. Fydell v. Clark, 1 Esp. Rep. 447. Williamson v. Allison, 2 East, 448. Parkinson v. Lee, 2 East, 314. a leading case. Dunlop v. Waugh, Peake's Ca. N. P. 123.

Musgrove v. Gibbs, 1 Dall. 217. Moses Levy, v. Bank of the U. S. 4 Dall. 434. 1 Binn. 27. Seixas v. Wood, 2 Caine's N. Y. Rep. 48. Snell et al. v. Moses et al. 1 Johns. N. Y. 96. Perry v. Aaron, Ib. 129. Defrees v. Trumper, Ib. 274.

This seems to me a most demoralizing principle of decision. I know of no argument, that can be adduced to prove, that if I give a hundred dollars for a commodity that ought to be worth a hundred dollars, I am defrauded if it be worth only ten. You say the seller knew nothing of it. My answer is, that before he took a hundred dollars from me, he ought to have known that the thing he pretended to sell was reasonably worth that price. He had every means of knowing this; and to sell it for a hundred dollars without knowing it, is as much a fraud as if he had asked a thousand. Generally, the buyer relies on the seller. Nor can the buyer cheat the seller; whereas, the seller under our law, in nine instances out of ten, may cheat his buyer with impunity. The rule of caveat emptor, ought to be changed into caveat venditor. It is a disgrace to the law that such a maxim should *be adopted, and I rejoice to see that the good sense of the South Carolina [ *611 ] bench has revolted at it.

The chancery cases in support of this rule, ought to be classed as cases in support of falsehood and fraud. Oldfield v. Round, 5. Vez. 508. Shirley v. Davis, cited 6 Vez. 678. Dyer v. Hargrave, 10 Vez. 505. Bowles v. Atkinson, Sugd. 199. Anon. in Chan. 1803. Ib. 214. Notwithstanding some gleams of common honesty appear in Mellish v. Motteux, Peak's Ca. 115. compared with Oldfield v. Round, 5 Vez. 508.

[On the subject of implied warranty of quality, the doctrine now held by the English courts appears to be, 1, That in the simple sale of goods and merchandise, there is, in general, no such implied warranty—2. That from usage of the particular line of trade, a warranty may be implied: as, for example, where, in the sale of a commodity, the custom of trade is to specify whether it has received sea damage, the omission to state this fact raises an implied warranty that it is undamaged—3. That the executory contract with, or order to, a manufacturer, implies a warranty that the article shall be fit for the purpose of the order. These seem to be the only relaxations of the old rule of law, that the seller is not responsible for the quality or goodness of the article sold, unless he expressly warranted it to be sound and good, or unless he has made a fraudulent representation or used some fraudulent concealment concerning it, and which amounts to a warranty in law.

In the state of New York, the Supreme Court has strongly enforced the distinction between executed and executory contracts. In the case of Howard v. Hoey, 23 Wendell's Rep. 350, it declared, that in a contract of sale of an article of merchandise at a future day, where there is no selection or setting apart at the time of specific articles, so as to pass the property in presenti, merchantable quality bringing the average market price is intended. In the case of an executed sale, where there is neither fraud nor express warranty, the general rule is, that the purchaser takes the property at his own risk, as to its quality and condition. Moses v. Mead, 1 Denio's Rep. 378. The case of a sale by sample, forms an exception to this general rule. There a warranty is implied, that the bulk of the article corresponds in quality with the sample exhibited. Another exception is, that where provisions are sold for domestic use, there is an implied warranty that they are wholesome. But where provisions are sold as merchandise, and not for immediate consumption by the purchaser, there is no implied warranty of soundness. Van Bracklin v. Fonda, 12 Johns. Rep. 468. Moses v. Mead, 1 Denio's Rep. 378.]

That it is the duty of the seller to declare the faults of the commodity before sale, is not only conformable to the Ædilitian injunctions, but is sanctioned by Cicero, Grotius, Puffendorf and Valer. Maximus. See the reference in Sugden's law of Vendors and Purchasers, page 1.

Tit. XX. De inutilibus stipulationibus, p. 257. Things to which no title can be made, are not the subjects of stipulation. But if they be sold by contract, the purchaser thus deceived has his action ex empto. Dig. 18. 1. 25. 1. Dig. 18. 1. 4. 5. Dig. 18. 1. 62. 1.

§ 2. De facto vel datione alterius. p. 258. I do not see the valid reason of this; for if A. promise that his debtor B. shall pay C. a hundred dollars, and C. gives a fair consideration, relying on the promise, it is in fact the promise of A. to pay the money: there is an implied guaranty.

§ 4. De eo in quem confertur obligatio vel solutio, p. 258. This is headed in Ferriere, Alteri stipulari non licet.

To the doctrine of this section there are three exceptions: a father may stipulate for his son, or vice versa: a debtor may stipulate in favour of his own agent, or his creditor: where the promissor is bound in a penalty wherein the stipulator is interested.

§ 10. De conditione impossibili, p. 261. I have already treated of impossible conditions. By the English law, a bond with an impossible condition, is a single bond. Co. Litt. 206. 209. But if a possible condition be made void by the act of God, the act of the law, or the act of the obligee, the obligation is saved. In Tuteng v. Hubbard, 3 Bos. & Pull. 291. a Swedish vessel freighted by a British subject was embargoed: held that the freight could not be carried by proceeding after the embargo was taken off when the goods embarked would have been out of season. The reason of this section will apply to immoral and illegal conditions.

§ 11. De absentia, p. 261. nostra constitutione, Cod. 8. 38. 14.

§ 12. De stipulatione post mortem, p. 261. Because it may [ *612 ] enure to *the heir. See a case somewhat like this, Burgh et al. v. Preston, 8 Term Rep. 483.

§ 16. De promissione scripta in Instrumento, p. 263. This is analogous to justice Wilmot's idea, that there can be no nude pact, if deliberately written.

Tit. XXI. De fide jussoribus, p. 266. That stipulation and promises may be more certain, Caution and Sureties may be added to them. Fide jussor, a surety, called otherwise repromissor, adpromissor, sponsor, prædes, vades, is one who binds himself in the same contract conjointly with the debtor, for the greater security of the creditor or stipulator.

Fide-jussor, differs somewhat from Expromissor, who discharges the first debtor, and assumes the debt. Dig. 12. 4. 4. Fide jussio differs from Constitutum, which is a promise on a nude pact without stipulation. Inst. 4. 6. 9.

Dr. Wood, from whom I have taken the above, adds gravely, "It is made a question whether our Saviour was fide jussor, or sponsor only, or expromissor for the Fathers under the old testament." A question that may safely be left to the Canonists to discuss.

The obligation of a surety binds his heirs, though no mention be made of them. Inst. 3. 21. 2. In England, the executor is, but the heir is not so bound. 1 Inst. 209. a. 210. b.

If there be more sureties than one, each is bound in solidum, Inst. 3. 21. 4. whether it is agreed or not; but by the later law, they are allowed three advantages, viz.

1. Beneficium ordinis, sive excussionis, seu discussionis: by which he may compel the creditor to sue the principal debtor, first. 1 Nov. 3. c. 1. Unless security be given judicially in a cause pending against the principal.

2. Beneficium divisionis. Inst. 3. 21. 4. by which a creditor is driven to resort to each surety for his proportional share only.

3. Beneficium cedendarum actionum. By which a surety sued for the whole debt, can demand of the creditor to transfer over, his actions against the other sureties, before he shall recover the whole from the one sued.

The surety becomes bound co-extensively with the debtor, in respect both of sum and time. Nor can he bind himself beyond that. Inst. 3. 21. 5. Dig. 46. 18. 7. If the surety is in danger, he may sue before the time of payment, or demand indemnification. Dig. 17. 1. 38. 1. If the surety being sued, makes a bad defence, the debtor may except to paying him. Dig. 17. 1. 8. 8. and 29. 4.

Minors, Inst. 3. 20. 9. and Soldiers, Cod. 4. 65. 31. are prohibited *from being sureties. So are women, under the senatus consultum Villeianum, Dig. 16. 1. pr. Wood. civ. l. 226, 227.

The judiciary cautions or securities belong to another place.

The common fide jussion, is an accessory stipulation. Dig. 45. 1. 5. 2.

Fide jussors might be taken in cases ex delicto ex quasi ex delicto. Dig. 45. 1. 8. 5. and 45. 1. 70. but in respect of pecuniary penalties and punishments only.

Fide jussors bind their heirs, because the latter receive the benefit of all the civil contracts of the decedent. Dig. 44. 7. 49. Dig. 50. 17. 59.

In a former part of the notes, I gave an account of the case of Thursby v. Gray's administrators, at the court of common pleas, Northumberland county; vide ante, p. 462. Since writing that note I have had occasion to enquire further concerning that case: and I find by my friend, Mr. Watts, who took the exception to my charge, that although the case was but slightly argued either before me, or before the supreme court, the substance of his objections to my opinion, was as follows :

That as the seller did not choose to sell his goods on the credit of the purchaser alone, but thought fit to insist on two persons to be jointly bound, he had a right so to do : therefore as to him, they were both principals ; though with respect to each other, they might stand in the relation of principal and surety. Of their contracts, interest, or motives, he could not have, and need not have any knowledge : all he was to look to, was, two securities equally and jointly bound ; and such were Spring and Gray. They might dispose of the goods between them as they pleased : the one might be a nominal, the other a real purchaser ; or they might be joint purchasers ; or neither might be the real purchaser ; but both become joint and equal obligors. His right therefore was against both and either.

The cases of negotiable notes do not apply : for the course of mercantile transactions, require that mercantile paper should be current on the faith of each and every name that appears upon it : for one man may prefer it for one name, another for another.

Every indorser is a fresh drawer, and every name on the paper a principal. The reason of speedy notice is, that the person who has passed the note, and to whom notice is to be given, has put the right of calling for payment out of his own power, and transferred it to the holder.

The cases of security for the performance of services, have no relation to the present case.

[ *614 ] *Here, both parties undertake the performance of the condition of the bond ; in the cases of services to be performed, one only is to perform them : and if he neglects the duty, his employer alone can know it, and alone can give notice of the neglect.

I do not know what answer to give to this argument, conclusive to my own mind : and I incline therefore to agree with the decision of the court. Nesbit v. Smith, would go near to bear out my charge ; but in that case the surety gave notice to the obligee to sue, who afterward gave time at his own risk. The early chancery cases go the full length of my doctrine ; but they are too brief, and too loosely reported to be relied on. To the list of references that requires strict construction in favour of sureties, add ex parte Rushworth, 10 Vez. 409. Edowes v. Neill, 4 Dall. 133. and Ludlow v. Simond, 2 Caine's cases in error. N. Y. pages 29 and 57. I have dwelt the longer on Thursby v. Gray's Adm'rs. because I regard it as a case of great practical importance, and which I hope to see more fully reported with the reasons of the decision at length.

§ 4. De pluribus fide jussoribus, p. 267. In Cowell v. Edwards, 2 Bos. and Pull. 268. and the next case, Sir Edward Deering v. Lord Winchelsea, it was determined that one of many co-sureties paying the whole debt, could only sue each of the other co-sureties for his ratable proportion. These cases are commented on with some disapprobation by the Lord Chancellor in Craythorne v. Swinburne. They appear however to be conformable to the civil law doctrine; and are well founded in equity, though perhaps not in public expedience, inasmuch as they no doubt, tend to the multiplication of suits.

To this title respecting fide jussion, should be added Inst. lib. 4. tit. 14. § 4. Quæ exceptiones fide jussoribus prosunt vel non, wherein the general rule is laid down, that sureties may avail themselves of all the defences which their principal might have used.

Tit. XXII. De literarum obligationibus, p. 269.

Ex principalibus constitutionibus. See the constitution of the Emperors Honorius, Theodosius, and Constantine, in the second book of the Codex Theodosianus, title Si certum.

Per nostram constitutionem. Cod. 4. 30. 14.

This proceeds on the principle of our limitation acts.

Tit. XXIII. De obligationibus ex consensu, p. 279. These differ from stipulations wherein the presence of the parties was necessary. Dig. 44. 7. 2.

Tit. XXIV. De emptione et venditione, p. 271. This is a nominate contract confirmed by the civil law. It supercedes Barter and Exchange, *the most ancient mode of traffic. It gives [ *615 ] rise to the action ex vendito against the buyer, for the price agreed on; and to the action ex empto against the seller, in case of defective title or non-delivery in the thing sold. Dig. 18. 1. 28. The buyer bringing the action ex empto must tender the price, and the seller suing ex vendito must tender the thing sold.

Hence, nothing forbids that one man should sell the property of another: he does so at the risk of the action ex empto, in case of eviction. Dig. 18. 1. 28.

The seller is considered as in all cases warranting the title. After the bargain is completed, the purchaser stands to all losses. Even an express agreement, that the seller should not warrant the title against his own act, was void, as encouraging fraud. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 7.

Warranty under the Roman law, is either express or implied. It is implied in every case, but may be enlarged or restrained by express covenant. Dig. 19. 1. 11. 18. unless the warranty be so restrained, the seller is bound to answer not only the price paid but the damages.

evicta re, non ad pretium dumtaxat recipiendum, sed ad id quod interest competit; ergo et si minor (minoris pretii) esse cepit, damnum emptoris est. Dig. 21. 2. 70. This is fair reciprocity. The value is considered, not at the time of the sale, but at the time of eviction, and each party runs his chance of what value the article may then be. Dig. ub. sup. Dig. 19. 1. 45. Sub init. and Dig. 21. 2. 66. 3. in fin. If one hath built, or planted on an estate, and is evicted, either the person recovering or the person who made sale without title, must stand to the damages sustained by the bonâ fide purchaser. Illud expeditius videbatur: si mihi alienam aream vendideris, et in eam ego ædificavero, atque ita eam dominus evincit. Nam, quia possim petentem dominium, nisi impensam ædificiorum solvat, dolo malo exceptione summovere; magis est ut res ad periculum venditoris non pertineat. Quod et in servo dicendum est, si in servitute, non in libertatem evinceretur, ut dominus mercedes et impensas præstare debeat. Quod si emptor non possideat ædificium vel servum, ex empto habebit actionem; in omnibus tamen his casibus, si sciens quis alienum vendiderit omnimodo teneri debeat. Dig. 19. 1. 45. 1. It appears to me that both cases should be put on the ground of the scienter: viz. if the owner knew the building was proceeding, he ought to pay the value to the person evicted; if the seller knew he had no title, the whole damages ought to fall on him. And such I apprehend would be the law even in Pennsylvania and New York, in cases of eviction from real property by title paramount. If the seller knew his defect of title, he ought to be liable not merely to principal and interest, but to all [ *616 ] *damage. The buyer was liable for mesne profits, and if the improvements exceeded the mesne profits, the buyer had the advantage. Dig. 6. 1. 48. If the buyer makes a weak defence, and does not vouch the seller to warranty, the latter is discharged. Dig. 21. 2. 53. When the buyer has given notice to the seller of the adverse suit, the latter is bound to attend to the defence. Dig. 21. 2. 63. 1. The buyer might bring ex empto on discovery that his title was bad, even before suit brought by the real owner. Dig. 19. 1. 30. 1.

There was no distinction as to warranty, between real and personal property. Cod. 8. 45. 6.

Under the Roman law, the contract by mutual consent of the parties constituted the Emptio venditio: which was completed by delivery on one side, and payment on the other. The payment of the stipulated price, or even of earnest money (Arrha), was not of the essence of the contract: it was binding by mutual consent alone. It was consummated indeed by payment and delivery, but its obligatory nature existed before. The arrha (earnest) was evidence only of the contract, argumentum emptionis et venditionis contractæ. The Locus Pœnitentiæ was allowed, while the mutual assent was as yet incomplete in point of form; (section

1 of this title) and if exercised, was exercised on the terms prescribed in this section. But the emptio venditio, did not require the verbal forms prescribed in the contract ex stipulatur, as Roberts on the statute of frauds (note 84) erroneously supposes.

By that statute, the Bargain and Sale has different features from the Emptio venditio, and the earnest is a part, and not evidence only of the contract; and furnishes the right of action, but not without tender of the price on one side, or of the commodity on the other. Longfort v. Administratrix, of Tyler, 1 Salk. 113. Hob. 41.

"If a man by word of mouth sells me his horse or any other thing, and I promise nothing for it, this is void and will not alter the property of the thing sold. But if one sell me a horse, or any other thing for money or other valuable consideration, and the same thing is to be delivered to me at a day certain, and by our agreement a day is appointed for the payment of the money—or all or part of the money is paid in hand—or I give earnest money to the seller—or I take the thing bought by agreement into my possession, where no money is paid, earnest given or day appointed for the payment, in all these cases there is good bargain and sale of the thing to alter the property thereof. And in the first case I may have an action for the thing, or the seller for his money: (upon tender that is): in the second case I may sue for and recover the thing bought: in the third case I may sue for the thing bought, and the seller for the re- [ *617 ] covery of his money: in the fourth case where earnest is given, we may have reciprocal remedies against each other: and in the last case, the seller may sue for his money." Sheph. Touch. of Comm. Ass. 222.

But, notice of readiness to receive the goods, and to pay the price at the time agreed on, is equivalent to tender: and will be a sufficient averment to support the declaration: for the terms on each side are concurrent contracts. Rawson v. Johnston, 1 East. 203, and the cases therein cited.

Bargain and sale may be rescinded by mutual consent before the rights of other persons are concerned, but not afterward. Smith v. Field, 5 Term Rep. 403.

In Cooke v. Oxley, 3 Term Rep. 653. it was determined that though the seller give time to the proposed buyer to deliberate upon the purchase, and the latter within the time agrees to buy, yet, if no consideration intervene, the seller may refuse to sell. The same principle in Hahson v. Meyer, 6 East, 614.

See further on this subject, the cases digested by the compilers, Sugden, 174. 1 Com. Contr. 83. 89. 90. 2 Com. Contr. 210. Bailey and Bogert v. Ogden and Ogden, 3 Johnston, N. Y. Rep. 399, also contains a good investigation of some of the points first above noticed.

The doctrine of sales dependent upon market overt, is not adopted in New York state, so as to give title to a bonâ fide purchaser to goods which he bought of A. but which at the time belonged to B, and A had no title to, or right to sell. So that here, where there is no market overt, a bonâ fide sale does not change the property as against the rightful owner. See Kent's observations in Wheelwright v. Depeyster, 1 Johnson's N. Y. Rep. p. 479, 480, who cites the civil law maxim, nemo plus juris in alium transferre potest quam ipse habet; Pothier Traité de vente, part 1. 7. 2 Erskine's Inst. of the law of Scotland, 481. and Lord Kaime's His. law tracts, tit. History of Property.

I am not at present aware of any other case on this point, in this country, except Cheriot v. Foussat, 3. Binn. 220. 258.

[The civil law maxim mentioned above, is equally a maxim of the common law; and a sale imports nothing more than that the bonâ fide purchaser succeeds to the rights of the vendor. In the Courts of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio, Kentucky, and Louisiana, as well as in the state of New York, and in the Supreme Court of the United States, it has been held that the Saxon Institution of markets overt had not been adopted in this country; and consequently, as a general rule, the title of the true owner cannot be lost without his own free act and consent. Ventress v. Smith, 10 Peters U. S. Rep. 161. Hoffman v. Carow, 22 Wendell's Rep. 285. In that case it was adjudged by the Court of Errors, that an auctioneer who had sold stolen goods was liable to the owner in an action of trover, notwithstanding that the goods were sold by him, and the proceeds paid over to the thief, without notice of the felony. In the same Court, in Salters v. Everett, 20 Wendell's Rep. 267, it was held, that the doctrine that possession carries with it the evidence of property, so as to protect a person acquiring property in the usual course of trade, is limited to cash, bank bills, checks and notes payable to the bearer or transferrable by delivery; and that when the owner of personal property has not conferred upon the vendor the apparent right of property or right of disposal, a purchaser is not protected against the claims of the owner, though such purchaser acquire the property for a fair and valuable consideration, in the usual course of trade, and without notice of any conflicting claim, or of suspicious circumstances calculated to awaken inquiry, or put him on his guard. The owner confers such apparent right of property upon the vendor when he sells goods and delivers possession thereof, although they were in fact obtained from him fraudulently; and he confers the apparent right of disposal when he furnishes the vendor with the external indicia of such right, as where a bill of lading is sent to a consignee with the power of transfer. An authority to sell may be implied, as well as be express, as where goods are placed by the owner in the custody of a person whose common business it is to sell goods.]

In Pennsylvania, by act of 28th May, 1715. § 6. The words grant, bargain, sale, shall be adjudged an express covenant to the grantee, that the grantor was seized of an indefeasible estate in fee freed from incumbrances done or suffered from the grantor, and also for quiet enjoyment against the grantor, his heirs and assigns. These words however do not amount to a general warranty. 2 Binney, 95. Lessee of Gratz v. Ewalt.

[This decision will equally apply in Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Mississippi and Alabama, each of which states has a statute similar to the Pennsylvania statute of 1815. (4 Kent's Commentaries, 473.) In New York, it was decided, that the words "grant, bargain, sell, alien and confirm," did not imply a covenant of title in a conveyance in fee; though the word "grant," or the word "demise," would imply a covenant of title in a lease for years: and that the word "give," would amount to an implied warranty during the life of the feoffor. (Frost v. Raymond, 2 Caines Rep. 188. Graunis v. Clark, 8 Cowen's Rep. 36.) This doctrine, which was fully proved by an examination of the authorities, is applicable in those states which continue to be governed on this point by the common law. In North Carolina and Alabama, the words "give, grant, bargain, sell, &c. do not imply any warranty of title. (Prickets v. Dickens, 1 Murphy's Rep. 343. Powell v. Lyles, ib. 348. Roabuck v. Dupray, 2 Alabama Rep. N. S. 535.) And now, in New York, the Revised Statutes have given to deeds of conveyance of the inheritance of freehold, the denomination of grants; and though deeds of bargain and sale, and of lease and release, may continue to be used, they are to be deemed grants, and no greater estate or interest passes by any grant or conveyance than the grantor himself possessed at the delivery of the deed, or could then lawfully convey, except that every grant is conclusive as against the grantor and his heirs claiming from him by descent. (N. Y. Revised Statutes, Vol. 1. p. 738. sec. 137, 138, 142, 143.) So, in Tennessee, the statutory deed operates as a grant to pass nothing but what the bargainor may lawfully sell, and the title passes, not by force of the Statute of Uses, but of the registered deed. Miller v. Miller, 1 Meigs' Rep. 484.]

I have already stated the civil law, and our law on the general subject *of the sale of chattels, under the Ædilitian [ *618 ] regulations. The case of eviction from real property under an ejectment with verdict and judgment in favour of title paramount, is by no means settled by uniformity of decision in this country.

As to the measure of damages to be allowed to a bonâ fide purchaser of land under a warranty, or covenant of seisin in the seller, or covenant for quiet enjoyment, where the purchaser is afterward evicted by title paramount, and where no fraud is alleged against the seller, different courts have considered the subject differently.

Neither in Pennsylvania, or in England, has it ever been held that the real owner recovering his possession, was in any way liable to pay for the improvements made on his land. If indeed he lay by, and concealed his title, while those improvements were carrying on with his knowledge, he ought not to recover at all. East India Company v. Vincent, 2 Atk. 83. Anonymous, Bunb. 53. Savage v. Forster, 9 Mod. 37. Hanning v. Ferrers, 2 Eq. Ca. ab. 357. Anonymous, 3 Eq. Ca. ab. 522, 523. Rex v. Inhabitants of Butterton, 6 Term Rep. 554. Doe on demise of Winckby v. Pye, 1 Esp. Rep. N. P. 364. Fowkes v. Joyce, Prec. Ch. 7. Keech v. Hall, Doug. 22. Weakley v. Bucknell, Cowp. 473. I suspect we do not know enough of the circumstances under which the successful owner was held liable to the value of improvements under the civil law.

In England, the measure of damages, was the value of the land at the time when the deed with warranty was executed. For which in our American cases, the following authorities have been cited: Bracton, 384. 19 Hen. 6. 46. a. 61. a. Bro. ab. tit. Voucher, pl. 69. Ib. tit. Recouer in value, pl. 59. 22 Vin. Ab. 141, 145, 146. Ib. pl. 1, 2. 9. Ib. 1, 2, 3. 1 Reeves' history of the English law, 448. Glanville, G. 3. ch. 4. Ballot v. Ballot, Godbold, 151.

Such was the determination in New York: (to wit, that however the land might have risen in value, or whatever improvements the purchaser might have made, yet that) the measure of damages was the purchase money and interest. Staats v. Executors of Ten Eyck, 3 Cains 111. Pitcher v. Livingston, 4 Johns. Rep. 1. Morris v. Phelps, 5 Johns. Rep. 49. From this doctrine Judge Spencer dissented, 4 Johns. Rep. 18; holding that the purchaser was entitled to the value of the land with the improvements at the time of eviction.

In Massachusetts, Marston v. Hobbs, 2 Mass. Rep. 407. and in Blackford v. Page, Ib. 455. Parsons, Ch. J., lays down the old English method of proceeding by vouching the warrantor, or bringing warrantia chartæ upon the warranty; and declares the law to be, in the case [ *619 ] **before the court*, that the measure of damages was the consideration money paid and interest; that being the amount of the plaintiff's actual loss, who received no estate by the conveyance to him: but gave no opinion what the damages would be, where a grantee actually seized by virtue of the conveyance, was ousted by a paramount title: probably in that case a different rule would obtain. This question afterward came before the court in Caswell v. Wendell, 4 Mass. Rep. 108. (Anno 1808) Parker, Judge on the circuit, on covenant for breach of warranty, had directed the jury, that the measure of damages was the value of the land at the time of eviction. The supreme court say, the direction was right; and that the value of the land at the time when the covenant was broken, (to wit, when the conveyance was executed,) as agreed by the parties, was the proper measure of damages: wherein there is something like a dissonance.

That the value of the land at the time of the eviction, is the measure of damages in an action of covenant broken, was also determined in Massachusetts, in Gore v. Brasier, 3 Mass. Rep. 523.

The same point was also determined in Connecticut. Kirkby's Conn. Rep. 3.

The same point was determined in South Carolina, Liber and Wife v. Parsons, 1 Bay's, 19. and in Guerand's Executors v. River, Ib. 265.

Domat also assents to this being the doctrine of the civil law. 1 Dom. 77. sect. 15, 16.

In Pennsylvania, the supreme court have decided in conformity to the New York cases, in Bender v. Fromberger, 4 Dall. Rep. 441. An. 1806, which settles the law in this state.

In 1804, a case came before me at Chambersburg, in Franklin county, of the same kind; wherein I charged the jury, that the measure of damages was the improved value of the land, together with the value of such improvements as had been made for the better and more effectual enjoyment of the land itself, as fences, barns, stables, &c., conceiving, that a man being evicted after having spent some of the best years of his life in directing and superintending reasonable and suitable improvements, was entitled to all the increase of value, which was little enough too. So thought the jury, and brought in a verdict accordingly, and the decision was acquiesced in. But in Glen's Executors v. Washmood, tried in Cumberland county, 9th May, 1806, the court (whose opinion was not given till above a twelve month after,) adopted the rule in Fromberger's case, and on special verdict whereby the measure of damages was left as a legal point for the court to decide on, directed the average purchase money per acre, with interest from the time of eviction to be allowed for 23 acres, 128 perches, recovered by title paramount. The purchase money was 3l. 15s. per acre, and the land would have sold, at the time of eviction, for four times as much.

Upon the rule of caveat emptor, adopted by the English, and some of the American states, all this is just. No man ought to be bound beyond the value he receives for a commodity, valued by the mutual consent of buyer and seller. He cannot, it is said, be bound by possibility for £1000, in consequence of selling that for which he receives but a hundred. The answer is, that he ought not to warrant generally, that which he is not quite sure belongs to him. Every body who buys in this country, buys with an expectation that his land will rise in value, and is capable of improvement. These are qualities attached to every American purchase; and if a man is induced to spend much time and much money in confidence of the title conveyed to him, and warranted to him, he ought to be remunerated, as I think, at the expence of the negligent or dishonest seller. I do not know a more goodly and comfortable doctrine for the land-jobbers of this country than caveat emptor. Doubtless, if the purchaser can taint the sale with fraud, or prove a scienter of bad title on part of the seller, the latter would be liable to full damages in covenant, in this state, and to an action on the case for deceit, where the English law prevails. Co. Litt. 384. 1 Fonb. 366. Com. Dig. 236. a. 8. 4 Johns. Rep. 12. But how seldom can this be done, in Pennsylvania at least, where a patent itself is nothing more than prima facie evidence of title?

In Virginia, Nelson v. Matthews, 2 Hen. and Munford, 164, the same measure of damages is adopted as in New York and Pennsylvania. (See in that case a discussion of the meaning of the words more or less, in a deed.)

By the civil law all covenants of sale were good, whether written or unwritten, to whatever value they extended. But in England, it hath been enacted by 29 Car. cap. 3. sect. 17. "That no contract for the sale of any goods, wares, and merchandize for the price of ten pounds sterling or upwards, shall be allowed to be good, except the buyer shall accept part of the goods so sold, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the bargain, or in part of payment, or unless some note, or memorandum in writing of the said bargain be made and signed by the parties to be charged by such a contract, or their agents thereunto lawfully authorized." 29 Car. 2.

§ 3. De emphyteusi, p. 277.

Emphyteuseos contractus. An emphyteusis (from ἐμphyτεύειν to plant) is a contract made by consent, by which houses or lands are given to be possessed forever, or at least for a long term, upon condition, that the land shall be improved, and that a small yearly rent or pension shall be paid to the proprietor. And this pension, rent or canon, may be paid in money, grain, or any other thing. The perpetuity, or long term, granted, distinguishes this contract from letting and hiring: for an emphyteusis was originally made on account of barren lands, which no person would take for a short time, through a fear of the charge of cultivation; but afterwards the best lands were often granted out upon this emphyteutical contract; the nature of which was first fixed by the emperor Zeno, who determined it to be a distinct contract from buying and selling, letting and hireing. vid. Cod. 4. t. 66. De jure emphyteutico. For some thought it to be the contract of hireing, when they considered, that a rent was paid for it to the proprietor; and others imagined it to be the contract of buying, when they saw the tenant had a perpetuity, or at least a very long time, and a sort of property in it: but the tenant had only utile dominium, not a direct dominion; and therefore the contract was distinct from buying and selling.

The tenant is called emphyteuta, being under an obligation to plant and improve the land: and he has such an interest, that he may sell the profits of his right in the estate to another, with the consent of the *proprietor, to whom two months must be allowed to [ *622 ] determine whether he will himself become the purchaser. But, when there is a new tenant, a laudimium, (which is almost the same as a relief, and generally amounts to the value of the 50th part of the estate,) must be paid to the proprietor by the new tenant, as an acknowledgment for being put into possession. Cod. 4. t. 66. l. 3.

There is also a pension or rent called a canon, which must be paid annually, as an acknowledgment of a superior title; and this canon is always due every year, whether the tenant receives any profits or not: for it is not paid, in consideration of profits received, but as an acknowledgment of the tenure.

The emphyteusis of the Roman law seems to have given rise to our fee-farm and copyhold estates in England. Harris.

§ 4. De forma alicui facienda ab artifice, p. 288. This section seems intelligible only on the supposition, that the labor of the workman is considered as let out by him, and hired by his employer. Hence, Hesketh and Blanchard, 4 East, 144, where, a man contracts to give another half the profits of a concern for managing it, would be a Locatio Conductio, as well as a partnership.

Til. XXVI. De societate, p. 280. As to the general doctrine of partnerships, and sleeping partners, see Coope et al. v. Eyre, et al. 1 Hen. Bl. 37. and Waugh v. Carver, et al. 2 Hen. Bl. 235. in which cases, the civil law doctrine of partnership, is also touched upon, as to what constitutes partnership. See to the same purpose, Bond v. Gibson, 1 Campb. N. P. Rep. 185. *Dryv. The French Commandite, where a party in a concern is liable only in respect of the share he brings into partnership, is not known in England. But it appears to be introduced in the banking establishments of this country; with what legal success is yet somewhat dubious.

I borrow the following note from Mr. Du Ponceau, to whom the bar are obliged for the useful translation of the French commercial code in the second volume of Walsh's Review, and very ably elucidated by the notes he has added to it.

Sotiete en commandite. Our language has no corresponding words to express this technical phrase, nor that of associe commanditaire which is derived from it. We are therefore obliged to adopt the French words themselves as well as we can to our own idiom, with some variations for the sake of euphony and analogy, as far as these can be obtained.

This species of partnership, like the greatest part of the mercantile customs of Europe draws its origin from Italy. Hence the words commandite and commanditarie are derived from the Italian commando, which itself takes its derivation from the latin mandatum. Societe en commandite is as it were, societas cum mandato, a contract of partnership coupled with a contract of mandatum or bailment. Such a partnership is composed of one or more acting and responsible, and one or more dormant partners; the latter of whom are not bound by the acts of their associates, beyond the amount they bring into the general stock. They merely place their funds in the hands of others, to be employed in trade for their benefit; and therefore these different partners, not only as between each other, but as between them and the rest of the world, stand together in the relation of principal and factor: mixed, indeed, with some of the circumstances attending ordinary partnerships, but only in a certain degree, and to a limited extent. From this mixture of relative rights and duties, this species of contract has received its denomination.

These partnerships are useful in countries, where there are great capitalists, who wish to employ a part of their money in trade, without exposing themselves to unlimited risks. They furnish employment for funds, which could otherwise remain inactive. The laws of America and Great Britain however do not recognize such associations.

[Since the publication of this work, partnerships en commandite, or, as they are styled in Louisiana, in commendam, have been introduced into most of the states of the Union. They have been authorized by statute in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and California. By the New York statute, it is declared, that a limited partnership for the transaction of any mercantile, mechanical, or manufacturing business within the state, (the business of banking and insurance excepted), may consist of one or more persons jointly and severally responsible, according to the existing laws, who are called general partners, and one or more persons who furnish certain funds to the common stock, and whose liability shall extend no further than the fund furnished, and who are called special partners. The names of the special partners are not to be used in the firm, which shall contain the names of the general partners only, without the addition of the word "company," or any other general term; nor are they to transact any business on account of the partnership, or be employed for that purpose as agents, attorneys, or otherwise; but they may, nevertheless, advise as to the management of the partnership concern. Before such a partnership can act, a registry thereof must be made in the clerk's office of the county, with an accompanying certificate, signed by the parties, and duly acknowledged, and containing the title of the firm, the general nature of the business, the names of the partners, the amount of capital furnished by the special partners, and the period of the partnership. The capital advanced by the special partners must be in cash, and an affidavit filed stating the fact. Publication must likewise be made for at least six weeks of the terms of the partnership, and due publication for four weeks of the dissolution of the partnership by the act of the parties prior to the time specified in the certificate. No such partnership can make assignments or transfers, or create any lien with the intent to give preference to creditors. The special partners may receive an annual interest on the capital invested, provided there be no reduction of the original capital; but they cannot be permitted to claim as creditors, in case of the insolvency of the partnership. (N. Y. Revised Statutes, Vol. p. 764.) The provision for limited partnerships in the other states where they are authorized, is essentially the same as that in New York.]

Commandite, sometimes signifies partnership, where one advances money, and the other skill. Expte. Garland, 10 Vez. 114, from the Dictionnaire de l'Academie Françoise.

[The cessio bonorum of the Roman law, which prevails at present in most parts of the continent of Europe, only exempted the person of the debtor from imprisonment. It did not release or discharge the debt, nor exempt the future acquisitions of the debtor from execution for the debt.

The party robbed may bring his action for restitution, after having done his duty by prosecuting criminally; but not before. Hale, Pl. Cor. 546. See post Inst. 3. § 11.

§ 7. De affectu furandi, p. 302.

Si se intelligant id invito domino facere. This with us and in England, would not amount to a criminal offence.

Furtum sine affectu furandi non committitur. Hence with us, we must lay the action as having been done felonice, feloniously.

A bare intention to commit a crime unaccompanied by an overt act, was not punishable: nemo cogitationis pœnam patitur. Dig. 48. 19. 18. but in England, to solicit a servant to steal his master's goods is an indictable misdemeanour, although the goods were actually not stolen. The King v. Higgins. 2 East, 5. So the endeavour to provoke another to commit a misdemeanour, as to fight a duel, is indictable; for in these instances there is an overt act. 2 East, 614. The King v. Phillips. The case put by Justinian in this section, will be found in The King v. Eggington, et al. 2 Bos. and Pull. 508.

Tit. III. De lege Aquilia, p. 312. This was a plebiscite, proposed by Aquilius a tribune of the people. A. U. C. 572. Almost all the causes of action damni injuriæ under the Lex Aquilia, are also the subjects of our action of Trespass on the Case.

A great deal of nice distinction has been employed in ascertaining whether Trespass vi et armis, or Trespass on the Case should be brought, for an injury done. See Bourdon v. Alloway, 11 Mod. 180.

For some time the criterion was thought to be, whether the act was done wilfully or negligently. Tripe et al. v. Potter, and Ogle v. Barnes, cited in Leame v. Bray, 3 East, 595. At present, the criterion adopted is, whether the injury complained of ensues directly and immediately from the act of the defendant, or is only a consequence of such act and collateral to it, and which might or might not have happened. Thus, I forcibly or carelessly throw, or negligently let fall, or by not securing as I ought I permit to fall, a log into the street; whereby one passenger is wounded, and an hour or two afterward another passenger by stumbling over the log, is lamed. Here, the first man if he sue me, must bring trespass vi et armis, and the second man, Case.

So, a New England schooner on a West India voyage, was fired into, and her crew so disabled, that unable to proceed on her voyage, she turned back. The owner brought case for loss of freight and profit on the voyage. The Court determined at once, that this was case. Adams and others v. Hemingway, 1 Mass. Rep. 145.

The Court of King's Bench, say, the criterion by which we are to decide, is, whether the injury is immediately and directly connected with the action or an accidental consequence only. To which purpose the chief or leading cases are, Reynolds v. Clarke, 8 Mod. 272. 1 Strange 638. 2 Lord Raym. 1402; Scot v. Shepherd, 3 Wils. 503; Day v. Edwards, 5 Term Rep. 649; Weaver v. Wood, Hob. 134. Leame v. Bray, 3 East 593. where all the cases were considered: this was in 1803. But in Rogers v. Imbleton, 5 Bos. and Pull. 117 Anno 1806. Sir James Mansfield, put the Criterion on the point of wilfulness or negligence; and intimated that Leame v. Bray, was not settled law. That court did so again in Haggett v. Montgomery, Trin. 1807. 5 Bos. and Pull. 446.

The court of king's bench however, decided Covall v. Laming 1 Campb. N. P. Rep. 497. Mich. 1808, according to Leame v. Bray: And declared somewhat sharply in Lotan v. Cross, 2 Campb. N. P.

*Rep. 464. Ann. 1810, that they should not permit the prin- [ *628 ] ciple of Leame v. Bray, to be canvassed in a motion for a new trial. The question must be raised if at all, upon the record.

The principle of Leame v. Bray, has been recognized in Virginia, Taylor v. Rainbow, 2 Hen. and Munf. 423. and in the case before cited in Massachusetts, viz. Adams et al v. Hemingway, 1 Mass. Rep. 145. In New-York Vail v. Lewis et al. 4 Johns. 450. In Hughes v. Heiser, 1 Binney, 463. action on the case for a nuisance: held sufficient though the damage was consequential. Judge Blackstone in Scot v. Shepherd laid down a very convenient doctrine on this subject, which I think may be considered as law at this day; to wit, that where the injury is immediate, plaintiff may bring trespass vi et armis, with a per quod for the consequential damage, or, bring case for the consequential damage alone and pass over the immediate injury, 2 Sir W. Bl. Rep. 197. which doctrine is like Pitts v. Gaince, 1 Salk. 10.

But where the injury is both immediate and wilful, the better way is to bring trespass vi et armis. Leame v. Bray, Sup. Ogle et al. v. Barnes et al. 8 Term Rep. 188.

The difficulty suggested by Le Blanc in Leame v. Bray, as to cases where vessels run foul of each other, the immediate agent being the winds and the waves, is settled by Lord Ellenborough in Covall v. Laming, who very properly states that the helms-man ought to be answerable; that is I presume, in common cases, not in violent storms. See further on this subject Savignac v. Roome, 6 Term Rep. 125. Macmanus v. Cricket, 1 East, 106. and Morley v. Gainsford, 2 H. Bl. 442. Chitty has also taken some pains on the question in the first volume of his pleadings p. 122. on actions in form ex Delicto.

Roberts*, Salk. 13. for Plaintiff may be amerced pro falso clamore suo, and is liable to costs.

As to Libel, "Libellum aut Carmen aut Historiam." The civil law was very severe against this offence.

A libel was regarded as with us, more serious than slander. The author, the Transcriber, the Publisher, the Seller, were all liable to punishment, whether it was anonymous or not. Dig. 47. 10. 5 and 29. Cod. 9. 36. abusive pictures, statues, inscriptions, &c. are libellous. Dig. 47. 10. 5. 10. like the case of Philip Thicknesse, wherein the sending a wooden gun to Lord Orwell, was held to be a libellous reflection on his military character. The falsely charging a man with a capital crime was punished even with death. Cod. 6. 36. See the case de libellis famos. 5 Co. Rep. 125.

*I hardly know any subject so important as the liberty of [ *630 ] the Press, and the right of discussion. All the difficulties involved in it, relate either to political questions, to religious questions, or to questions respecting private character.

Political questions relate either to the investigation of political Theories, or the examination of the measures of government, or the character and capacities of our actual rulers. I do not know a plainer position than this: a government that forbids the investigation of the principles on which it is founded, must feel that they will not bear, (and for that very reason the public good requires) such an investigation. In England I know of no objection to the temperate discussion of the preference of a republican to a monarchical form of government, where it is not a cover to incite insurrection. No prosecution was set on foot against the innumerable disquisitions on the inadequacy of parliamentary representation: the republican sentiments of Dr. Price, Dr. Priestly, and Mr. Goodwin, were allowed without molestation. In my own case, Sir John Scott, then attorney general, took a distinction that I had no right to complain of: "continue if you please to publish your reply to Mr. Burke in an octavo form, so as to confine it probably to that class of readers who may consider it coolly: so soon as it is published cheaply for dissemination among the populace, it will be my duty to prosecute." It was on the same principles that Paine and Jordan were prosecuted for dispersing in a cheap form, the Rights of Man. A defensive measure on the part of government, certainly excusable, probably justifiable. In this country, a defence of monarchical government would be borne with less patience than a defence of republics in England. But if the manner be decent and temperate, such discussions ought to give offence in neither country: but if in either country they should be merely the cover for exciting to civil commotion, let a jury judge of the intent and the author, and publisher proceed at their peril.

So in discussing the actual measures of a government, or the capacities of those who direct it, the temper and manner of the discussion, will always furnish a clue to the design of the author. It is a farce to talk of freedom in a country, where the public characters and public conduct of public men, are shielded from investigation. Hence the injustice, the absurdity, the tyranny of the sedition law under the administration of the president Adams. There should be no previous restrictions on the press. The public are deeply interested in having every public measure, and every public character, sifted to the bottom. The people are [ *631 ] deeply interested that such investigations honestly *conducted, should incessantly take place. But if the charges be founded on falsehood or forgery, if there should be groundless insinuation of base and unworthy motives, or needless and malignant attacks upon private character, under cover of public discussion, let the hand of justice fall heavy on the offender. The only way to preserve the liberty of the press, is to punish its prostitution.

Hereon it may be observed that the doctrine advanced by Judge Chase, (a man of admirable talent, but whose political opinions from the bench were neither dictated by wisdom or by virtue) is strongly to be reprobated. Namely, that a political writer should be prepared with legal proof of every fact he means to advance, before he publishes. It was a doctrine calculated, as he well knew, to prohibit all political discussion whatever.

No man will venture to publish, who is required before a court in Massachusetts, to prove that the Sun shone at mid day in South Carolina; or that Mr. Pickering, with the knowledge of Mr. Adams, wrote to Judge Bee on the case of Jonathan Robbins, previous to the trial. In political prosecutions, a defendant ought to be allowed to introduce whatever evidence he pleases of the facts he has published, and submit it (not to a court guided by the technical rules of evidence, as to meum and tuum, but) to the jury, whether it was reasonably sufficient to justify the assertion in the extent to which it was made. In writing upon popular and public facts, popular documents and common fame may fairly be resorted to, provided the mode of stating the fact be commensurate with the proof relied on. Indeed no writer ought to be called upon for proof of such facts, till they are denied upon affidavit.

The president Adams, was not singular in wishing 'the sentiments of government to be communicated to the judiciary on a political question. That has been done in England during Mr. Pitt's administration, and since: at least the particulars detailed in a public paper as matters of notoriety, have not to my knowledge been denied. In fact, what individual or what set of men does not feel averse to be dragged before the tribunal of public opinion, in cases where they feel conscious of misdeed? But in that country, the high character and station of the judges, and the great confidence so universally (and a few instances excepted,) so deservedly reposed in them, and the attention due to the opinion of the bar, as well as of the bench—form a public safeguard of great practical importance: a much more efficacious one, than the farce of a written constitution in this country; which every party, bold and unprincipled in proportion to its ignorance, construes and misconstrues, uses and abuses, as the temptation of the moment may happen to dic-

[ *632 ] tate. *Self-preservation, the first law of our nature, will always raise the arm of power, where it can descend with impunity and effect : but if in England, as well as in this country, interferences on political questions now and then take place, which neither law nor right can fully justify, that country at least does not tolerate in any formidable extent, the abominable nuisance so prevalent here, of tying up to the stake, the private character and domestic life of every political opponent, to be exposed to the calumnies of the vulgar, and worried by every mongrel description of slanderers and libellists. Yet the public taste of this country seems gratified by the practice ; whereas the intermixture of personal slander with public discussion, ought to be regarded as full and complete evidence, that the writer was not actuated by motives of the public good. Among the ancient Democracies of Greece, every man of superior station, wealth, talent, or character, was considered as a fair object for popular calumny : from which, no public or private virtue could effectually shield him. This was carried to a prodigious excess : nor can any man peruse the history of those turbulent republicans, without strongly feeling that the character of their governments, gave to the people themselves, a character of cruel, unfeeling, insolent injustice ; of ferocious and ambitious rapacity ; and a morbid jealousy of the most honorable evidences of superiority, that furnish little cause for regret, if such democracies be extinguished to flourish no more.

In New York, and some other of our states, something like law on this subject still holds its place in public estimation : but every where there is too much rancorous abuse of every political opponent, and the most flagrant imputation of corrupt and sinister motive on surmises too slight for a cool observer to consider of any weight. Almost every where among us, the ancient hatred, not merely to the aristocracy of rank and the aristocracy of wealth, but to the aristocracy of talent also, strongly prevails ; and the licentiousness of publication almost universally indulged in, renders it doubtful, whether the freedom of the press itself, may not be purchased at too high a price.

In this state, the dread of infringing on personal liberty has been carried to a morbid extent ; in so much, that in many cases of injury even the verdict of a jury will afford neither present compensation, or future security. An insolent or unprincipled disturber of the public peace or domestic intercourse, seduces your wife, debauches your daughter, maims your person, or defames your character. You put yourself to the trouble and expence of suing him for the injury committed : the jury find a verdict against him, and allow you a compensation in *dam- [ *633 ] ages. He goes to jail for a week or two, applies for the benefit of the insolvent act, is discharged from prison, and laughs in your face.

You indict him for the offence ; and he is convicted. But he is a noisy partizan of the prevailing politics whatever they may be. His fellow brawlers send round a petition; the governor is urged by political adherents, a pardon puts an end to the punishment, and the insolvent act pays the costs.

There is no reply to be made to the arguments in favor of Republicanism over Monarchy: in theory they are triumphant. But in practice, there are objections that may give occasion to a considerate man to pause: especially, where under the influence of universal suffrage, the ignorance of the community is almost exclusively represented, and wisdom and wealth, are held in equal distrust.

With respect to religious discussion, long experience has now shewn, that the less opposition is given, the more peaceably such controversies proceed, and the less mischief they produce. Complete toleration on the part of the government, and the laws, is the parent of mutual toleration among the people. The more the public is accustomed to dissonance of opinion on these subjects, the more clearly will it be seen, that a man may be a good child, a good father, a good husband, a kind friend, and a good citizen, under any and every system of religious faith, however rigid, or however lax: and if a man possesses these qualifications, it is all that society can require. Nor is it easy to draw the line between questions of this description which shall be included, or those that shall be excluded from the index expurgatorius: every man will be apt to consider his own creed, as all-important to society; and experience will consider none of them as of consequence, except as they tend to make a man a good citizen in the points above mentioned; and each stands forward with similar pretensions, and perhaps with nearly equal merits.

On the subject of private character, I have said sufficient. It is never attacked from the press with a good motive. If the statements be true, the laws are open for conviction, and punishment: if dubious, they ought not to be advanced; if false, the calumniator ought himself to be considered as a public nuisance. The absurd privilege of giving the truth in evidence on an indictment, only increases the mischief, and gives a legal sanction to the practice itself. In a civil action, the first principles of justice require that a man shall not ask damages for calumny, of which he is afraid to meet the proof.

I shall not dwell upon the law of libels in England, which may be well gathered from the popular compilations: but it may be useful to notice the principal cases that have occurred here.

[ *634 ] *By an act of Pennsylvania of 16th March, 1809, which if not renewed will expire by its own limitation in April, 1813, the truth is allowed to be given in evidence on every prosecution for libel. I believe this doctrine is adopted no where but in this state, and in New York state, nor ought it to be. The public have nothing to do with the truth or falsehood of a libel on a private individual. Has he been guilty of a crime? Indict him. Otherwise it is reasonable to conclude that your own bad passions gave rise to the publication.

[The constitutions of several of the United States have made special provision in favor of giving the truth in evidence, in public prosecutions for libels. In the constitutions of Pennsylvania, Delaware, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, it is declared, that in prosecutions for libels on men in respect to their public official conduct, the truth may be given in evidence, when the matter published was proper for public information. In the constitutions of Mississippi and Missouri, the extension of the right to give the truth in evidence is more large, and applies to all prosecutions or indictments for libels, without any qualifications annexed in restraint of the privilege. By the constitution of New Jersey, (1844) it is declared, that "in all prosecutions or indictments for libel, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury; and if it shall appear to the jury, that the matter charged as libellous is true, and was published with good motives, and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted, and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact." The New York Constitution, adopted in 1846, contains a similar clause differing only by the insertion of the word "criminal," so that the provision does not affect civil actions for libel. In such actions the truth may, in all cases, be pleaded by way of justification, as well as in an action for slanderous words. 2 Kent's Commentaries, 24.]

The cases of libel hitherto reported in the U. States, so far as I have met with them, are mostly conformable to the principles of the English decisions.

1 Binney, 393. Kennedy v. Lowry. It is sufficient to lay the substance of the words spoken, and prove it.

1 Binney, 601. Respub. v. Duane, in which the above-mentioned act of Assembly, was held to put an end to an indictment for libel, commenced before that act passed.

2 Binney, 34. Brown v. Lamberton. Words are to be taken according to their plain and obvious meaning.

2 Binney, 514. Respub. v. Sharf, wherein judgment was reversed, in consequence of the finding of the jury not corresponding to the indictment.

Green v. Long, 2 Caines, 91. "He is perjured." It is sufficient to prove that the words were spoken of the plaintiff, in allusion to an oath taken in court. If the court was incompetent to administer it, Defendant must shew this.

The People v. Freer, 1 Caines, 485. The intent of a writer of a libel on the court, is of no consequence, if the court [are of opinion it is a libel.

Lyle v. Clason, 1 Caines, 581, sending a sealed libel to the plaintiff, is not a publication, sufficient to ground a civil prosecution : but it may a criminal one. Hick's case, Poph. 139.

Clason v. Gould, 2 Caines, 47. In libel there must be affidavit of special cause to hold to bail. Nor will the court change the Venue on the the common affidavit, Clinton v. Craswell. 2 Caines, 245.

Foot v. Tracy, 1 Johns. Rep. 46. Can defendant give in evidence on the general issue, the general character of the plaintiff in mitigation of damages?

Hotchkiss v. Lothrop, 1 Johns. 286. A libel by the plaintiff on the defendant may be given in evidence in explanation, but not in justification.

Tillotson v. Cheetham, 3 Johns. 56. Judgment by de-[ *635 ] fault admits *the fact of the publication and the truth of the innuendos. Nor can defendant give a former recovery in damages by the same plaintiff in mitigation, although it was for part of the words charged in the second suit. The one publication being on the 3d, and the other on the 17th of the month ; and they might go into different hands.

Clinton v. Mitchell. 3 Johns. 144. If defendant gives notice of certain facts on which he means to rely, he shall not withdraw that notice, unless on affidavit that the facts so stated, are stated without sufficient grounds. This is founded on the practice of New-York state, where defendant may plead the general issue to this action, and give notice of special matter to be used in his defence.

Lewis v. Few. 5 Johns. 1. U. States, is sufficient to support United States.

It is no justification that Defendant signed the libel as Chairman of a public meeting.

Whether the plaintiff was the person meant to be libelled, is a question of fact for the jury. Van Vechten v. Hopkins. Ib. 211.

Witnesses are not admissible to prove that on reading the libel they understood by it that the plaintiff was the person meant. An innuendo cannot be proved ; but extrinsic matter introduced by an averment or colloquium may be proved.

Where one count is bad for want of sufficient averments, and entire damages assessed on the whole declaration, judgment must be set aside. Cheetham v. Tillotson, in error, 5 Johns. 430. Sed vide, Kennedy v. Lowry, 1 Binney, 397. Neal v. Lewis, 2 Bays, 204. and Nelson v. Emerson, 2 Bays, 439.

A petition of divers inhabitants to the authority under which a district attorney is appointed, and by which he may be removed, charging him with improper motives of conduct, is not a libel. Thorn v. Blanchard in Error. 5 Johns. 508. The English authorities are well considered in this case, and the cause was decided in error against the opinion of the law characters on the Bench. The Court of errors in New-York consisting of the Chancellor, and of senators who are not lawyers.

Thomas v. Rumsey, 6 Johns. 26. One satisfaction for one injury, B and C being partners in a newspaper, A brought suit against B for libel: and then against C: against whom he recovered. B pleaded this recovery puis darein continuance and well: Genet v. Mitchell, 7 Johns. 120. Plaintiff may abandon one count of his declaration, and use the libel therein stated but abandoned, in explanation of another count. A jury may decide under the circumstances, whether a public *minister publishing his instructions, has thereby traitorous- [*636] ly betrayed the secrets of his government.

Andries v. Wills. Ib. 261. Action for libel lies against the proprietor of a Gazette, edited by another, though the proprietor did not know of the publication.

But where the proprietorship is cast upon a person by operation of law, he does not become thus liable.

Thomas v. Crosswell. Ib. 264. To publish of a member of congress that he is a fawning sycophant, and has abandoned his post in pursuit of office, is libellous: and of this, the jury may decide.

Quere, whether words charged in the declaration, and in themselves libellous, can be admitted to show malice in other words relied on? Meade v. Daubigny, Peake's N. P. Ca. 125. A man may publish a plain and fair account of proceedings in a court of justice, but not accompanied with comments and insinuations against the characters of the parties concerned.

Brooks v. Pemiss, 8 Johns. 455. Defendant stated that this was not the first time that falsehood had been associated with the plaintiff, in the minds of many honest men. Evidence that seven persons and others believed the plaintiff not to be a man of truth, is not admissible: for it leads to vague and additional calumny. The fact of falsehood must be proved.

Commonwealth v. Crips, 4 Mass. Rep. 163. The truth of the words is no justification in a criminal prosecution for libel.

[It was so again held in the case of The Commonwealth v. Blanding, 3 Pick. Rep. 304; but after that decision, the legislature of Massachusetts by an act passed in 1827, allowed the truth to be given in evidence in all prosecutions for libels, but with a proviso that such evidence should not be a justification, unless it should be made satisfactorily to appear upon the trial that the matter charged as libellous was published with good motives and for justifiable ends.]

I find nothing to the purpose in 5 and 6 Mass. Rep. in 1 M'Henry; 1 and 2 Washington; 1, 2, 3 Call; 1, 2, 3 Henning and Munford; or 1—6 Cranch. But lately, (21 Jan. 1811) it was decided in the supreme court at Charleston, S. C. The State v. Thomas Lehre, that the truth of the libel could not be given in evidence on an indictment. Judge Waties, in delivering the opinion of the court, cites the present section of the institutes. Shaw v. M'Combs 2 Bays 232. Verdict in slander on Sunday void. Sunday is not dies juridicus.

Sive quis matrem familias aut prætextatum prætextatamve adsectatus fuerit. The same law in Rigaut v. Gallisard, 7 Mod. 78. It is strange how slight the crime of pæderasty was regarded among the ancients. Virgil's Formosum pastor Corydon ardebat Alexi, and his Nisus amore pio pueri, are instances. A quarrel between two men about a youth, is also the subject of one of Lysias's orations, containing no remark in disfavour of the practice.

§ 6. De Pauliana, p. 330. This is the principle of the English law against secret conveyances to defraud creditors, 13 Eliz. ch. 5. For the cases illustrative of this statute, see Roberts on fraudulent conveyances, and the references in Cooper's bankrupt law, 144—151.

[ *639 ] *How far a voluntary conveyance, of a debtor's property for the benefit of his creditors generally, or of such as will assent to the deed, is valid, does not appear to me as yet completely settled under all its distinctions, either in England or here.

An assignment of all a trader's effects and property is an act of bankruptcy; though for the general benefit of the creditors. 2 Vez. Sen. 19. Clavey v. How, Burr. Rep. 476. 829—833. 2241. Sir W. Bl. Rep. 1862 Bull. N. P. 40.

In Eastwick v. Caillaud, 5 Term. Rep. 420. a deed of part of a debtor's property to certain creditors was held good, where there was no fraudulent intent, and where the other property remained.

Inglis v. Grant, 5 Term Rep. 630. a deed in trust for the benefit of creditors made in India, was supported, and declared not an object of the bankrupt laws in England. So in Alexander v. Vaughan, Cow. 402. an act of bankruptcy committed abroad, cannot be a foundation for a commission at home.

But in Eckhardt v. Mellish, 8 Term Rep. 142. the court said that an assignment by deed, by traders of all their effects, unless all their creditors concurred was not only fraudulent and void as against creditors who did not concur, but was an act of bankruptcy. So in Eckhardt v. Wilson, 8 Term Rep. 140. Tappenden v. Burgess, 4 East, 232.

In Nunn v. Wilsmore, 8 Term Rep. 521. the deed of all the effects was supported, because there appeared to be a solvency.

Meux v. Howel, 4 East Rep. 1. the transaction was supported, being honest and well intended for the common benefit of creditors, though some of them might be delayed.

Burd v. Smith, Lessee of Fitsimmons, however, 4 Dal. 76. has decided in Pennsylvania that a voluntary conveyance made bonâ fide in favour of such creditors as would accede to the terms of it within nine months, was good. Something like the same principle was also held in Wilt v. Franklin, 1 Binn. 502. But in Bown's executors v. Burrell, Ann. 1751, and Hovey v. Clark, 1788, Root's Rep. 252. a general conveyance of all a man's interest for the benefit of his creditors, was held fraudulent and void as against those who did not agree to it. See also Leech v. Leech, 1 Ch. cases, 249.

[It is now well settled in this country, that a debtor in failing circumstances may assign his property in trust for the payment of his debts; and may by such assignment, if made in good faith, prefer one creditor or set of creditors in exclusion of his other creditors, when no bankrupt or other law prohibiting such preferences, (as in New Jersey, Georgia, and Ohio,) and no legal lien binding on the property assigned, exist. But such assignment must be absolute and unconditional; it must contain no power to revoke the conveyance, or to change the trusts, nor any reservation or condition for the benefit of the debtor; it must not be made to an insolvent or infant, or other unfit person, nor exempt the assignee from any portion of his proper legal responsibility; it must devote the whole of the assigned property to the payment of the assignor's just debts; and it must be accompanied by immediate delivery, either actual or implied, to the assignee. 5 Johns. § 7. De Serviana et quasi Serviana seu hypothecaria, p. 330. The first part of this section is in principle the same as our suit for rent. The last part is the foundation of maritime hypothecation and bottomry.

The Servian action was introduced by the Prætor Servius, in Cicero's time. The quasi Serviana, by subsequent prætors, or the practice *of the bar. The Servian action, was a prætorian, [ *640 ] real, action; given to landlords, for the recovery of rent of farms, Prædia rustica; not for the rent of houses, Prædia urbana. It lay against the property whereon by previous contract, the landlord had a lien for rent in arrear, but the tenant kept the possession and use of it. The lien held good, in whosoever hands the property was found. Tribuit enim hæc conventio domino fundi jus in re quod cum re ambulat, et semel quæsitum perpetuum est nec mutatione dominii extinguitur. The property might be redeemed by tendering the demand.

Hypotheca, means sometimes the right of the Pawnee, and sometimes the thing pawned or hypothecated, as in the digest and code, de pignori-ribus et hypothecis. Dig. 20. 1.

[The term hypotheca is used, when real estate is mortgaged; and pignus, when movables are pledged or pawned.]

A pledge, requires delivery of the article into the possession of the creditor: an hypotheca, is the subject of contract only, and remains with the debtor; but is liable to the lien of the creditor in whose hands it may be found. Dig. 20. 1. 2. 2. sometimes the contract was tacit. Dig. 20. 2. 4. and 20. 2. 7.

[By our law, all kinds of personal property that are vested and tangible, and also negotiable paper, may be the subject of pledge; and choses in action, resting on written contract, may be assigned in pledge. It is not in all cases necessary that the possession of the pledge should be actual. Stocks, and it would seem equitable interest, may be pledged; and it will be sufficient, if, by a proper transfer, the property be put within the power and control of the pledgee. [Wilson v. Little, 2 Comstock's Rep. 443. Story on Bailments, § 297. Dykars v. Allan, 7 Hill N. Y. Rép. 497.) After the debt is due, the creditor may sell the pledge at auction, or giving reasonable opportunity to the debtor to redeem, and apprising him of the time and place of sale. But the creditor will be held at his peril to deal fairly and justly with the pledge, both as to the time of the notice, and the manner of the sale. The holder of hypothecated stock cannot, on default, have it sold at the board of brokers, or otherwise at public auction and on reasonable notice, unless there be an express stipulation authorizing it. (Castello v. City Bank of Albany, 1 N. Y. Legal Observer 25.) If the debt be payable on demand, a demand must be made before a sale of the pledge. (Wilson v. Little, 1 Sandf. Superior Ct. Rep. 351. Stearns v. Marsh, 4 Denio Rep. 227.) While the debtor's right in the pledge remains unextinguished, he may sell or assign it, subject to the rights of the pawnee, or it may be sold on execution; and the purchaser, like any other purchaser or assignee of the interest of the pawnor, succeeds to all his rights, and becomes entitled to redeem. So the pawnee may assign over the pawn, and the assignee will take it under all the responsibility of the original pawnee.

The distinction between a pledge and a mortgage of chattels is principally this; by a mortgage the legal title passes to the mortgagee with a condition of defeasance upon the payment of the debt; but a pledge gives to the pledgee a mere right of possession with an authority to sell in case of default of payment. (Dykars v. Allan, 7 Hill N. Y. Rep. 498. Brownell v. Hawkins, 4 Barb S. C. Rep. 491. Wilson v. Little, 2 Comstock Rep. 443. Houser v. Kemp, 3 Barr's Rep. 208.) The mortgage being a conditional sale, it follows that upon the failure of the mortgagor to perform the condition, the mortgagee acquires an absolute title to the property. Langdon v. Buel, 9 Wendell Rep. 80. Huntington v. Mather, 2 Barb. S. C. Rep. 238.) Another distinction is, that a pledge of moveables, unaccompanied by delivery, is void as against creditors; but in many of the States of the Union, the retaining of possession by the mortgagor does not invalidate the mortgage, if it be made a matter of public record. In 1832, the legislatures of Massachusetts and New Hampshire passed acts, declaring that no mortgage of personal property thereafter made, should be valid except as to the parties, unless possession be delivered to and retained by the mortgagee, or unless the mortgage be recorded in the Clerk's Office of the town where the mortgagee resides. In New York also, in 1833 provision was made by law, for filing in the town clerk's office, as matter of public record, mortgages of chattels, and every such mortgage, unless the same or a true copy thereof be filed, or be accompanied by immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession, was declared to be void as against subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith. Under that act it has been held, that if a mortgage of personal property be duly recorded a change of possession need not be made. In Kentucky, by Statutes passed in 1820, 1837, and 1839, no mortgage or deed of trust of real or personal estate, is good against a purchaser, for valuable consideration, or against a creditor, unless it be duly deposited for recording in the county clerk's office. In Georgia, Tennessee, Indiana and Virginia, mortgages of personal property are to be proved and recorded like mortgages of land, in order to make them secure against bona fide creditors and purchasers. Statutes of Georgia 1827, Tennessee, 1831, Indiana 1838, Virginia 1791 & 1819. The statute of Tennessee applies to all bills of sale as well as mortgages and deeds of trust of real and personal property; all deeds of gift; all powers of attorney, concerning the conveyance of real or personal property; all marriage contracts, and all agreements for the conveyance of real or personal property. In Mississippi, by Statute in 1822, deeds respecting the title to personal property, are to be recorded in the county where the property is; and if it be removed to a different county, to be recorded within twelve months; and if not recorded, they are void as to purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice, and as to creditors. 1 Smedes & Marshall 122. So in Alabama, deeds of trust, including mortgages of personal property, are to be recorded within thirty days, otherwise they are void as against creditors and subsequent purchasers without notice. But the statute does not apply to choses in action. Aikin's Dig. 208. p. 5. 4 Alabama R. N. S. 263. 469. In Connecticut, there may be a mortgage of manufacturing machinery, without the real estate to which it is attached, and the mortgage is effectual, though the mortgagor retain possession of the machinery. Such machinery may also be attached, without being removed, and sold on execution. Statutes of Connecticut 1838 pp. 72. 73. But in Vermont, no mortgage of any machinery, used in a factory, shop or mill, is good except between the parties, unless possession be delivered to and retained by the mortgagee. Revised Statutes of Vermont 1839, p. 317.

In California, no mortgage of personal property is valid against any other persons than the parties thereto, unless possession of the mortgaged property be delivered to and retained by the mortgagee. Statutes of California 1850, p. 267.]

The action for a pledge was pignoratitia: it was a civil action: hypothecaria, was a prætorian action. Pignoratitia, was personal, hypothecaria, was real. Pignoratitia, lay against the creditor, holding the pledge when the debt was paid. Hypothecaria, lay against the article subjected to lien by the contract, to compel the payment of the debt. Pignoratitia lay, though the pledge did not belong to the debtor, for it was grounded on his delivery to the creditor, who was bound to retain it no longer than till payment. Hypothecaria, could not be supported in rem, if the thing hypothecated by the debtor, did not belong to him.

Hypothecation, was subject to a limitation of suit: viz. it was to be brought within 30 years, against a possessor mala fide: 10 years if bona fide: and 20 years in cases of absence.

In Pennsylvania by act of assembly, a defendant is required to bring forward every set off he may have against the plaintiff, otherwise he is barred from any future action. **Swancott v. Westgarth*, 4 East, 75. was an action for [ *642 ] goods sold and delivered on credit, and the question was, whether the action was commenced before the credit had expired. Held not; inasmuch as though the writ was issued before, the bill was filed after the credit had expired; but if defendant had been actually arrested, semble he would have been entitled to damages.

In Mussen v. Price et al. 4 East, 147. Credit for three months and then payment by a bill at two months, was held a credit for five months; and assumpsit could not be maintained at the end of three months, on neglect of paying by a two months bill, but the remedy was a special action on the case for damages.

§ 40. De eo qui bonis cessit, p. 348. By Cod. 7. 71. 1. and 8. and by Dig. 42. 3. 4. it should appear, that though the person of a debtor is discharged by a cessio bonorum, his property subsequently acquired is not. But this I apprehend is to be understood with the limitation stated in this section of the institutes, which is also confirmed by the provisions of Dig. 42. 3. 6.—42. 1. 17 and 39—42. 1. 19. 1.—42. 1. 16. and Nov. 135. provisions which are similar in principle, to the English law, that forbids the tools and instruments of a man's trade to be seized. The creditors might either allow the debtor five years to pay his debts in, or take his property and discharge his person. Cod. 7. 7. 8.

It would be a judicious regulation in my opinion, if future exoneration were denied to tradesmen, who neglected to keep fair and regular books of account, or who could not explain clearly the causes of their failure, and deficiency.

As to the question about cutting a debtor in pieces, de debitore in partes secando, notwithstanding Bynkershoek's observations and Dr. Taylor's dissertation, doubt yet remains whether the literal be not the true sense. Probably it was a law in terrorem only. Aul. Gall. Lib. 20. Ch. 1—8. Gibbon's Rom. Hist. p. 93. n. The semoto anni cruciatu, of the Code 7. 7. 8. is an expression of late date, that supports the cruelty of the literal meaning in the law of the 12 tables.

Tit. VII. Quod cum eo qui in aliena potestate est, negotium gestum esse dicetur, p. 348. This title relates for the most part to cases not very prevalent here, except so far as they may be analogous to the law, how far a master is answerable for the contracts of his servant, for which see the head of master and servant in Espinasse's Dig. of N. P. and Comyn's on contracts, where the cases are well collected.

[ *643 ] *§ 4. De peculio et in rem verso, p. 350.

Aliquando tamen. When an action de peculio is brought for the full value of a peculium, which is worth, for example, an hundred aurei, and the slave, to whom the peculium belongs, owes 50 aurei to the son of his master, or to some other slave under the power of the same master, the judge must then deduct those fifty aurei; so that the plaintiff can only receive the remaining fifty. But, when a suit is commenced for 100 aurei against a peculium, which is worth but 100 aurei, and the slave, to whom this peculium, or separate estate belongs, is indebted in 50 aurei to another slave, who is under the same master, but yet makes a part or parcel of the peculium, by being appendant to it, in this case the judge is not authorized to order the 50 aurei, due to this vicarial or subordinated slave, to be deducted, but must cause the payment of the 100 aurei, i. e. of the whole value of the peculium, to be made to the plaintiff; and the reason, assigned for this by Theophilus, is the following: et, cum ita se res habeat, non potest vicarius, cujus æstimatione peculium augetur, et ipse illud minuere, eo nomine, quod sibi aliquid debeatur; ne eadem persona duas contrarias habere functiones videatur, ut simul et augeant et minuat peculium. h. t. Harris.

§ 7. De senatus-consulto Macedoniano, p. 353.

Senatus-consultum Macedonianum.] This decree was called Macedonian from Macedo, the name of the person, who gave rise to it; but, whether this Macedo was a young patrician under the power of his father, or an old usurer, the learned commentators are in very great doubt; and they are even far from being unanimous, as to the time when this decree was first made. But it is certain, that the emperor Claudius published a law, by which, to use the words of Tacitus, he restrained the cruelty of creditors; Servitiam creditorum coercuit; ne in mortem parentum pecunias filiis-familiarum fœnori darent. Tac. lib. 11. annalium. And this law is conjectured to have been the Macedonian Senatus consultum; which, in order to reconcile the two historians, Tacitus and Suetonius, is supposed by some to have grown obsolete in the reign of Nero, and afterwards to have been revived by Vespasian; for Suetonius writes as follows in the life of that emperor, viz. Auctor senatui fuit Vespasianus decernendi, ne filiorum-fam. fœneratoribus exigendi crediti jus unquam esset, hoc est, ne post patris quidem mortem. Those, who have time and inclination to read more upon this subject, are referred to the Syntagma of Heinneccius, lib. 4. t. 7. but particularly to Peter Faber's Semestrium, lib. 1. cap. 25. Hatch*, 9 Vez. junr. 232. a strong case in point of time, for 24 years had elapsed. See also as to time elapsed, Randall v. Eunnington, 10 Vez. 423.

Analagous to these, are the cases of sales made by trustees and purchasers for themselves: concerning which the doctrine seems nearly settled, that no person, whether guardian, trustee, attorney, solicitor, or assignee interested to sell, can be permitted to buy: Bovey v. Smith, 1 Vern. 60. Whelpdale v. Cookson, 1 Vez. Senr. 9. confirmed in ex pte. James, 8 Vez. junr. 349. Fox v. Macreath, 4 Br. Ch. Ca. 326. 425. Crowe v. Ballard, 3 Br. Ch. Ca. 120. Whichote v. Lawrence, 3 Vez. junr. 750. (the rule somewhat narrowed). Lord Hardwicke v. Vernon, 4 Vez. 411. In Campbell v. Walker, 5 Vez. 680. Sir W. Grant, M. R. lays down the rule, that a trustee so purchasing, purchases under the liability of the sale being set aside by cestui que trust. It would be better to stick to Lord Thurlow's rule in Crowe v. Ballard, a person employed to sell, should not be permitted to buy even with knowledge of the party selling. Though Sir W. Grant, denies there ever was such a rule. In ex pte. Reynolds, 5 Vez. 707. assignees of a bankruptcy were discharged, because one with knowledge of the other purchased at auction, part of the bankrupt's estate.

The estates were directed to be resold, expte Lacey, 6 Vez. 25. Ex pte. Hughes, lb. 617. Lister v. Lister, lb. 631.

So purchase of a bankrupt's estate by the solicitor to the commission, set aside ex pte. James, 8 Vez. 343. wherein the Chancellor [ *645 ] goes *far to confirm Thurlow's position. See also Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Vez. 247. Expte. Bennet, 10 Vez. 393. Morse v. Royal, 12 Vez. 364. and Wright v. Proud, 13 Vez. 108. Sugd L. Ven. and Fur. 331 to 367. In Campbell v. Walker, 5 Vez. 681. Sir W. Grant, M. R. who seems inclined somewhat to relax the rule, says "the only thing a trustee can do to protect his purchase, is, if he sees it is absolutely necessary the estate should be sold, and he is ready to give more than any one else, that a bill should be filed, and he should apply to the court to become a purchaser." This may be convenient occasionally; still Lord Thurlow's rule is the best upon the whole. It closes at once, all the doors against fraud.

So trustee whether sole or joint cannot be receiver, — v. Tolland, 8 Vez. 72.

The general principle of the Macedonian decree, viz. the protecting from fraud, those who by reason of inexperience, or want of knowledge, are unable sufficiently to protect themselves, has also been adopted in other cases in England. Cleveland v. Osmond, 3 P. Wms. 129. Griffin

v. Devenille, cited 3 P. Wms. 131. Bridgeman v. Green, 2 Vez. 627. Nantes v. Currock, 9 Vez. 182.

So in cases of attorney and client, any undue advantage of superior knowledge, confidence reposed, or fear excited, will be suppressed. Walmsley v. Booth, 2 Atk. 25. 27. Draper's company v. Davis, 2 Atk. 294. Saunderson v. Glass, 1b. 295. Newman v. Payne, 2 Vez. Jun. 199. Middleton v. Wills, 4 Br. Par. Ca. 245. Gibson v. Jayes, 6 Vez. 266. *Beaumont v. All these cases relate to the continuance of the relationship between attorney and client: otherwise they do not apply; Oldham v. Hand, 2 Vez. 259. The practices of administrators in this state, render the application of these cases, too often necessary.

Tit. VIII. De noxalibus actionibus, p. 354.

Ex maleficiis servorum.] The action noxalis, which lies against masters for the crimes of their servants, was always unknown in England; for even villeins, before the tenures in villenage were abolished, might have been conveyed for their own crimes. Cow. inst. l. 4. t. 8. But there is something in the law of England similar to a noxal action, in regard to animals and things inanimate, by which the death of a man is occasioned; for if a vicious horse, or bull, or a cart drawn by horses or oxen, occasions the death of any person, the thing or animal, which did the mischief, becomes, as it were, sacred, and is called a Deodand; *(i. e. a thing given to God;) because it was sold in [ *646 ] ancient times by the king's almoner, who distributed the money to pious uses. But, in regard to Deodands, the law makes many distinctions; e. g. if a ship or boat is laden with merchandise, and a man is killed or drowned by the motion, yet the merchandise are no Deodand, though the accident happened in fresh water: but if any particular merchandise fall upon a man, and kills him, that merchandise shall be Deodand, but not the ship.—See Hale's Hist. of the pl. of the Crown. De eadem re concurrentes.] The same doctrine is delivered by Ulpian, ff. 44. t. 7. l. 60. ff. 50. t. 17. l. 130. which doctrine we must understand to regard penal actions, concurring on account of the same thing, but yet arising from different facts and offences; as for instance, if a man steals a slave, and afterwards murders him, such a criminal may be doubly prosecuted, for theft and injurious damage; for as the actions of theft and injurious damage would arise in this case from different offences, the one will not bar the other: but, on the contrary, if two penal actions, concurring on account of the same thing, should arise from the same offence, the one would destroy the other; and therefore the plaintiff must make his election. But the oath seems afterwards to have fallen into desuetude, and to have been only revived by the constitution referred to; part of which is conceived in the following terms. Actor quidem jurat, NON CALUMNIANDI ANIMO LITEM SE MOVISSE SED ÆSTIMANDO BONAM CAUSAM HABERE.

Pennsylvania, to the infinite disgrace of her jurisprudence, makes no difference between a debtor on account of crime, and a debtor on account of contract: under the insolvent laws, a convicted criminal is permitted to defraud the officers of court of their fees; and though in jail for damages given for the most atrocious injuries to person or character, this is no bar to his deliverance. Under the practice of the insolvent laws of this state, they appear to be enacted for the protection of criminals, and swindlers, as the favourites of the legislature: and this, under the notion, that all imprisonment on account of pecuniary obligation, is contrary to the mild character required in the laws of a democracy.

But, if one lord encroaches upon another, and will not agree to a perambulation, the party aggrieved shall have the writ rationalibus divis against the other. vid. Terms de la ley, and Fitzherbert's nat. brev. p. 303. 809. In England the stated judgment for high treason, in all cases except counterfeiting the coin, is, that the offender shall be drawn to the place of execution, and there hanged by the neck and cut down alive; that his entrails shall be taken out and burned, his head cut off, his body quartered, and his head and quarters put up, where the king shall direct. The judgment in the case of a woman is, "that she shall be drawn and burned."

In this judgment is implied, the forfeiture of all the offender's manors, lands, tenements, and hereditaments: his wife loses her dower: his children become base and ignoble: he loses his posterity; for his blood is stained and corrupted. All his goods and chattels are likewise forfeited. 3 Co. Inst. 200, 211. Strahan's Domat. supp. Hale's pl. of the crown, 268. Harris.

Gladio punit.] In England, and most other countries at this day, adulterers are punished by fine.

Cum masculis nefandum libidinem.] The crime here meant is buggery or sodomy; under which words all unnatural carnal copulations are to be understood. The ancient English lawyers all agree, that it ought to be punished with death, ultimo supplicio; though they differ, as to the manner of inflicting it. Britton say, that Sodomites and miscreants shall be burned:—Fleta writes, that they shall be buried alive; pecorantes et sodomitæ in terra vivi confodiantur—The author of the mirror also delivers himself much to the same purpose; and adds, that Sodomie est crime de majestie vers le roy celester. At this day by 25 Hen. 8. cap. 6. and 5 Eliz. 17. the committees of this crime, whether male or female, are no otherwise punishable, than as common felons, who are denied the benefit of the clergy. 3 Co. Inst. cap. 10. Hawk. pl. of the crown, lib. 1 cap. 4. But it was doubted by some of the judges in the 4th year of Geo. 1. (though with little reason according to Fortescue) whether a man, indicted for buggery with a woman, could legally be convicted upon the above mentioned statute of 25 H. 8. See the King v. Wiseman, Fortescue's Repts. 91. Harris.

See the notes of 8 Gibb. R. Hist. 19.

Peel*, 5 East, 45. it was decided, that a father could not have per quod servitium amisit, if his daughter, though a minor lived at the time of the seduction in another person's family but returned to her father who maintained her. This is something like a sacrifice of justice to form.

§ 5. Lex Cornelia de sicariis, p. 387. vid. ff. 48. t. 8. ad legem Corneliam de sicariis et veneficis.

Venefici capite damnatur.] In England, all persons suspected of conjuration, witchcraft, or enchantments, were anciently cited into the spiritual courts, where, if they were found guilty, sentence was pronounced; upon which the aid of the secular power was demanded by the ecclesiastical judge, and the supposed delinquents were burned, as heretics, by virtue of the writ de hæretico comburendo; which was taken away by the 29th of Charles the 2d, cap. 9. Vid. 3 Co. Inst. 44, 45.

Thus the ecclesiastical judges had the entire jurisdiction in respect to sorceries and enchantments, which were all ranked under the general term heresies, till the statute of the 33 H. 8. which was the first statute, by which any of these offences were made felony: but this act was repealed by the 1st. of Edward VI. cap. 12.

Conjuration and the invocation of wicked spirits were afterwards made felony by 5 Eliz. cap. 16. And again, by a statute in the first year of James the first, by which the 5th of Eliz. is repealed.

The 1st of Jac. 1. cap. 12. is to the following purport.

“That the act of 5 Eliz. against conjurations, inchantments, and “witchcrafts, be utterly repealed—That if any person or “persons *shall use, practice, or exercise any invocation or [ *652 ] “conjuration of any evil and wicked spirit; or shall consult, “covenant with, entertain, employ, feed or reward any evil and wicked “spirit, to and for any intent or purpose;—or take up any dead man, “woman or child, out of his, her, or their grave, or any other place, “where the dead body resteth, or the skin, bone, or any other part of “any dead person, to be employed in any manner of witchcraft, inchant-“ment, charm or sorcery, whereby any person shall be killed, destroy“ed, wasted, consumed, pined or lamed in his or her body, or any part “thereof; that then every such offender, or offenders, their aiders, “abettors, and counsellors being guilty of any of the said offences, duly “and lawfully convicted, shall suffer pains of death, as a felon or felons, “and shall lose the benefit of clergy and sanctuary.

“And further, to the intent that all manner of practice, use or exer“cise of witchcraft, inchantment, charm or sorcery, should be from “henceforth utterly abolished, be it enacted, that, if any person or per“sons, shall from and after the feast of St Michael next coming, take “upon him or them by witchcraft, inchantment, charm or sorcery, to “tell or declare in what place any treasure might be found, or where “goods, or things lost or stolen, should be found, or to the intent to pro“voke any person to unlawful love; or whereby any cattle or goods of “any person, shall be destroyed, wasted or impaired; or to hurt or de“stroy any person in his or her body, although the same be not effected;
 “that then all persons, so offending, and being convicted, shall suffer a “year’s imprisonment, and stand in the pillory once every quarter for “six hours, and there openly confess his or her error, and offence.” The second offence is felony. 1 Jac. 1. cap. 12.

Lord Coke hath written a learned comment upon this statute, in which he declares, that it would be a very great defect in government, to suffer so great an abomination, as conjuration, witchcraft, and sorcery, to pass with impunity, 3 Inst. 44.

But the tendency of the statute of the 1st of James the 1st, may best appear from the cheats, perjuries, and various other mischiefs, which it produced, to the ruin of many innocent persons; all which are but too well known to require any particular mention. Vid Mather's Hist. of New England; and Salmon's Universal Traveller. vol. II. p. 695. This act nevertheless continued to be a scandal and reproach to the good sense of the nation, till the 9th year of George the 2d, when it was enacted by parliament—"That the statute, made in the first year of king James

"the first, intituled, An act against conjuration, witchcraft, and dealing with evil and wicked spirits, shall be repealed and utterly [ *653 ] "void, except so much as repeals the statute of the 5th of "Elizabeth, intituled an act against conjuration, &c. &c.—

"that an act passed in Scotland, in the ninth parliament of Queen Mary, intituled Anentis witchcrafts, shall be repealed—and that from the 24th of June no prosecution, suit or proceeding, shall be carried on against any person for witchcraft, sorcery, incantment, or conjuration, or for charging another with any such offence, in any court whatsoever in Great Britain—but that any person, pretending to exercise witchcraft, tell fortunes, or discover stolen goods, shall suffer imprisonment for one whole year, stand in the pillory once every quarter for an hour; and if the court shall think proper, be obliged to give sureties to behave well for the future." 9 Geo. 2. Harris.

Thus far Harris: to whose note add Cod. 9. 18. Those who desire further information on the practical comments that have taken place, on that notable passage in the old Testament, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live," may consult Sir James Melville's memoirs as to the examination of the witches before James 6th of Scotland: the trial of Amy Duny and Rose Cullender, widows, both of Leystoff, in Suffolk, before Sir Matthew Hale, on the 10th of March, 16th Ch. 2nd. at Bury St. Edmunds, where says the account, "in conclusion, the judge and all the court were fully satisfied with the verdict, and thereupon gave judgment against the witches that they should be hanged. They were much urged to confess, but would not: on the 17th of March following, they were executed;" much to the credit of Sir Matthew Hale! See also the statements which Ch. *§ 11. De ambitu, p. 391.

Lex Julia de ambitu.] Vid. ff. 48. t. 14.

The crime, which the Romans call ambitus, is committed by procuring any public office with money, or other gifts; and it seems to be the same offence in regard to temporal offices, as simony is in regard to spiritual preferment. Decret. Greg. ix. Lib. 5. t. 3.

But ambitus, or the buying and selling of offices, ceased to be criminal, and became common among the Romans, soon after the demolition of the republic; and this practice continued, till Justinian, becoming sensible of its evil tendency, enforced the ancient laws in order to restrain it. Nov. 8. cap. 1. 7.

In France, judicial offices are publicly set to sale, and generally sold to the highest bidder; and perhaps, as Tinney observes, there may be less reason to prohibit this species of commerce in a monarchy, than in a democracy.

But in England the statute of the 5th and 6th of Edw. VI. restrains "all persons, under pain of forfeiture and disability for the future, from "buying certain offices, which concern the king's revenue, and the execution of justice." And under these offices not only that of the chancellor of a diocese is comprehended, but also that of a commissary and register; for it was resolved in the case of doctor Trevor, the chancellor of a diocese in Wales, that both the offices of chancellor, and register, are within the statute, because they concern the administration of justice. 3 Co. Inst. 148. 12 Co. Rep. 78, 79. 3 Lev. 289. Woodward v. Fox. Harris.

Lex Julia repetundarum.] This law forbids all persons in public offices to take money or presents, either for administering justice, or committing injustice. Lex Julia repetundarum [pecuniarum] tenetur, qui, cum aliquam potestem haberet, pecuniam ob judicandum decernendumve acceperit. ff. 48. t. 11.

Fortescue, on the laws of England, declares "bribery to be a great "misprision, which is committed, when any man in a judicial place, takes any fee or pension, robe or livery, gift, reward or brocage of any person who hath to do with him in any way, for doing his office, or by color of his office, but of the king only, unless it be of meat and drink, and that of small value. cap. 51." 3 Co. Inst. 145. Harris.

De anona]. The crime fraudatæ anonæ is that of abusing the markets, by raising the price of provisions, forestalling, monopolizing, &c.

This offence is punishable in England by imprisonment and forfeiture of the goods or merehandize forestalled. See 25 Ed. 3. cap. 3. 2 Ric. 2. cap. 2. 27 Ed. 3. cap. 11. 5, 6 Edw. 6. cap. 14. 3 Co. Inst. p. 195.

**De residuiis*.] Crimen residui is committed by retaining [ *655 ] the public money, or converting it to other uses than those to which it was appropriated. Lege Julia de residuis tenetur, qui publicam pecuniam delegatam in usum aliquem retinuit, neque in eum consumpsit. ff. 48. t. 13. Harris.

APPENDIX II.

FROM BEAVER'S TRANSLATION OF FERRIER'S HISTORY—Page 166.

OF THE QUOTATIONS AND ABBREVIATIONS.

As it is necessary in the first place, to know how to make use of the quotations which we meet with in the books of the civil law ; and to find out the several laws quoted by authors ; I thought it my business to lay down some rules for that purpose.

The body of the civil law, as we said before, is composed of four parts, the digest, code, institutes and novels.

The laws of the digest, are generally quoted by the first word, and number of the law ; for instance, Dege si quis tertia Digestis de jure codicillorum ; sometimes the number only, or the first word of the law from whence the quotation is taken, is set down.

When a law is divided into several paragraphs, after the number of the law, that of the paragraph, or the first word of it, is set down ; for example, Lege 32. § 11. Digestis de donationibus inter virum et uxorem.

Sometimes a law of a title in the digest, is quoted by the first word only, with the title, without mentioning whether it be out of the digest or code ; and in that case, it is an indication that the law quoted is in the collection before spoken of ; that is, in the digest or code, according as they were before mentioned.

The laws of the code are quoted after the same manner as those of the digest.

The paragraphs of the institutes, are quoted after the same manner as the laws of the digest or code ; thus a paragraph of the institutes is quoted, by shewing the number, and mentioning the first word of the paragraph, or by either ; but the title under which the paragraph is, must always be mentioned, as thus, paragrapho testes 14. Institutionibus, or else apud Justinianum de testamentis ordinandis.

The novels are quoted by their number, with that of the chapter and the paragraph : For example, Novella Justiniani, 185. Capite 2. Paragrapho 4. or else a Novel is quoted by the Collation, and by the Title, chapter and paragraph, after this manner, in Authentico, Collatione, 1. Titulo 1. Cap. 281.

As to the Authenticks, they are quoted by the first words of them, after which is set down the title of the code under which they are placed ; for example, Authentica cum testator, Codice ad legem falcidiam.

This being laid down, let us now see how we shall go about to find out a quotation in the body of the law.

If the passage quoted is taken from the digest or the code, it will be best for beginners to turn to the alphabetical table of the titles, at the beginning of the body of the law ; where having found the title mentioned in the quotation, they must then look in it for the law ; by the number of first word.

If the quotation is taken from the Institutes, they must likewise have recourse to the table of titles; and after having found the book in which it is, look after it there, and then the paragraph which is quoted.

If we would find out a Novel, there is nothing more to be done, than to look after it by the number it is under.

If it be an Authentick, we must look in the table of the Code, for the title under which it is placed: It is so much the more easily found, because all the Authenticks are inserted in the Code in a different letter.

To conclude, as those who have a mind to look after any law, waste a great deal of time in turning over the table or index, they may save themselves that trouble, by rendering the titles of the body of the law familiar, and getting them by heart, by which means, they will acquire a general notion of the places where every particular matter is treated of, and without the least difficulty, be able to find out any law they have occasion to consult.

To complete these instructions for young students how to find out the quotations in our books, it remains only that I explain the abbreviations.

The edition of J. Gothofred, in the book above cited, Quatuor fontes, &c. is in the most esteem.

Autores et fragmenta veterum jurisconsultorum, de origine et progressu juris romani, cum notis Arnoldi Vinnii et variorum. Ex edit. Sim. Van Leewen, Leyden, 1671. Jena, 1697. 8vo.

Jurisprudentia vetus ante Justiniana. Ex recens. et cum not. Schultingii. Leyden, 1717. Leipsic, 1737. qto. This comprehends the fragments of Gaius, Paulus, Ulpian, and other jurisconsults preceding Justinian.

J. Gothofredus. Codex Theodosianus, cum amplissimo commentario, studio Antonii Marvili. Leyden, 1665. 6 vol: fol.

SECONDLY. Historical treatises on Roman Jurisprudence generally.

J. Gothofredi. Manuale juris 12mo. Several editions.

Jo. Vin. Gravina. Origines juris civilis, seu de ortu et progressu juris civilis. With the annotations of Mascou. Leipsic, 1737. qto. Ven. 1739 to 4.

Hen. Chr. Hausotter. Historia legum romanarum. Leipsic. 1758. 8vo.

Jo. Goll. Heineccius. Antiquitatum romanarum jurisprudentiam illustrantium Syntagma. This is comprehended in the Geneva edition of his works in 8 vols. qto. 1743 and 1748. But there are also several separate editions; the best at Strasburg (Argentor.) in 1734, 1741, and in 2 vol. 8vo. 1755.

Ejusdem historia juris civilis, 8vo the best edition is Ritter's, published at Strasburgh. This and the preceding treatise form the fourth volume of his works, in qto.

Buocharde Gotthelf Struvius. Historia juris romani, 4to. Jena, 1718.

Jo. Fr. Eisenhardt. Historia juris literaria. 8vo. Helmstadt. 1752, 1763.

Jo. Donatii. Historia juris civilis romanorum. Paris, 1678. 12mo.

Spanheim. Orbis Romanus.

Thomasius. Delineatio historiæ juris Romani et Germanici. Erfurt. 8vo. 1750. Nævorum jurisprudentiæ romanæ, lib. duo. Hal. Magd. 1707.

Brunquellus. Historia juris Romano-Germanici. 8vo. Amstel. 1730. Gravina, Heineccius, Struvius and Brunquellus, may be considered as the best of this class of writers.

Histoire du droit romain par Claude Joseph de Ferriere. 12 mo. Paris, 1718. This is taken chiefly from Gravina. Dr. Beaver has translated it, and added Duck's treatise de usu et auctoritate juris civilis.

This has been edited in English by Strahan ; and is the book generally used in England on this subject ; though Wood's Institutes of the civil law (fol.) is a very useful digest upon the whole.

Ayliffe's Pandect of the Roman civil law, fol. 1734, is a work not deficient in learning, but too desultory and short.

Inconvenient brevity, also renders the following works of less value than they might be, though they are not destitute of merit.

Schomberg's Elements of the Roman Law. 8vo. 1780.

Dr. Halifax's Analysis of the civil law, a pamphlet. 1775.

Dr. Arthur Brown's Elements of the civil and Admiralty law ; Dublin, and London, 1802, is commonly used among the bar in this country, and therefore I have purposely omitted many observations, that may be found also in that book ; which though far too brief, deserves to be popular.
